GLEANINGS OF THE PAST WEEK.

A Mixture of Politics, Religion and Business.

Miss Gladys Jefferies is instructing a class in penmanship.

The new county offices are to be connected with the telephone system.

The county records were moved into the new offices at Boyne City on Tuesday.

Mrs. Henry Barth returned Monday from her trip to her old home in Germany.

G. W. Beaman and wife returned yesterday from Williamston, Ingham county.

Orlando Blair is unquestionably the best man on either ticket for register of deeds.

The W. C. T. U. meets at Jefferies Hall on Friday afternoon at 2 20 o'clock. All are invited.

Will Stevens left Sunday on the Express for Chicago to buy horses to add to their livery stock.

Leslie Giddings is rather stiff-necked for an independent, but will not be so when his boil gets well.

Young men should rally to the support of Mr. Weaver for treasurer. He is the best man for the office.

Don't forget that Joseph M. Clark of Charlevoix, is the democratic nominee for circuit court commissioner.

The Boyne Citizen announces that Z. N. Gurbet is an independent republican candidate for prosecuting attorney.

Rev. C. F. VanAuken, formerly of this place, will preach at the Congregational church next Sunday morning at 10.30 o'clock.

Orlando Blair's record as county treasurer is a sufficient guarantee that he will make a competent, careful register of deeds.

The people will find in E. H. Shepard a thorough prosecuting attorney, a reliable representative of their interests, and a faithful leader.

There will be a chicken pie social at the house of Mr. Anderson in Barnard, on Friday evening, Oct. 26. Supper 25cts. Proceeds to be applied on preacher's salary. Everybody is invited to come.

Two mails a day commenced Monday and we can now read Grand Rapids and Chicago papers the same day they are printed. As this was secured under a democratic administration politicians are at liberty to use it.

☞ Ayer's Pills, being convenient, efficacious, and safe, are the best cathartic for adults, and, as we see, in every country. For constipation, sick headache, indigestion, and torpid liver, they are invaluable. Try a box of them; they are sugar-coated.

The Charlevoix band is being reorganized, and has ordered a number of new instruments. An attempt will be made to place it in the van of northern Michigan bands. We hope the boys are receiving instructions from Mr. Frank McGibney, two lessons a week.

We desire to congratulate the better element of the Democratic party on the fact that the Sentinel has bolted the nomination of W. A. Norton for representative. It is evident it is too well known in this county to need any further comment by this paper.

A smart Georgia girl recently sent the New York Weekly Star enough subscriptions to net her $100 in commissions, all within three weeks and without leaving home or incurring a penny of expense. And yet they say that the avenues of profitable employment are closed to our women.

The small plurality of 3,308 that Blaine had in Michigan four years ago, when he carried the upper peninsula by nearly 8,000, will be wiped out this year and the entire union ticket will be elected. The upper peninsula will go against the republican ticket this year and has good every a majority of the votes south of the straits. Clean out the capitol and reform.

While our republican friends are denouncing the Mills bill as a sectional measure, favoring the abolition of the tariff on sugar is not greater, will they also state the which truth, and show that the reduction made falls on the southern planter, while the protection of the northern manufacture remains the same. Is there anything sectional in this? If so, who is the gain benefit,—the southern planter or the northern manufacturer?

A telegram last Friday announced the death of Mrs. Dodd at Milton, N. C. A few weeks ago he left Charlevoix suffering with consumption, and hoped to get relief in that southern climate, but gradually failed until death overtook him. He leaves a wife, brother and sister to mourn. He was buried there. He was for a number of years a compositor in the Sentinel office, and for the last four years had worked in Chicago.

Workingmen, democrats, how do you like this insult? The Sentinel says "Mr. Nicholls has fallen from his high estate to the plebeian level of a communistic democrat," because he was once a republican and is now a democrat. Because he associates with and represents common people, he has fallen. This is an admission by the official republican organ that the republican party is the aristocratic party.

Mrs. A. D. Cruickshank returned from Howell yesterday with the remains of her young son who died in California seven years ago, and the same has been interred in the Charlevoix cemetery. At the time of death the body was embalmed, and placed in a sealed casked, and on removing the casket lids over the glass this week, it was observed that the features had not changed at all, but were as natural and perfect as when buried seven years ago.

United States senators are to be elected next winter in 27 states. The following states whose terms expire are democratic: Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Jersey, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and West Virginia. The following are republican: Colorado, Kansas, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Oregon and Rhode Island. Virginia is independent.

The republicans are circulating reports that Mr. Ben Weaver cannot give bonds in case of his election as county treasurer. We can say to all such that Mr. Weaver's bonds are already arranged for, and are as good men financially and otherwise as are in the county and abundantly able to justify for the amount required. Don't push Ben aside for that. The county can never lose a dollar on that account. Give him your work and your vote, and maintain the excellent record of the democratic administration of the county finances.

For judge of probate no better choice could have been made than that of Milton M. Burnham. He has taken off his coat to win, and to help the entire ticket, both of which he will do. He is popular, because he is fair and generous. He does not abuse men because they differ with him politically, but concedes to all the right to think and act as their conscience dictates. He denounces no man as "renegade" who happens to change his political sentiments, and makes no unkind attacks upon his opponents.

Under the head of "Railroad Rumors" the Grand Rapids Tradesman says: "One of the largest undertakings of the season will be begun in a few days, if report is true, when N. to Kalkaska, to connect with the line now constructed between Charlevoix and Kalkaska. The current purchase of extensive dockage properties at St. Ignace by the Mill ten management plainly foreshadows the establishment of a line of boats between Chicago and Mackinaw, enabling the D. L. & N. to compete for the traffic of the upper peninsula, which is destined to become very extensive."

Saving Thousands of Years.

It is interesting to try and figure the actual extent of the benefit to humanity from modern improvements—advantages and conveniences which we take for granted in question. Does rapid transit, for instance, really save any great amount of valuable time?

Take a city like New York, where there are about 1,000,000 people who go each day to and from their work. Reckoning the distance traveled by some, it will surely be within limits to suppose that five minutes, on the average, is saved on each journey by the various means of rapid transit of which most of the people avail. This would make an hour on the twelve weekly journeys, and fifty-two hours, or say five working days, in a year.

For 250,000 people this means a yearly saving of 1,250,000 working days, or, reckoning 300 working days to the year, an annual economy of 4,166 years.

Time is money and these are significant figures.—Golden Argosy.

Those Forgotten.

When some one told William Haslett that a certain English work had been translated into German, he said that it ought to be translated into English." A similar suggestion might be offered in regard to the forged extracts from Lincoln's speeches, which have been the paramour of late with such frequency in Republican tariff organs.—St. Paul Globe.

He Trusted Blaine Too Well.

The Chicago Republican poet wrote some exciting verses beginning "Have you forgotten the election—hard about the Maine election?" has retired from the campaign vocabulary forever. His Pegasus took a severe and fatal colic just after the final figures got in.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Card.

At the request of many friends irrespective of party, I have consented to run as an independent candidate for the state legislature for the Charlevoix representative district, and respectfully solicit the suffrages of all.

THE SENTINEL AGAIN.

MR. NICHOLLS STILL ON TOP.

The "Little Star" Also Brought Into Notice.

Mr. Editor.—I trust your readers will pardon me for again obtruding upon their notice the silly trash contained in an editorial and the communication signed "*" in the Sentinel of the 17th, but as there seems to be a semblance of sense in a few of its paragraphs it is not entirely improper to call attention to them.

If there is anything at all in the editorial it is that I was "educated in the Cobden school of political economy," that I am "intensely partisan," "you English in my tendencies and sympathies" and un-American.

Now let us see. As to partisanship, I do not belong to any party and have not belonged to any for many years past, and never voted a straight democratic ticket in my life. I voted for Garfield and am but heartily glad that I did, and hope to be spared to vote for him again, for he has proved himself to be, and, I doubt not, will continue to prove to be a good public officer.

I do not believe in the doctrine preached in the republican platform, that the taxes should be removed from whiskey and tobacco and retained on clothing and other necessaries of life. And I do not believe that the poor man's clothing should be taxed at a rate twice as high as the rich man's, as it now is.

I was not educated in the Cobden school, but in the opposite of it. And as to my being pro-English and un-American, there will be differences of opinion as to what that means. About a dozen years of my life is before this community, and a great slice of the editor's is also before it. He doubtless considers himself a tip top good citizen,—not at all pro-English,—not at all un-American. Now I shrink from a comparison with him! Don't laugh, dear reader.

Perhaps if I had been suspected of burning the court house and public records of this county, yet had at the same time allied myself with the republican and worked for the interests of the monopolists, I should have received the praise and the confidence of the editor of the Sentinel, and should not have been styled un-American. I say there will be differences of opinion as to what good American citizenship consists of, and I doubt if the editor's opinion upon that subject in this region will be considered of much value. I shall not, of course, trouble your readers with my sense about Mare Anthony and Aristides.

So much for the editorial.

And this brings me to the worse part of the little trash the correspondent "*" who says he is all brokn up in mind, poor fellow, we know it over the sad fate of "poor Cutcheon." "PoorCutcheon" indeed! He has to be championed by such silliness as the Sentinel has issued in his behalf. Gen. Cutcheon is our representative in congress and I am glad to believe is far too good and too able a man too need such champions.

But I cannot in any other way than by quotation give your readers an idea of the foolishness of this correspondent. See this

"John knew that Cutcheon was mistaken when he said that a majority of the committee that framed the Mills bill were southerners. I am sorry that John did not tell us how many of them were from the northern states. John would not get off any bad "chestnuts," not even in relation to salt; that there are purposes for which we must have English salt. At the same time John must know that the Michigan salt trust (headquarters in Chicago) has a standing offer of $3,000 to any one who will demonstrate the fact that for any purpose their salt is not equal to any in the market. John could do it and take the money, but then, you know, he would not recognize a trust in any way for a paltry three thousand."

Now this is a whole paragraph, and you will think with me that it is a dosey, yet this is one of the few lines has a semblance of sense in it. The only idea pervading the thing is that the monopolists and the "trusts" must be allowed to tax us with taxes so they please upon the whole people for the benefit of those trusts that are a curse to the nation.

That such a reward has been offered may be true or not, (and the correspondent's assertion of its truthfulness ought to satisfy and improve its quality in that respect in the least) is of no consequence, for we may grant it to be true. What then? This salt trust offers to prove that their salt is as good as anybody's salt, and from therefore forth John must continue to be taxed from 40 to 60 per cent. That all persons who use salt do not consider it as good for all purposes is proven by the fact that importations have steadily increased although our salt is not above half its old price and in many localities can be had at less price than the foreign. You will notice the "little star" says "English salt;" the poor fellow evidently does not know that we get it from many other countries.

But the "little star" is cunning—of course; cunning is said to be one of the weapons of the weak-minded. He has shifted the ground of the complaint I made in regard to Gen. Cutcheon's speech. The General, like all the monopolist speakers, spoke of the sectionalism of the Mills bill and among other things named the placing of salt on the free list for the benefit of the south in proof of it. In answer to that I stated the fact that the state of New York alone (that produces more salt than any other state in the union excepting this) imports 50 per cent more salt than all the southern states combined. The "little star" replies to this that the salt trust offers to prove their salt to be as good as anybody's. And the poor fellow thinks his reply is quite to the point.

The next paragraph may be dismissed by saying that what he says as to Mr. Havemeyer being before the committee that framed the Mills bill is not true. Nor is it true, as he says, that the duty on sugar was restored. But suppose it were true Mr. Havemeyer and his refineries are northern, not southern. What does he become of the charge that the Mills bill is designed to favor southern interests?

Here is a part of the next paragraph: "I believe John intended to be fair, now, since the tariff was raised, the price of steel rails has increased from from $100 per ton to about $30 per ton, and the prices on the other articles named "increased" in the same way. It only slipped his mind; John seems to have a poor memory.

Now what is blessing the tariff is to bring steel rails "from over $100 per ton to about $30 per ton." But tre trade has brought them to $15 per ton less. Is not that a greater blessing? He might as well, however have claimed that the tariff put coal and iron and copper in the bowels of the earth, and put the rich soil on our prairies, and caused our noble forests to grow, as to set up the claim that he does, but then quite likely he does think the tariff did all that and much more than that.

Only one more quotation and this is a beauty:

"But the thing that brings the tear to John's eye is the wrong suffered by our old mother England. Why only think of it. Last year we sold to her $200,000,000 more than we bought from her. I believe that in connection with this he meant to tell us that that fact was an argument in favor of the American system. Only being a whole-truth man he thought to make a point by referring to the millions bought at the same time by us from France, Germany, China and Japan, Brazil and Cuba, Switzerland and Italy, and dozens of other nations, forgetting to say that all the countries named, but one, were tariff countries, and that in fact all the countries named, but one, were tariff countries, and that in fact all the countries named, but one, were tariff countries, and that they are prospering by encouraging home industries."

The "little star" has not the capacity to perceive that "poor old mother England," free trade as she is, is able to pay the debts of the protectionist countries and grow immensely rich at the business, as she has been doing those many years, a hope the poor fellow will remember that it is free trade country—not the protectionist countries—that is able to do that job. Perhaps the old Dole does the job for nothing and people generally don't think so.

The readers of the JOURNAL will pardon me for quoting so many of his stupidities, but then, somebody must furnish him and answer you. And it enables one to present a few facts in regard to the great question that is agitating the country. He, too, like the editor, challenges my loyalty. Wouldn't the "little star" gratify his admiring readers by coming out from under a cloud, and tell what may judge of his fine qualities as an American citizen. His life, however, is a model of purity and and religious fervor. He has held up as an example to the youth of this village and neighborhood. Don't be too modest "little star."

JOHN NICHOLLS.

Why Not?

The Minnesota Democratic convention resolved as follows:

"We hold that the slight reduction of 44 per cent. in the existing 47 per cent. tariff, as proposed by the so called Mills bill, will, when put into practical operation, fully satisfy the people that a greater and more thorough reduction in the same system of taxation can safely be made with permanent benefit to our industrial interests, to the workingmen employed therein and to all the people of our country."

Whereupon the champions of a perpetual war tariff retort: "That is to say, the Minnesota Democrats like the Mills bill because it is a cut, though only a small cut, into the protective system which is ultimately to be cut out of existence. A little cut now. Deeper and longer and wider cuts later on."

Well, why not? If the small cut works well, why should not the people make further cuts later on, when it can "safely be done with permanent benefit to our industrial interests, to the workingmen employed therein and to all the people of the country?"

Do the tariff and trust defenders mean to say that the people will go on "venting deeper and longer and wider" if tariff reduction works to their injury? If so, they take the voters for fools who don't know enough to keep their fingers out of the fire after they have once been burned.

Or do the tariffites mean that the people have no right to cut down taxes even if it operates to their "permanent benefit?" Do the tariff barons and trust lords and their henchmen imagine that they have a vested right in their monopolies?

If so, the election will undeceive them. The Democracy is willing to trust the people, now and hereafter.—New York Sun.

TARIFF IN THE SENATE.

Bills Passed by the House—To Relieve Yellow Fever Sufferers.

The debate on the tariff bill was begun in the Senate the 8th inst., and will occupy several days. The Senate confirmed the following nominations: John H. Oberly, Commissioner of Indian Affairs; L. W. Crouse and C. F. Templeton, Associate Justices of Dakota; E. D. Kenna, Associate Justice of Idaho, Utah, etc. The Senate passed the joint resolution providing for a commission to revise the Washington account books. Among the bills and resolutions passed by the House were the Warner Military Reservation in Kansas; to provide for the disposal of the Fort Ellis military reservation, Neb., a part of Dawes' outlaw bring Gen. Absalom Baird to accept the decoration of the Legion of Honor from France; a bill appropriating $50,000 to establish camps for relief of yellow fever was favorably reported to the House.

THE MORMON CHURCH.

All of It Property Except the Temple Taken from It by the Courts.

The Supreme Court of Utah, after a studiously contested suit, declared the corporation of the Mormon church dissolved and ordered the receiver, who has collected over $1,000,000 in real and personal property, to hold the property until the government information for the forfeiture of the same can be brought to a conclusion. The decision declares all of the personal property of the late corporation to have become escheated to the government. It sets aside the temple block and buildings for the use of the voluntary religious sect now in existence. The defendants have taken the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it will be hotly contested.

THE NEW CHIEF JUSTICE.

The Chicago Jurist Takes the Oath and Is Formally Installed.

The United States Supreme Court in Washington was crowded to witness the inauguration of Chief Justice Fuller, and an hour before the court convened hundreds had been turned away unable to obtain admission. Mrs. Fuller and six of her children were among those present. The ceremony was brief, simple and impressive, and was the eighth ceremony of the kind in the history of the country. Justice Miller conducted the proceedings.

An Indiana Murderer.

At Knightstown, Ind., N. B. Wade murdered his mother and a widow named Martha Cates, set fire to the house, and then took poison, dying after being taken out by the firemen. Wade had illegally appropriated pension money awarded to Mrs. Cates, and as he would have been compelled to make an accounting it is believed that brooding over the matter rendered him insane.

A Scientist's Death.

Dr. Samuel Kneeland, of Boston, a physician, ethnologist, and scientist of wide reputation, died in Germany. He was the author of a number of scientific and contributor to scientific periodicals.

Congressional Nominations.

Utah—John T. Caine (Mormon) renominated.

Louisiana—Third District, R. C. Jolly (Rep.) of Morgan City.

A Judge Egged.

At St. Louis, Judge Lubke, of the Circuit Court, was pelted with rotten eggs by Henry Weigel, a well-known business man, against whom the Judge had rendered a decision in a money matter. Weigel was locked up.

Dead in a Creek.

C. E. Van Pelt, of Lincoln, Neb., who disappeared the other day, was found dead in a shallow creek six miles from home, with his feet imbedded in quicksand.

Burned to Death.

Mabel Boyson, aged 4, was burned to death at Brazil, Ind., by the explosion of a wood-oil can, which an older sister was using while building a fire.

Sparks from the Wires.

The earthquake in South Carolina was followed in Colleton County by fourteen months of drouth. At the expiration of that time a rainy season set in and for five seven days there were only two when it did not rain.

Workingmen have begun demolishing the old United States Court Building on Royal street, New Orleans. This was one of the public buildings turned over by the French at the transfer of Louisiana in 1803, and was occupied as the United States Court House for many years.

Mrs. Garrett Sentenced to Hang.

Mrs. Mary J. Garrett, who was convicted of the murder of her two imbecile stepdaughters, at Cleveland, Ohio, has been sentenced to hang Jan. 24, 1888. Mrs. Garrett, as the evidence showed, killed the girls in the farmhouse and fired the building. She has a 5-weeks-old babe which was born in jail, and it will be taken to the Penitentiary with her until her execution.

Trouble in Chicago.

A strike occurred among the street-car men of Chicago recently, the trouble originating on the North Side. Low pay and long hours the alleged cause. Hundreds of people were affected thereby.

A REMARKABLE GATHERING.

Friends and Relatives of the James Boys Together.

The Samuels homestead, a few miles from Kearney, Mo., was recently the scene of a remarkable gathering. Mrs. Caroline G. Quantrell, mother of the celebrated guerrilla chief, called on Mrs. Samuels, mother of the James boys, and the two old ladies had a hysterical time of it in talking over the past. Frank James and wife were up from Dallas, Tex., to see Mrs. Quantrell, and Mrs. Jesse James, who is living in Kansas City, was present with her son Jesse. Mrs. Quantrell lives in Canal Dover, Ohio, and is 67 years of age. Her son William was born in Canal Dover in 1837 and left for the Missouri border in 1855. She received two letters from him the year after he left home and never heard from him afterwards except through the press. He was well educated and his father was a school-teacher. She recently visited Quantrell's grave at St. Louis and is collecting material for a biography in which she will attempt to show that he was not altogether bad. The old house is picturesquely located and is surrounded with trees and vines. In one corner of the yard is a mound covered with flowers and sea-shells. A profusion of forget-me-nots fringe it. The two old ladies visited it many times lately. It is the grave of Jesse James.

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

Nearly All Articles Score Higher Prices and Clearings Increase 10 Per Cent.

Intastic review of trade for last week R. G. Dun & Co. say:

The great wheat speculation was the absorbing feature of the week, for, though the September option closed at a little more than half cent below, it left the market in such a state that much higher prices for other options were easily secured. With December wheat up 1½c at Chicago there came heavy selling, and after rising 1c more than the Chicago price, it fell to Liverpool, and at one time there have paid to ship wheat back from Atlantic ports. New York, for the week, has wheat amounted to 38,462,000 bushels—nearly half the entire crop of the country, and yet prices closed 1½c more than the week previous week. Corn advanced two cents, with sales of 15,000 bushels, and one to ten cents, the speculative fever was felt in other markets, and pork rose $1 a barrel, lard 10c, and hogs 5 cents per 100 pounds. Other cereals have been active, and oats have risen 2c per bushel, while sales of 5,750,000 bushels in cotton there was a slight decline of an eighth, with sales of 78,000 bales. Imports from interior points were uniformly larger than last year, and the movement of wheat at the South, at many Western points the tenor of reports was generally encouraging. There was less complaint as to collections, money was in increasing demand, and the volume of business was larger than last year. At New York the bank clearings showed a gain of 31½ per cent, over last week. While the number of failures was large, the amount of liabilities by the third quarter of the year shows a great decrease—from 8,372,000 last year to 6,211,000 for the quarter just ended. The failures during the week were 351.

BUSINESS FAILURES.

They Aggregate for the Third Quarter of the Year 6,211.

—The business failures throughout the United States for the third quarter of the year, as furnished by R. G. Dun & Co., amount in number to 3,351, with liabilities of a trifle over $22,000,000. The failures for the third quarter of 1887 numbered 1,959, with liabilities aggregating the enormous sum of $73,000,000. For the nine months of 1888 the failures number 7,510, with liabilities of over $90,000,000, as against 6,950 failures and $129,000,000 of liabilities in the same period of 1887. In the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland the failures for the three months just closed number 264, with liabilities of $3,679,000, as against 398 failures and $2,900,000 of liabilities in the same quarter of 1887. In the nine months of 1888 ended with Sept. 30 the Canadian failures number 1,256, with liabilities of $11,262,000, as against 1,017 failures and $13,458,000 of liabilities in the same period of 1887.

DIED ON THE GALLOWS.

A Revolting Scene at Bridgeport, Conn.—A Murderer Hangs.

Philip Pallahan, the Indian who murdered his brother in cold blood the evening of June 22, 1887, suffered the death penalty at Bridgeport, Conn., being the third victim to capital punishment within the history of Fairfield County. Pallahan was 24 years of age, below the medium stature, and possessed a repulsive countenance. The scene on the gallows was sickening. As the condemned man stepped onto the trap he fainted, and his cap fell off. The fall failed to break his neck, and as he slowly strangled to death the convulsions of his face were terrible. Several in the crowd fainted at the sight.

THREE MEN KILLED.

A Serious Collision of Trains on the Baltimore and Ohio Road.

The Cincinnati express out from Washington collided with a freight train near Dickerson, D. C., killing three trainmen and injuring six others. A mile west of Dickerson station the road makes a sharp turn and then goes down a heavy grade in a deep cut, the banks being twenty feet or more above the level of the tracks, and it was in this cut that the collision took place. Several of the trainmen saved themselves by jumping. Two train engines came together with such fearful velocity that they stood locked together on the track and formed a base upon which was piled in confusion a pyramid twenty feet high, consisting of three wrecked freight cars, two express cars, the mail car, and a baggage car. The killed were: Wm. H. Wiley, a postal clerk, of Fairmount, W. Va.; John Casey, postal clerk, of Washington; George Ridenbaugh, brakeman, of Berlin, Md.

THE WHEAT CROP.

Minnesota and Dakota Show a Decrease of 40 Per Cent.

A carefully tabulated statement, giving the actual results of the season's thrashing in eighty-three counties of Minnesota and Dakota, shows a net decrease as compared with last year's crop of 40 per cent., which would make the present wheat crop of Minnesota and Dakota 55,000,000 to 60,000,000 bushels. In the Red River Valley and through the frosted region of Northern Dakota there is not half a crop and the grain is poor in quality, the proportion of No. 1 hard being very small. A large proportion will grade No. 2, while in many localities half will grade rejected. Hundreds of farms have not been harvested at all. Corn is in good condition, with a largely increased acreage, and other crops have turned out well.

IN A NEW ROLE.

Bob Burdette, the Famous Humorist, Licensed to Preach.

The Philadelphia Baptist Association in recent session in Philadelphia, received a letter from Robert Burdette, commonly known as Robert J. Burdette, the humorist, had been licensed to preach the gospel of the church. It is said that Mr. Burdette will leave the field of literature and lecturing and immediately seek a charge.

He was born forty-four years ago in Greensboro, Pa. He lived in Pittsburg from 1855 to 1880, removed to Peoria, Ill., where he received a license of the Baptist church, and in 1881 he settled in the forty-seventh Illinois Infantry, and was with Sherman in his march to the sea. While in the army he was detailed as night editor of the Peoria Transcript. He afterwards edited the Burlington Hawkeye, a great sense of humor, which up to this time he had kept in the background. He came East to the Brooklyn Union and was soon after invited and settled as Henry Ward's alter ego, his time is writing for newspapers and magazines.

THE FLOOD GAVE WAY.

A Bad Accident at Reading, Pa.—One Hundred People Hurt.

During the evening of the corner stone laying of the Polish Catholic Church, at Reading, Pa., fully two thousand men, women, and children were standing on the floor, when it gave way, precipitating several hundred persons to the basement, a distance of fifteen feet. Over one hundred men and women were thrown in a heap, and all were more or less injured, some seriously and others fatally. The wildest excitement, approaching a panic, followed. The accident was caused by the walls spreading.

A BUNDLE OF BONDS STOLEN.

J. W. Coates, of Platt County, Mo., the Victim of a Sneak-Thief.

J. W. Coates, attorney of Platt County, Mo., took $240,000 in new bonds of that county to Jefferson City, to have them registered. The bonds were delivered to him. Mr. Coates placed them in his valise at the hotel in Jefferson City. Then he started for St. Louis, where he intended to dispose of the bonds. Mr. Coates discovered that somebody had stolen the bonds while the nomination of $1,000 each were missing.

FROM PUGET SOUND.

THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST A REGION OF DIVERSIFIED RESOURCES.

The Northwestern Island Sea Through Which the Productions of All the Countries Begin to Ebb and Flow—Tacoma, the Terminus of a Great Continental Railroad and of the Ocean Ferry Between Asia, Alaska, and America.

TACOMA, Wash Ter., Sept. 29, 1888.

Steam and electricity have wrought an entire change in this city. To-day the Pacific coast is more distant from the Atlantic than Western Ohio was a generation ago. Tacoma is only an easier day from New York or Monday is from Saturday. Tacoma is a city of to-day; it scarcely had a yesterday. In 1880 it had 700 population; to-day it has 17,000. Five American cities have had more substantial growth and prosperity, and none can point to a future in full of promise. What is back of Tacoma? the tender and the tried. Its ten years' growth, however, the city's resources are commensurate with the Pacific Northwest—a country which man did not give, and which man cannot take away. Tacoma is the ocean and accessible terminus on Puget Sound, has a perfect harbor on the finest stretch of inland sea water in the world, giving it unsurpassed shipping facilities to foreign countries.

Tacoma has charming scenery; to the north, Commencement Bay, a broad, of sheltered calmness, with ships and steamers in another and widening direction changing in colors to the west, the Olympic Mountains, 7,000 feet high, 100 miles away, while to the east, rising in snowy glacial grandeur, is one of the highest mountains in the world, Mount Tacoma, (sometimes called Rainier), 14,000 feet higher than the city, and 70 miles away, and yet so near that it is a picture of which the eye never tires; views the ever-changing, ever-fascinating, ever-beautiful mistress. Tacoma is healthful, with a climate of which Nature has spared no expense in its adornment.

Tacoma is the terminus and Western headquarters of the Northern Pacific Railway, which has more tributary grade land than all the other transcontinental lines combined, besides having a greater diversity of fruits and products.

Tacoma is the terminus of the new ocean ferry from China and Japan, which touches at mouth of the Sound through which the productions of the orient and of Asia and Europe begin to ebb and flow. Hundreds of miles of inland navigation, with a climate equable and delicious.

Tacoma is hundreds of miles nearer Alaska and Asia than San Francisco.

Tacoma is the shipping point for the great interior and inland empire, which is the pride of all the coast region. He is proud of it, and has good reasons for it, as he sees in Tacoma and Washington Territory as in larger sphere of usefulness, the home of his residents, in their name, at lowest rates, and with the best of laws, which have been enacted by the great, interest and taxes, which are the lowest of any state. Tons of freight are to the last six months have realized over 50 per cent. to the holders of the banks of Tacoma; as to his responsibility, He has a large addition to the city of his own, besides having an extensive sale for of other property, and parties from abroad desiring to invest can do so through an agent advantageously as if present, and confidence is solicited.

Tacoma's expert location is destined to make it the distributing point of the Pacific Northwest. There is careful management of its affairs, and improvements have been carried on without burdening the city with debt, and, consequently, taxes are light.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

WORK OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted On.

The Senate Committee on Epidemic Diseases reported a substitute for the House bill to prevent the importation of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States. The committee by the Senate on the 10th, Senators Jones of Nevada and Gorman opposed to the resolution appropriating $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Treasury Department in the quarantine of yellow fever and in the United States or preventing its spread from one state to another. Senator Gorman said he was not in favor of an appropriation of but four of the amendments proposed by the committee. The principal point of disagreement is on the item authorizing the Surgeon-General to employ such officers, assistants, and other persons as may be necessary, including the employment of a corps of medical officers, and to provide for their transportation and subsistence, and for the purchase of such medicines and other supplies

"A TARIFF is a tax.—Allen G. Thurman.

IT is a condition which confronts us—not a theory.—Grover Cleveland.

"UNNECESSARY taxation is unjust taxation."—President Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

"WE favor the entire repeal of the internal taxes (on whiskey and tobacco) rather than surrender of any part of our protective system."—Chicago platform.

"The platform is in entire harmony with my views."—Ben Harrison.

THE surplus revenue now remaining in the treasury not only furnishes conclusive proof of unjust taxation, but its existence constitutes a separate and independent menace to the prosperity of the people.

The vast accumulation of idle funds represent that much money, drawn from the circulating medium of the country which is needed to the channels of trade and business.—President Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

WE are annually collecting at our custom houses and by means of our internal revenue system many millions in excess of all legitimate public needs. As a consequence there now remains in the national treasury a surplus of more than one hundred and thirty million dollars.

No better evidence could be furnished that the people are exorbitantly taxed.—Grover Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

"A REPUBLICAN STORY."

Geo. Huggett is telling a good story on himself and John Smith, who spoke in a school house a few miles from Charlotte a few nights ago. "John was talking," says Huggett, "and I turned to the chairman and asked him if there were any democrats present."

"Oh yes," replied the chairman, "there are several."

"How many democrats do you think there are here," I queried.

"Why, they are all democrats."

"Well you are a republican sin't you Mr. Chairman?"

"No," was the laconic reply, "never was and never expect to be."

"Well," says Huggett, in relating the incident, "you can imagine my surprise when I found out that there wasn't a republican present and worse than all there was no republican to preside over the meeting."

We know that the republicans were fast leaving their party and joining the democracy, but we didn't know before that the dissatisfaction had become so great as that.

The above from the Charlotte Leader reminds us of a recent schoolhouse meeting in Marion township, where one of the candidates on the republican county ticket was the speaker. At the close of the address a straw vote was taken, and every man in the room was a democrat, save two,—the speaker himself and the driver of the livery team who had taken him there.

But this is not equal to a meeting held over in Wilson, where the chairman of the meeting was a thrifty old Englishman. After the speaker of the evening had labored two hours in an attempt to enlighten his hearers on the multiplicity of benefits supposed to be derived from the present American system of taxation, the chairman, before closing the meeting, took occasion to say that he "really did not understand the question." He had lived in England before she adopted free trade and had heard the same forebodings of evil now indulged in by the republican party; he had lived in England under free trade; and also here in America under our present system. As far as the sufferings of laboring people there was concerned, he believed that they were just as comfortable there as here; had just as much beef steak, bread and vegetables to eat there as here; and obtained them in just as large quantities and just as easily there as here. In fact, in a few minutes talk based on actual experience and observation, the chairman completely knocked out the arguments of the speaker who had labored industriously for two hours.

These are but isolated examples of the situation all over the country. By their platform, the democrats have exposed the cause of the working people, while the republicans have turned their backs on many of the principles so carefully guarded by them during the past. The people who read (and where is a man in this glorious country who does not read, in this age of cheap newspapers) are thinking for themselves. They are comparing the principles of the past with those of the present. They are supporting the same principles of right and justice they have always supported, but they are compelled to look to another party to find them. The party leaders have deserted their old time followers. This is why it is so hard to find a republican in many of these school meetings.

How disheartening it must be to some of the older republicans, who have all these years held up the sins of democracy to the gaze of the younger voters and declared that the republican party was the only great moral party,—that the democratic party was the free whisky party;—to now have to support a free whisky plank in their national platform. If the conditions were reversed, and the democratic party was asking to have the internal tax removed from whisky and tobacco, a howl would go up from every republican speaker all over this land, such as was never before heard. Democrats everywhere would be denounced as whiskyites. Nothing would be too mean to say of them. The occupants of our pulpits would be loud in their denunciation of the principles and the men who advocate them; and would not in a single case attempt a defense of the system as one did recently, and then to justify himself as a minister, in his demand for cheaper whiskey, said it was "a sin for the government to be a partner in the business of manufacturing whiskey." The good people of this country are not so thoroughly wedded to their old party as this man who assumes to lead the people to a better understanding of God and morality. They are not afraid to get up in a school house meeting and say they are opposed to such description of their homes and all that is dear. They are not afraid to openly denounce an avowed determination by party leaders to make free and cheaper the liquid damnation that takes away men's senses, and add one-half to the cost of the clothes on his body. They are reading and studying, and thinking for themselves, and know when these speakers are telling facts and truths, or talking falsehoods and misrepresentations; and on the sixth of November will deposit their ballot in support of truth and justice, and for the protection of their homes and families from the monster advocate of cheap whiskey and dear clothing.

REPUBLICAN LIES AND FORGED QUOTATIONS.

Among intelligent and impartial men the drift against them grows stronger every week. Two evidences come simultaneously to our notice. Hugh McCulloch, secretary of the treasury under the first republican president and the last, has declared his purpose to support Cleveland on account of the latter's policy on the tariff, which he regards as simply carrying out the principles which the republican party advocated in its prime. Prof. H. M. Whitney of Beloit (Wis.) college, a lifelong republican, has written a letter giving his reasons for voting with the democrats this fall, which are briefly these: The prominence of Mr. Blaine in the canvass, and the intention to make him "the commanding influence in the Harrison administration," "the extraordinary badness of the republican platform," "the likelihood that Mr. Cleveland, if re-elected, will do more than Mr. Harrison would do to rescue the public service from the spoilsmen and "the difference between the two parties as to the reduction of taxes and the reform of the tariff," as to which issue he considers the democrats right and the republicans wrong.

Prof. Whitney concludes his statement with this interesting passage:

"It seems better to vote with a party that is advancing out of a bad record into a good one, than with a party that is sinking from a good record into a bad one. The Scripture authorizes us to "forget those things that are behind" in "reaching forth into those things that are before." The attitude of the democratic party, under President Cleveland's lead, seems to me much more hopeful for the future of the country."

This is a view of the matter which merits the careful consideration of republicans of the Dr. Storrs school, who admit that the party is all wrong now, but say that it ought to be supported because of its "majestic history." There is something very curious about this advice of a teacher of morality, that one must forever follow the lead of an association of men because this association was once controlled by noble men actuated by lofty purposes. Dr. Storrs would never for a moment think of telling people that they ought to follow a particular man who had taken to drink and was up to all sorts of evil performances, because twenty-five years ago he used to be a most estimable citizen. But he seriously advises people to vote for the association of men called the republican party, when it means the dominance of such men as Blaine and "Pat" Ford, because twenty-five years ago the association of men then called the republican party had such a leader as Abraham Lincoln. There certainly is no rule of conduct laid down in the teachings of moralists without claim to inspiration, that justifies such action, and Prof. Whitney declares himself unable to reconcile it with the teachings of scripture.—The Nation.

VETOING PENSION BILLS.

Mr. Blaine severely criticises and denounces President Cleveland for vetoing pension bills. He says that he is the first president that ever vetoed a bill passed by congress to give a pension to a soldier. If this be correct, one of two other things is true: Either we never had a congress so reckless and unfaithful, or we never had a president so vigilant and so conscientious in the discharge of his duty.

The record shows that he has vetoed at least a dozen bills passed by congress granting pensions to deserters or persons dishonorably discharged from service. Should he have approved these bills, Mr. Blaine? He refused to sign a large number of bills because the beneficiaries were entitled to larger pensions under the general law. These vetoes were in the interest of the soldiers.

In one such case the claimant was entitled to and has since received $6,760 back pay, which he could not have had under the special act. He vetoed a bill giving a pension to Mary Fitzmorris, giving as a reason that it would deprive her of $1,925, she was entitled to and since received. There were several more cases of the same sort, all proving that the president had the interests of the soldiers and their widows at heart, and wished justice to be done them. Was he right, Mr. Blaine? He has shown a disposition to protect the treasury from being raided by "dead beats" as well as to secure to the deserving their just dues. He has signed 1,369 special pension bills, while Grant, Hayes, Garfield and Arthur signed altogether 1,something. 1,522.

If some of the censure given to Cleveland was bestowed upon congress for sending such a mass of improper legislation to the president for his approval, we would find no fault. His vetoes show the people that they have the right kind of a man in the presidential chair. When a senate can pass 168 pension bills in ninety minutes, an executive is needed who is painstaking, honest and courageous, to prevent hasty, inconsiderate and vicious legislation. The more clear-sighted soldiers appreciate the course of President Cleveland the greater their admiration and respect for him. They will strongly condemn the criticisms made when the only object is to create prejudice and make political capital.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE TWO PARTIES COMPARED

Here is the difference between Blaine and Cleveland as shown by Blaine stands for Harrison: Mr. Cleveland says: "Reduce needless taxation and stop taking money from the pockets of the people to create a surplus in the treasury. Leave the money in the pockets of those to whom it belongs."

Mr. Blaine says: "Keep on taxing the people at the war rate, and if a surplus is produced use it to buy bonds at the high rate of premium now prevailing. In other words, collect the money from the people and pass it over to the bond-holders."

The language correctly expresses the policy proposed by the two parties.

MICHIGAN IS DEMOCRATIC.

William E. Curtis, one of the most intelligent newspaper men on the American press, who was just returned to Washington from a trip through Michigan. He visited nearly all the principal cities, and many of the small interior towns. As a result of his observations, he declares that Michigan will go democratic this fall. Mr. Curtis is a republican, but he has undoubtedly taken an impartial and comprehensive view of the situation. Michigan will roll up a majority for the democratic electoral candidates for the first time in 36 years on Nov. 6.—Lansing Journal.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Salts, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of 10 years' standing. Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony to this the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half a dollar a bottle at F. G. Hites & Co.'s drug store. 2

INFORMATION AND PRACTICAL ADVICE ON MATTERS OF INTEREST.

The Season for Transplanting Trees in Different Sections of the Country—Directions for Moving Large Trees Without Checking Their Growth.

The time of year for transplanting trees varies in different sections and under differing circumstances. The season for doing this work is less important than doing it in the best manner, and if much earth goes with the roots, any time when the trees are dormant or not in a state of rapid growth, will answer, providing, of course, the soil is in condition and circumstances generally are favorable. The most trees are probably transplanted in the spring, though there are numerous advocates for fall planting.

FIG. 1—MOVING TREES.

Trees two or three inches in diameter may be moved with comparative ease and little degree of loss, but when these have gained a diameter of half a foot or more the labor and difficulty are greatly increased.

Country Gentleman, in reply to a recent query, "How to move sweep maples of considerable size to a lawn, without checking the growth," etc., replies by giving the following illustrated directions:

There are two modes of moving large trees. Fig. 1 shows the way in which it is done, by lifting the tree from the ground in an erect position, drawing it on wheels to its place of destination, and dropping into the hole previously made for it.

The tree is first loosened by digging, then lifted with the lever, the trunk being wound with carpet or sacking or with straw, to prevent bruising by the chain which raises it to the binder wheels of a common farm wagon, run up to the tree from behind. Chains attached to the axle then enable the horse (or horses) hitched to the whiffletree to draw it. This mode applies well to the removal of evergreens as well as to deciduous trees, the branches of which need not be disturbed on account of the erect position, in either case, the tops should, however, be made lighter by cutting in the branches so as to present an even, natural top.

FIG. 2—MOVING LARGE TREES.

The other mode is represented in Fig. 2, and applies mainly to deciduous trees. The tree is first entirely loosened by digging, and the two wheels with the logger run up against it. The top is tied into a compact shape, and the tongue of the cart placed erect against it, and both tied securely. They are then brought down horizontally, thus lifting the tree from one side of the ground, and it is then drawn to its desired place and lowered in the same way that it was lifted.

The transplanting of large trees is not generally advised, for however carefully and well conducted the removal is effected, there will be a great check given. Trees six inches in diameter and upward, at eight have thrown out their roots at least twenty feet in every direction, than within a circle forty feet in diameter. A very small part of the fibrous roots can be secured. The tops of the trees must be lightened by pruning, retaining a symmetrical form, to correspond with the diminished capacity of the roots. Trees of the size mentioned would have a removed circle of roots eight or nine feet in diameter, and the balance in root, one of two other things is true: Either we never had a congress so reckless and unfaithful, or we never had a president so vigilant and so conscientious in the discharge of his duty.

IN THE VINEYARD.

Picking Grapes for Packing—Best Grapes for Market.

In harvesting grapes that are to be packed away for markets or long keeping, be exceedingly careful not to rub off the bloom in handling the fruit. Place in large shallow trays and place in a cool airy spot for several days to "cure" before packing. During this curing process the skin becomes toughened and the stems to the cluster shrink somewhat, and the berries will not fall off as they would if packed at once. The varieties vary greatly as to the time required for this. The best keeping grapes, such as Catawba, Iona, Diana, etc., should be allowed to hang upon the vine until quite ripe; this will be known by the bloom to the cluster losing its stiffness and the berries hanging directly down.

The most salable variety of grapes, according to Orchard and Garden, are Delaware and Concord, but a few Iona seedling early in the season, often bring good prices. White varieties, such as Martha and Hartford Prolific, sell very cheap when in the season, often being good for nothing. By this time the market is usually well supplied with these, and the best packages are light wooden boxes containing two or three pounds each; the three pound boxes are generally used for the black varieties, but the lighter prized kinds, Delaware, Martha, etc., are usually packed in two pound boxes. The boxes should be packed in slat crates, holding eighteen three pound boxes, or twenty-four two pound boxes. After picking, the grapes should be at least twenty four hours in a cool, dry place before packing, as when packed fresh from the vines some near Trinidad met at the Federal officers who undertook to remove them, and was in return severely wounded, the the array had to be used to remove the force of the box. Lithographic labels can be obtained for the top of the boxes, which make the package a handsome appearance; the name of the variety should be printed neatly upon the label.

Vinegar Making.

Vinegar making is now in order in all sections of the country where there is a surplus of apples. Much vinegar is made from the juice of early apples, wastes of mills and repressings. Farmers who make vinegar in small quantities for home use, as a rule cling to the old fashioned way of putting the cider into barrels or casks, filling them two-thirds full and letting them stand till the contents turn to vinegar, which usually takes about two years.

The vinegar business carried on in a better way, however, necessitates some kind of a generator which hastens the process.

The vinegar generator shown in the cut is an arrangement used by Charles A. Green, of Rochester, N. Y., and was recently described and illustrated in Rural New Yorker.

The design of this arrangement is to draw cider from one barrel to another, exposing it to the air and heat. The cider slowly drips from the upper barrel down the troughs to the other barrels. When the first barrel is emptied, another is rolled up to take its place.

Another plan sometimes used, when it is desired to make cider vinegar quickly, consists in making shives with grooves, say an inch deep, through which the cider flows backward and forward and then down to the next shelf and so on until in this way the cider is exposed to the atmosphere and warmth for one hour or more before passing into a barrel or other receiver. Another plan is to fill a barrel with oak shavings, run sharp vinegar through them, and then run the cider through the shavings slowly. But it has been found that all methods of hastening the making of vinegar are inclined to affect the quality; that longer time and more labor is given to its desired place and lowered in the same way that it was lifted.

The transplanting of large trees is not generally advised, for however carefully and well conducted the removal is effected, there will be a great check given. Trees six inches in diameter and upward, at eight have thrown out their roots at least twenty feet in every direction, than within a circle forty feet in diameter. A very small part of the fibrous roots can be secured. The tops of the trees must be lightened by pruning, retaining a symmetrical form, to correspond with the diminished capacity of the roots. Trees of the size mentioned would have a removed circle of roots eight or nine feet in diameter, and the balance in root, one of two other things is true: Either we never had a congress so reckless and unfaithful, or we never had a president so vigilant and so conscientious in the discharge of his duty.

A CHEAP VINEGAR GENERATOR.

An old vinegar barrel containing plenty of "mother," the vinegar having just been drawn off, is now used to mind a new barrel containing no "mother."

The color of vinegar side to its salable value. This depends on the color acquired by the addition of the pressed out juice of black berries, cooked either in fresh or dried. As high authority as Mr. Green says that the color is a matter for vinegar and that a spoonful of it will color a barrel of water. When using it try a little of it until you get just the desired tint—not too dark.

CLEVELAND AND PROSPERITY.

How Certain Republicans Were "Raised" by His Action.

It will be remembered that during the campaign of 1884 the Republicans assured the country that if Cleveland was elected business would go to eternal smash, and some Republican business men put themselves on record and declared that they would promptly close with the incoming of a Democratic administration. Among these were Banker Harper, of Cincinnati, and Sherman, Barnum, of Connecticut. The former did go out of business into a penitentiary for robbing his customers, while Barnum has had the frankness to publicly acknowledge that since the election of Cleveland business has been better than ever, and that his real estate, which he declared he would sell on the inaugural ation of a Democratic president, has doubled in value since that inauguration.

But it must not be supposed that Banker Harper is the only great Republican who has gone out of business since the election of Cleveland. A correspondent of The Indianapolis Sentinel, writing from Denver, reveals the fact that some of the richest business men of Colorado have been forced to retire from business by the Democratic administration, particularly the big cattle kings, who during Republican regimes possessed the earth and its fatness thereof in all that region.

"Every one will remember," writes this correspondent, "that within a month following its inauguration, Cleveland ordered the cattlemen to remove the fences erected upon the public lands—erected approvingly during Republican rule; that an Englishman with 10,000 acres of government land under fence near Trinidad met at the Federal officers who undertook to remove them, and was in return severely wounded, the the array had to be used to remove the force of the Englishmen and Scotch companies in Wyoming, that these Englishmen resisted the United States authorities with armed cowboys; that before six months of free trade rule all unlawful fences in the west had been removed. These fences cost the cattle barons more than $2,000,000, which thousands of poor men had to be destroyed."

The Colorado Field and Farm, whose editor is a Republican, said on this subject a few days ago:

"Aside from these reasons for failure there are others that have helped on the destruction of the industry in Colorado and Wyoming. The investors in cattle about ten and twelve years ago became too greedy to possess the earth, and to do it they invested thousands of dollars in barbed wire and fence posts and enclosed the public domain—millions and millions of acres—intending that the sheep herder and the bona fide settler—the man with the plow, seed drill and reaper—should have no hold on the government with which they needed it for their loving herds.

"Then came the government with its agents, sometimes with its army, and ordered the destruction of the illegal fences and the country opened to settlement. This movement alone cost the cattle holders of the state and Wyoming not less than $1,000,000 in loss.

"But the fences were not the only loss.

"Immediately after the removal of the fences," says The Sentinel correspondent, "actual settlers, 'the man with plow, seed drill and reaper,' came from the states and crowded out the cattle men, and today eastern Colorado is all settled up, where, three years ago, the cowboys, cows and coyotes were lords of the land. These 'grangers,' as the cowboys call them, are crowding upon the knights of the branding iron all over the west, and have taken up so much of the public lands that where there have been scarcely per cow on the range three years ago, there are now five cows today, and as it takes on an average twenty acres to raise a steer, the cattle industry died last winter in Colorado alone from starvation. Most extensive ranges have been wiped out by homesteaders, and large cattle companies, of which the Swan Land and Cattle Company, of Scotland, with ranges in Wyoming, Montana and Colorado, were the most extensive, failed, and many cattle kings have been beggared. During the past year settlers have been filing their herds or winding up their business, and throwing in the 'girl' in the market. There is no demand for cows at $15, which brought $25 in 1885. A 5-year-old steer sells for $12 to $17. And yet the people of Denver and the whole country east of the Missouri river, pay as much for beef as when steers sold for $45 to $50. Why is it? Does the butcher pocket the difference? No. The range beef market is controlled by Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha and St. Louis men, who are in a trust—one of those private affairs with which Blaine says President Cleveland has no 'particular right to interfere.'

"Until Cleveland's administration the west was in the hands of cattlemen. They ruled the banks, the merchants, the boards of trade, the press, the federal, state and county officials and the legislatures—all arrogantly arrayed against the despised grangers. Those who undertook farming had their fences cut down by cowboys and crops destroyed by cattle. There was no redress from officials of the state or federal government. They were all interested in the cattle industry. When a new federal officer arrived with a commission from Washington, whether as governor, secretary, judge or marshal of a territory, or surveyor general, register or receiver or special agent of the land office, or Indian agent or post trader, he was soon let into some cattle company on the ground floor. When Cleveland relieved them for the good of the service they all found themselves in profitable business, or land or in cattle—not even excepting the great governor of the great grandfathers' who, upon retiring from a lucrative office at Helena, discovered himself proprietor of The Montana Live Stock Journal and manager for Benjamin Harrison's cattle company in Colorado will remember, of course, for Harrison and Morton this fall. Cattlemen and the Republican administration, combined the remunerative business of raising cattle on the free range and robbing the government of its public lands along all the streams through fraudulent entries made by hired "professional" pre-emptors and cowboys. In order to monopolize the water privilege and keep off actual settlers—are against Cleveland, because the land office, under his administration has put a stop to the use of "locating" lands for corporations, lumbermen who diverted the public lands of timber—some of whom were sent to the penitentiary for this offense and will be sent in time to vote—are all against Cleveland, because under his rule their occupation is gone."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No other preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very severe tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in the worst of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hunter, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will receive the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerton, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief, and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and finally developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in the chest and sides, and was prostrated so to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I secured a rally from the first dose of this medicine, and after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

AN EDITOR'S ELOQUENCE

HON. HENRY WATTERSON'S GREAT SPEECH AT DETROIT.

He Gives a Clinical Dissection of the Republican Platform—False Pretenses of the G. O. P. Shown Up in Burning Words

An Earnest Appeal for the Reduction of War Taxes.

Sensible men, surveying the state of affairs may well ask about it, and ask themselves how it comes that, with a Democratic majority in the House, which we think, we refer to reach the dead level of a permanent and satisfactory finding. There is no question too far-reaching or too superficial for this. It is, indeed, the issue of the campaign, and it puts one of conditions as far as we can see of fears. Now that the time for action is at hand, the Democratic party in the Presidential field by the Mills bill and the choice its Congress, filed by the St. Louis platform, and fixed by the acceptance of the President. It is purely monastical what opinion pentenced to the contrary, and what sophistries, what the evil and pitiable of fanatics. Mr. Blaine, for one sample, is opposed to the repeal of the tax, while the Republican platform demands its repeal yet Mr. Blaine supports without qualification the platform. When it comes to the doctrine, Dodgeriling, there are differences and differences, and degrees of degrees as well as differences and degrees among the revenue reformers. But this is neither a doctrine nor a personal campaign. This is a campaign of party forces and organized ideas. It is a campaign of principle, of principle and of principle, and of principle, and shall abide the consequences of its act and word. It is too late to retract, it is too late for shortcuts; the record is made up, and, as our friend nearer to us than Mr. Blaine, the Tribune, says, the case is decided, and there is no doubt is damned. I am going to speak to-day, if I speak at all, in plain terms, to plain people, in the plain and old fashioned way how they stand upon this great issue. It is no use to tell us we have been so smallen with the Democrats that we have quite forgotten how to talk to our fellow-citizens. We are not so. We have been allowed to speak for our own; I want to go over them specifically and see how they stand. You stand on that tariff is a tax levied by the government upon articles of foreign growth and manufacture. We have been taught to believe that the tariff is a tax on imports, and that the duties levied upon articles of foreign growth and manufacture are all the best features of all that tariffs that ever preceded, for it is a peace tariff on a war basis. That is to say, though reconstructed in time of peace, it actually was made in the beginning of the war, and was put upon the country during a time of war. Those impositions were confessedly a great burden upon the patriotism of the people. They were confessedly made in response to the public exigency. The Republican party, which made them, that that they should be imposed instead that exigency, and yet the only revision they have had, and time in the hands of the Republicans, since the war has not only failed to reduce them but has actually increased them. We now there are higher than they were when, as a matter of fact, the war ceased, and, as we said, not in time all, not the worst of it, for their authors, recanting all their original pledges, now tell us that They are how forever and that they shall never be revised except to increase them. We have been told, in the end of that I come without further parley to that fantastic condition of political misnomers, that, with the exception of the bones of the dead languages, that antiquarian comic almanac and last chapter in the page you know, the Republican platform, Gentlemen, I have not, I am not responsible for the book-making, and will not be the pastorer of my own party, and I know what it is to be suspected of being a little too honest and too plain for the good school for the use of this world; but if I were a Republican, I would be ashamed to stand by my friend McKinley. I would see he lives now as he is to tell the tale. It is the most tenious and most irreverent piece of prosperity, the most astonishing example of going back into the dark ages in spite of scientific progress, the most yes presidential the political annals of the country. It is a Democratic Congress, and a Democratic President, and yet the Republican platform, I am in a state of perpetual wonder how it happens that any man would have been so forgetful of the Republican principles, and so blind to the sentiment, it is funny to its critics, funny in its inconsistencies, funny in its very falsehoods. A clever rascal said to me such a platform would at least have avoided the mistake of arraigning the administration of Grover Cleveland, in a series of specific charges, each one of which is a direct and positive indorsement of some of the Republican policies. But that is just what the platform does from first to last, and before I come to the main point, let me, for purposes of illustration, point you out a few of them. Let me point you out a few of them. I will take them at random; it doesn't make much difference which one I take first. The Republican platform says that the Republican party condemns the policy of the administration in its efforts to demonetize silver and favors the restoration of better postage to one cent.

Why, of course, it is perfectly true that demonetized it. It is true that the policy of the Treasury under the present administration has been set upon the continued coinage of the metal, and that which has been provided by the Democratic majority in Congress, and that it was the Republican policy of the Treasury under those Republican secretaries, including John Sherman. And that is the reason, I suppose, why the Republican platform denounces it. But postage, letter postage, cheaper letter postage, is, I think, the Republican policy they are in favor of that the U. S. postmaster, nearly a year before the adoption of this comic almanac. I mean this platform, nearly a year, senator Beck, of Kentucky, introduced into the Republican Senate a bill for such a measure. It was referred, he's a Democrat, to the Committee on the Republican Committee on Postoffices, and there it nearly died to-night. And it shows so soundly that the Kentucky senator, Democrat and Sectionist, to be to has not been strong enough to wake it up. Now, I come to the point, and I hope after the one come home to Republicans.

Now, here they demand the restoration of our postal service. Who destroyed it? When the Democratic party went out of power after a long period of Republican administration the world was in a state with Japanese, who had been shut up in Christendom which was glad to be released and made brighter by the starry emblem of the republic, floating from a Yankee clipper. How stand the accounts? Twenty-five years of Republican domination. I trace the Japanese, I trace the Japanese, an ancient city, over to Brooklyn, lands north. Mr. Flower, indeed of mine recently told me that the city Kiowa, and he found in all his travels was the seven walk of an old Confederate cruiser, stranded on the shore of Brooklyn, and he finds Arabs as a sort of relief back. But still he demands, he demands that the restoration of our postal service, established by a quarter of a century of Republican policies.

Well, here is another one. They say "We declare our hostility to the introduction of Chinese labor into this country contract labor." A well-sounded sentiment. It was the Republican party that originated that debasing system. It was the Republican party that stuck to its guns another. It was the Democratic party that first raised its voice against it. Well, there is a Democratic administration which has enforced those laws as they never were enforced to any Republican. It is a Democratic committee of Congress which is now going above the country taking testimony, and it is the Democratic party which is effective, and every man caught in the foreign contract labor business has to pay for his high tariff. But still this outrich of a platform is to be found in the end of the world denounces the introduction of foreign contract labor.

I think I will come on. I will change references to the Mormons. Doctrine and the Mormons are hardly worth quotation. Mormons are no heroes foot-note which is to fill out the page. Chinese labor, I am sorry to say, is a subject of a Chinese treaty. Due to do that because the administration of Harrison, China's own, meets the enforcement of the contract labor laws of the country, it seems to me sufficiently punctuate that. I am not responsible for the book, I am the get as soon as I can. I am in a chase which is a little too fast, it seems to me to rise to the dignity of what you call a "Long and Short Sixteen, Schneider." So and from under gentlemen, under I mean the Republican Senate, under administration for the same and under the same platform which I have been quoting, I come to the time for the Mills bill. Well, what do you mean? Why, Grover Cleveland tore the Mills bill from his bosom and kicked it out of the socket, and he took that large tail and hauled the Democratic party after him, and he said, "Boys, I'm tired of this business. I'm tired of this administration for the weak and the strong, for the protection of the fishery question. There is a gentleman, that the Republican party is a great many years in power, and I have a great many years in power, and I have a bloody shirt; but the Democratic party has been in three years, and I don't wave its purpose any longer, and so I have thrown it overboard." Well, I have read up in the British history, I have read up back to the days of Henry II. Grover Cleveland instituted land-hooks, and ever since, there are a number of battles that were never fought, by there, have been running about, hither and thither, and wringing their hands, and asking one another, "Where is the Mills bill?" Trying about, late.

Now, the Democratic of the city of New York, which is composed of decent people in the very audience who will grieve over the profligacy of the Bowery, he had put one single act, but that act stops the mouth of the Republican party for years, year after year. Every Sentinel Photographs Answered.

EDITOR JOURNAL, Dear Sir:—In the Sentinel of the 17th a person signing his name as a protectionist, made some statements so false that it calls for a few words in answer. In the first place, he says the prohibition convention was made up of a hypocritical set of men. Let us see. In that convention were four traveling Methodist ministers, one Presbyterian minister, and a number of good representative men, highly respected in this county. Again he says there is not a prohibitionist on the ticket. On the contrary, there were five straight prohibitionists and three who are known to be good temperance men and perhaps as good prohibitionists as the party signing himself such. Now, did the writer mean to tell that which was false, or was he purdonably ignorant? Was it all to coerce and drive men into the republican party? Either way it was too low and mean to be noticed by an enlightened people. The republican party must be desperately demoralized to stoop so low. Evidently they see "the handwriting on the wall."

ROBBING THE FARMER.

SOME time since the Chicago Daily News charged that protected agricultural implement makers were selling their best reapers and binders in the British colonies and other foreign countries at $50 less than they are selling them to our American farmers while by so doing they were placing in the hands of foreign farmers the means of competing with the Americans in the markets of the world at an enormously less cost. Now comes United States Congressman Hatch, chairman of the committee on agriculture of the lower house of congress, in a speech at the great granger fair in Pennsylvania, claiming that plows are manufactured in this country and sold cheaper in Canada than in the United States even with the 35 per cent advalorem duty of the Dominion government added. Is it possible that in the face of such facts as these our farmers can still be made to believe that they are not robbed by the tariff, which compels them to sell their products at the lowest price and at the same time compels them to buy what they consume at prices artificially advanced in the interests of men who are helping to undermine their ability to compete in said world's markets?

Democratic gains in the fading towns and several manufacturing cities.

Blaine—It is almost a political revolution.

Columbia—Oh, James, James, how can you go on so? You lie worse than you did in '84.

How Is This, Mr. Blaine?

In your speech delivered before the citizens of Calais and Eastport you congratulated them on their wonderful reparative energy, as displayed in the rebuilding of the latter town after the great fire, which nearly swept it out of existence, a few years ago. You reminded those hearers, that they never could have hoped to accomplish this task but for the assistance they had derived from the present protective tariff, and then you held up your hand and their enumeration the Mills bill, and showed them how it invited the Canadians to bring in, without duty, every form of timber, hewn and sawed, and prepared and added. Now, if you will turn to the record of the Forty-ninth congress, you will find there a petition, signed by the selectmen of Eastport, and dated immediately after the fire, asking congress to come to the relief of the stricken town, and permit all building materials to be brought in free of duty, in order that the work of rebuilding the town might be proceeded with without the payment of burdensome duties. Accompanying this petition was a bill to grant what the petitioners asked for, and it was introduced by Congressman Boutelle, who made a speech in its favor, in the course of which he called attention to the fact that it only followed precedents that had been established after the great fire in Portland in 1866. Now, did those suffering people of Eastport know what was for their best interests when they asked for this relief, and did Congressman Boutelle understand what he was talking about when he asked for the passage of this relief bill? In other words, are the people of Eastport and Capt. Boutelle on record as favoring the protective system in times of distress, or are they really for putting raw materials on the free list when it comes to a pinch at their own homes?—Boston Herald.

He Refused to Get Soaked.

There is at least one woolen manufacturer in Blaine's own state of Maine who has neither the fear of the "unnerving ring" nor of the "free trade scare" before his eyes. His name is Archibald Leith, whom the war tariff folks have been claiming as one of themselves for years. In an interview in The Lewiston Gazette he, however, delivers himself boldly in favor of Cleveland's message and the Mills bill. "I have been manufacturing wool for now forty years," he says. "Give me free wool and I will guarantee to pay my help the same wages that I have been paying and ship my goods to England and undersell all the English manufacturers." The fact is, as he explained further, English labor and English machinery are far below the American standard; hence they can not produce the same quantity for the same outlay. Wages will therefore be higher here always so long as American machanics preserve their independent yeoman character—which will not be for long, however, if the Republican monopolists have their way much longer.—Brooklyn Citizen.

Afraid of Old Grover.

The secret of the senate's delay in producing its tariff bill is disclosed by the Washington correspondent of The New York Evening Post, who says he has been told by a Republican United States senator that the Republican senators were afraid that as soon as the bill was presented the president would send in a message recommending its passage, for the relief of the treasury and of commerce and industry. The fear is a reasonable one, for if the bill really accomplished any reduction of taxes or relief of the treasury, that is precisely what the president would very probably do.—St. Louis Republic.

BUTTER PACKAGES.

Description of Four Kinds of Packages in General Use for Creamery Butter.

There are four kinds of packages in general use for creamery butter. Two of these are made of wood, the remaining one is of tin.

A form very commonly used is known as the Welsh tub, although it is made in America. The Welsh tub is made of white ash and is bound with black ash hoops. The staves are made by machinery and the bottom is fitted in like a barrel head. Either five or six hoops are used, more generally five. If only five, two are placed at each end and one in the middle. If six are used, three are placed at each end. The weight of the tub is eight or nine pounds, and it holds fifty-five or sixty pounds of butter.

The Welsh is also largely used. It is made of white oak, with hickory hoops. It is headed, top and bottom, like a barrel, and is the same size at each end, being twelve and one-half inches in diameter at the ends and fifteen inches in the middle. The staves are thirty inches long. The firkins are very often sawed in two and used as half firkins tubs, with white oak covers, which are nailed on. The firkin holds about a hundred pounds of butter.

The creamery pail holds from sixty to eighty pounds. It is made of white oak and bound with iron hoops, either galvanized or not. These pails are painted and are fitted with patent fastenings for the ash or oak covers, and make the handsomest packages in the trade. They are not popular with commission merchants, as they are so expensive that they have to be returned to the creameries.

The packages are growing in favor and are used by the government, but are a long way from supersedding wood in the markets, notwithstanding that they seem to be equally as good as wood in all respects and better in some. They are more absorbent, of course, and do not flavor the butter, while they keep it much better. The packages are made of all sizes, in cylindrical shape, and are cased and covered at the top with wood. The wooden cover rests on the salt brine which lies on the butter.

A Year of Plenty.

Corn leads the cereals in general importance and promises abundance of the crop. Spring wheat has not fully maintained its high promise in June.

Full estimates of winter wheat cannot yet be made, but the results of threshing so far as known promise a larger yield than was expected early in the season. Cotton has passed through the season with but little injury from climatic changes, rust or insects. Pasturage in the main has been excellent, and in the states and territories forming the great pasturage belt exceptionally good.

The apple and peach crops are large, especially in states where scarcity existed last year. It is a satisfaction to know that importations of potatoes will not be needed, every state reporting a large average. Hay is generally satisfactory, clover stealing high in quality. There has been a large increase in acreage of oats, and the crop is probably the largest ever grown.

Selecting Seed Corn.

Professor Johnson, of the Michigan Agricultural college, has practiced the following method of selecting seed corn for a number of years with satisfactory results:

When husking, the most perfect ears are selected and set in their own rows. A second sorting follows, when all ears not up to the standard are rejected. The corn is then tied up with wool twine in lots of fifty ears or more, or strung on wire with 'Smith's device for hanging up corn." The ears are then hung up in the drying room. The room below the drying room is heated by a coal fire, and the chimney from this room passes through the drying room, thus securing a dry and even temperature. First—Selection of perfect ears when corn is husked. Second—A careful second sorting. Third—The hanging up of the corn. Fourth—A dry and even temperature in the drying room.

How to Tie Knots That Never Slip.

The knots here shown were originally illustrated and described in Prairie Farmer, when it was the great fire in Portland in 1866. Now, did those suffering people of Eastport know what was for their best interests when they asked for this relief, and did Congressman Boutelle understand what he was talking about when he asked for the passage of this relief bill? In other words, are the people of Eastport and Capt. Boutelle on record as favoring the protective system in times of distress, or are they really for putting raw materials on the free list when it comes to a pinch at their own homes?—Boston Herald.

He Refused to Get Soaked.

There is at least one woolen manufacturer in Blaine's own state of Maine who has neither the fear of the "unnerving ring" nor of the "free trade scare" before his eyes. His name is Archibald Leith, whom the war tariff folks have been claiming as one of themselves for years. In an interview in The Lewiston Gazette he, however, delivers himself boldly in favor of Cleveland's message and the Mills bill. "I have been manufacturing wool for now forty years," he says. "Give me free wool and I will guarantee to pay my help the same wages that I have been paying and ship my goods to England and undersell all the English manufacturers." The fact is, as he explained further, English labor and English machinery are far below the American standard; hence they can not produce the same quantity for the same outlay. Wages will therefore be higher here always so long as American machanics preserve their independent yeoman character—which will not be for long, however, if the Republican monopolists have their way much longer.—Brooklyn Citizen.

EXCELLENT KNOTS.

On the end to which the horses are hitched use a "bowline" or "sailor's knot." This is shown at A and C. A being the side view. His name is Archibald Leith, whom the war tariff folks have been claiming as one of themselves for years. In an interview in The Lewiston Gazette he, however, delivers himself boldly in favor of Cleveland's message and the Mills bill. "I have been manufacturing wool for now forty years," he says. "Give me free wool and I will guarantee to pay my help the same wages that I have been paying and ship my goods to England and undersell all the English manufacturers." The fact is, as he explained further, English labor and English machinery are far below the American standard; hence they can not produce the same quantity for the same outlay. Wages will therefore be higher here always so long as American machanics preserve their independent yeoman character—which will not be for long, however, if the Republican monopolists have their way much longer.—Brooklyn Citizen.

Things Talked About.

Every sheep raiser makes his own lock, according to his own sweet fancy. He gives his flock, says Rural Home.

Prominent fruit growers find that thinned peaches are as large as larger and excellence and sell much better than the unthinned ones.

Prominent commission merchants recommend that the Concord grapes be shipped so green that they will keep two weeks and not mellow up till the retail dealer gets them.

An English farmer says: "My twenty-five years' experimentation with potash on Norfolk soils warrants me in advising its application to farmers in preference to any crop in the ordinary rotation."

Henry Stewart thinks quicklime is as indispensable in a dairy as ice. It is exceedingly absorptive of moisture, taking up one-third of its weight and falling slowly to a fine, dry powder, without any appearance of moisture.

Professor Beal asserts in The American Agriculturist that there is probably no more beneficial wild animal living in America than the skunk, which does an untold amount of good in digging up and devouring the common grubworm, the larvæ of lachnosterna fusca, a pest to all grass lands and a curse in strawberry beds.

The International dairy show is to be held at Chicago at the time of the fat stock show, Nov. 13-23.

PROTECTION FOR LABOR.

"If the great army of wage-workers in this country will not protect themselves," says Mr. Blaine, "there is no other power that can protect them." Right out, sir. Mr. Blaine! The wage workers understand this, and are organizing in unions and democratic clubs for mutual protection against the robberies of the trust kings and tariff barons. A tariff that leaves labor on the free list and taxes necessities 47 per cent, never benefited workingmen.—Lansing Journal.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to the snuffers (whether this remedy is a specific is somewhat exhausting this new treatment is sent on receipt of six cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 10oct

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she wrestled with the fearful foe, losing her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she hovered between unsanity, and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night, and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." This wonderful Discovery is for sale by all druggists. Regular size and $1. Trial bottle at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 2

The Real Secret of the unparalleled success of the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is found in two distinguishing characteristics, which more than anything else have enabled it to attain unexampled growth.

FIRST—It is a Daily Paper for Busy People. The people of this busy age are hungry hearted by the necessity of an intelligent knowledge of the world's daily doings, but they are too busy to waste valuable time in searching through a cumbrous sheet for a single news paper for the real news of art, literature, science, religion, politics, and the business world. Hence the demand for a modern civilization. They want news—all the news—but they don't want it concealed in an overpowering mass of the trivial and inconsequential. It is because THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is "all wheat and no chaff" that its circulation is over "a million a week."

SECOND—It is an Independent, Truth-telling Newspaper. The people demand a fearless, partisan, independent newspaper, which gives all the news, and gives it free from the taint of partisan bias. It is because THE NEWS is fearless in truth, no "ax to grind," and a partisan, independent newspaper, not only by a guide, philosopher and friend" to hosts of people, but it has attained its popularity, and is why THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS has to-day a circulation of over "a million a week."

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS now adds to these two comprehensive elements of prosperity, a third, in its unexampled low price of ONE CENT A DAY.

It is always large enough for any day.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is for sale by all newsdealers at One Cent per copy. It will be mailed, postage paid, for fifty for year, or ninety for six months. The large size and mechanical excellence of THE NEWS, as a merchant and professional man, has kept metropolitan pace with its growth.

Mr. Ball says if premature age may be effectually obliterated by using Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers, it colors uniformly, and always gives satisfaction.

The liquor element of a portion of the county are putting in their best work for Norton. Temperance men should unite and give Mr. Harris their hearty support.

A pleasant card party was given by Miss Blanche Bartholomew Thursday evening last, and all who were in attendance say they enjoyed. We understand more of it hereafter.

Henry H. Fitzsharry's big black horse broke its leg between the fetterlock and hoof one night last week, and it was set by Dr. Bennett. We express confidence that the horse will be on the road again for work in a few weeks.

Every opponent of W. A. Norton should not stay simply with voting for William Harris, but should help defeat Norton's dirty schemes wherever they appear. This can do him best by voting the entire democratic county ticket.

From all over the district comes word that Hudson is making a clean, thorough canvass; and he is almost beyond question carrying about three thousand plurality. Hard work at every polling place will do it, and the ninth is reckoned.

In collating British opinion our republican friends should not let it be the fact that Morton, of the British banking firm of Morton, Rose & Co., is related to the republican ticket with all his might and some of his money.—Free Press.

The St. Ignace Democrat is now the St. Ignace News. Hanna & Ferchen have the new editors. Mr. Hanna is well known all over the state as an able newspaper man, and we will expect to see St. Ignace "move" than ever. Here's our $3? Tom.

The consciousness of having a remedy at hand for croup, prevents severe throat, and sudden colds, is very comforting to parent. With a bottle of Ackerr's Cherry Pectoral in the house, one feels, in such cases, a sense of security nothing else can give.

It was once supposed that scrofula could not be eradicated from the system; but the marvelous results produced by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla disprove this theory. The results in this medicine is the most powerful blood-purifier ever discovered.

The more Stars read, the more democratic votes. This great metropolitan newspaper makes special rates for the campaign (both for daily and weekly) that are amazingly low. There is a good field for a few energetic persons hereabouts to get up clubs.

Frank Fogg publishes a letter in the Citizen saying that he is in league with the liquor element. Perhaps this is true, but we do not believe it. We have good reason to believe that certain democratic saloon keepers are doing all in their power for the election of Fogg and Norton.

It is understood on the street that the editor of the Sentinel and W. A. Norton were closeted together over an hour one day this week. Whether the rumor is true or not, the vigorous kick made by the Sentinel this week against Mr. Norton, gives support to the story. Mr. Norton must be defeated.

At the special examination of teachers last Friday there were twelve applicants, and the following were granted certificates: Sella A. Sutliff, Mrs. Rosamond C. Marsh, Mrs. Delia Porter, Miss Edith Cole, Mrs. Frank Cates, Mrs. Etta Upright, Miss Clara H. Adams, Miss Ella Adams, Miss Anna M. Metcalf, Fred Stebbins.

Mr. H. C. Hamill, late foreman of the Lansing Journal, has bought the Manistee Democrat, and proposes to make is a first class local newspaper. In this field of work Harry has had a rich experience, and we can assure his competitors that they must rise early in the morning if they get the start of him. He deserves success.

Private Hiram B Hudson spoke to a packed audience on Wednesday night at Evart and made a telling effect upon his hearers. For over two hours he held them attentive listeners. Chairman Southworth took great pleasure in introducing him as a member of his own republican, and the first private soldier to be nominated by any party in the state for congress.

The county teacher's association meets in the high school room on Friday evening and Saturday morning, Nov. 9th and 10th. Some very practical subjects will be discussed, among which are "Pronunciation," "Formation of Numbers," "Fractions," "What Errors are we Teaching," etc. R. W. Kane, of Charlevoix, will address the teachers and friends at the evening session. Music and select reading by local talent. A profitable meeting is assured.

For the benefit of some of our friends who are not personally acquainted with W. M. Burnham, our candidate for judge of probate, we give the following extract from a letter from Mr. Burnham's leading opponent in the law business at Mitchell, before he came to East Jordan to a gentleman residing here: "From my past observation, I know he will satisfactorily fill the office, if a good man is needed, fearing no enemy. Politically he is well and well liked, by sacrifice one jot of his official oath. The public need such public servants."

The Citizen tries very hard to make it appear that the democrats will run a straight party candidate for representative, probably to justify the circulation of tickets with John Nicholls' name printed on them. Democratic Stetson's friends are circulating such tickets, and warn democrats all over the district to look out for them. Mr. Nicholls is not a candidate, and the democratic legislative district will support Mr. Harris for the express purpose of defeating Mr. Norton. Mr. Norton is not a safe man to trust with the affairs of this legislative district.

The Detroit Free Press having stated to a correspondent that registration was required all over the state this year, the law was complied and the following published Saturday: "The answer was erroneous, being based on a misapprehension. A re-registration of voters this year is confined to cities incorporated under certain acts and does not apply to voters in villages and townships. In the case of the latter a new registration was required in 1882, and under the present law another is not required until 1892." But we would advise every man to know positively that he is properly registered next Saturday.

The East-Jordan Lumber Co., and the village of East Jordan have entered into a partnership for fire protection and water supply. The company have erected a brick building, and placed in it a Smith & Vaile 10-inch pump, capable of throwing 950 gallons of water per minute, to be supplied with steam from the boilers of the mill. Water mains and hydrants are to place, and a hose tower is being erected, and when the whole is completed, the town will have a good beginning toward fire protection and water work, and for the present is believed to be entirely adequate for fire protection. Such enterprise is commendable.

THEY ARE ALL WINNERS

OUR DEMOCRATIC NOMINEES.

The Entire Ticket Composed of Good Men.

This is the last issue of the JOURNAL before election. The canvass has been one of principle, and not of personal slander and mud slinging. Every inch of ground has been contested to the uttermost on both sides, but the Democrats go in with a decided advantage. The candidates are all clean men,—every one of them,—and there are no internal dissensions to mar the outward harmony.

Reports from Chairman Weston of the democratic state committee indicate a glorious victory for Michigan democracy next Tuesday. The dissatisfaction among republicans and the changes to democracy is astonishing, and a surprise to even democrats themselves.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

The message of the President vetoing the pension bill of Mrs. Sarah Washington, on the ground that her second husband is still living and that such a precedent ought not to be established, was laid before the Senate the 15th of Oct. The bill and message were referred to the Committee on Pensions. The session set down for a discussion of the Pacific Railroad funding bill, subject to the tariff bill. The consideration of the tariff bill was continued. In the House, Mr. Wheeler of Alabama offered a series of resolutions concerning the Senate tariff bill, and after some discussion as to the propriety of the resolution it was referred to the Committee on Rules.

McGARIGLE TALKS OF CHICAGO.

He Says He Lost Money by His Connection with Politics.

W. J. McGarigle, with his wife and family, recently visited Winnipeg, Manitoba. It is believed he went there to meet some Chicago friends, who are seeking to arrange an armistice and induce his return to Chicago in time to take part in the election. He talked quite boldly and defies any man in Chicago to prove he has ever taken a dollar from anybody wrongfully or that he has not acted on the square. He says he is a victim of political intrigue and has stood quietly by and suffered ignominy, while those who are guilty have gone scot free. He blames certain political parties for trying to work up a conspiracy against him in the hope of having a big civic scandal equal to New York, with the object of injuring Carter Harrison, and upon because in his position enemies believed he knew everything and would spit. He admits having handled and distributed political corruption funds, but says he did it squarely and everybody knew it had to be done. He expects to return to Chicago when the excitement cools down. He says the people of Chicago have not lost confidence in him, and that he will resume his position of confidence when he returns. He was feted to some extent in Winnipeg.

AN INTERESTING BOND CASE.

The Decision Anxiously Awaited by Parties to the Suit.

Arguments have been heard before Judge Andrews, of the New York Supreme Court, in the case of I. B. Newcomb & Co. against the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company and John Bloodgood and William Latimer, executors of the William Latimer estate. The case is an interesting one, and the decision of Judge Andrews will be anxiously awaited.

Before Jerome B. Hill, the defaulting executor of the estate of William Latimer, fled to pledged with I. B. Newcomb & Co. $8,000 worth of Chicago and Northwestern Railroad coupon bonds as security for a loan. When the time came for the return of the bonds, John Bloodgood and William A. Latimer, notified the New York Stock Exchange and the Chicago and Northwestern Company of their claims to the bonds. This notice stands in the hands of the Exchange. The Supreme Court against the Chicago and Northwestern Company and Bloodgood and Latimer, as executors of the William Latimer estate. The complainant demands that the company issue to the plaintiffs registered bonds in place of the coupon bonds, or that the defendants be ordered to pay the bonds to passed upon that Latimer and Bloodgood be decreed to have no interest in the bonds, and that damages be awarded for malicious interference and collusion. The defendants demurred on the ground that Hill was not a party.

THE EXCLUSION ACT VALID.

Decision of Judge Sawyer in Two Test Cases Brought by Chinese.

Judge Sawyer, of the United States Circuit Court at San Francisco, has announced his decision in two cases brought to test the Chinese exclusion act. The Court decides that the act is constitutional, and by its terms Lozano operative immediately upon its passage. The Court further declares that the return certificate granted to Chinese departing from this country is not a contract, but is simply an instrument to establish the identity of a party entitled to certain privileges under a compact between the United States and China. Treaties, the decision says, confer privileges as long as they are in force, but the right of Congress to control or repeal treaty stipulations has been clearly recognized. The counsel for the Chinese gave notice that they would appeal to the Federal Supreme Court. This decision affects about 20,000 Chinese who hold return certificates and about 3,000 who departed from this country before the passage of the restriction act.

KILLED IN HIS CELL.

A Murderer in Georgia Shot by a Gang of Masked Men.

Masked men wreaked vengeance upon a murderer at Jesup, Ga. In January, 1886, Robert J. Smith, proprietor of the Sunny-Side House in that place, was shot and instantly killed by Lewis Edwards, a negro porter of the Commercial House. He narrowly escaped lynch law at that time. He was convicted of murder and sentenced to a life imprisonment. His attorney secured a new trial, and he was to have been put on the stand again. The jail guards were overpowered by a body of masked men, who took the keys, entered the prisoner's cell, and shot twelve bullets into his body.

Unsatisfactory Condition.

Receiver Byron L. Smith of the Traders' Bank, of Chicago, reports that the affairs of the bankrupt institution are in a very unsatisfactory shape. It is alleged that Joseph O. Rutter drew $600,000 out of the institution last year, and an effort is being made to trace the money.

A Canadian Ship Railway.

A cable from London announces that a contract for the construction of a ship railway from the Bay of Fundy to Bale Verte, Gulf of St. Lawrence, has been finally settled. There is every probability that the first ship railway in the world will be built in Canada. The work will probably cost $5,000,000.

JUDGE THURMAN ACCEPTS.

The Obioan's Letter—He Stands By the St. Louis Platform.

Ex-Senator Thurman's letter accepting the nomination of the St. Louis convention for the Vice-Presidency is as follows:

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 15.

The Hon. Patrick A. Collins and others, Committee:

GENTLEMEN—In obedience to custom, I send you this formal acceptance of my nomination for Vice-President of the United States by the States made by the national convention, the Democratic party at St. Louis. When you did me the honor to call upon me at Columbus and officially notify me of my nomination I expressed my sense of obligation to the convention, and stated that, although I had not sought the nomination, I could not refuse to accept liberty, under the people of civil liberty. I thought then, as I still think, that whatever I could properly do to promote the re-election of President Cleveland I ought to do. I was encouraged to do so by the support of such brightly good sense, manly courage, and exalted patriotism that a year ago impression of these high qualities caused me to vote for his renomination. I am also strongly impressed with the belief that his renomination will powerfully tend to strengthen that fraternal feeling among the American people that is essential to their welfare, peace, and happiness, and to the perpetuity of the Union and of our system of government.

I approve the platform of the St. Louis convention, and I cannot too strongly express my dissent from the heretical teachings of the monopolist that the welfare of a people can be promoted by a system of exorbitant taxation for the excess of the wants of the Government. Taxation is a burden, and, as a rule, the less of it the better. But taxation for a government is not a condition can be improved by taxing him on all he wears, on all his wife and children wear, on all his tools and implements of industry, on all he eats, drinks, and lives on. Let the treasury with an idle surplus be taxed, let the Government has no legitimate use, and is thereby derive the people of earnings needed for their business and daily wants, and to create a fund that Congress may use to buy votes, induce and corruption in the expenditure of the Government, and to enable it to keep in power men with every sound principle of government and of political economy.

The necessity of reducing taxation to prevent such accumulation of surplus revenue and the dangers therefrom, I think, is not yet so obvious as it should be, and it may not be, if we come to consider the subject more fully, that we are guilty have gone next tree. He blames certain political parties for trying to work up a conspiracy against him in the hope of having a big civic scandal equal to New York, with the object of injuring Carter Harrison, upon because in his position enemies believed he knew everything and would spit. The Government receipts from internal revenue show a yield of about $7,500,000 beyond the estimates. Estimates of shortage in weight range from three to eight pounds a bushel, but from has advanced from $1.15 for shipping grades to $1.25 for the best. Corn has gone up 10 cents in the cow in the price of bread, as it can only stand, leads to a fall of a sixth in the quantity purchased for the difference would be greater than the shrinkage in the weight of wheat at the prices ruling last year. Meanwhile, the crop is up to estimated at 2,100,000,000 bushels, and observers of corn tends to lessen the home demand for wheat.

MRS. BEEM GETS A FORTUNE.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court Decides a Celebrated Will Case.

The litigation in the celebrated Kimberly-Beem will case, which has been dragging along in the courts for several years, has terminated by a decision of the Wisconsin State Supreme Court, the result being as follows:

Mrs. Beem, the respondent, was the wife of Gen. Martin Beem of Chicago, and the situation which the case confronted was largely due to the sensational manner in which Mrs. Beem and her husband had lived, while during the last few years. The wealthy husband seems was not the happiest, and the suicide of Kimberly, prominently in consequence, and the sensational facts developed are well known. Mrs. Beem is the grand-daughter of Mrs. Lucy Kimberly, a wealthy widow of Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, who died in 1882, and left the bulk of her estate, which amounted to about $30,000 on his wife during her life, and the third after her death, to the children and heirs of his estate. In his will she by a former husband, Mr. Kimberly, the testatrix, in kindness sketched to take the widow during when she died testate, leaving Mrs. Beem her sole legatee. Daniel Kimberly, the executor, by fraudulent representations obtained an order of probate of the will, which was afterwards set aside by the Circuit Court, but reversed, and the Supreme Court, on the reversal. The case was prosecuted vigorously and eminent counsel were engaged, among the attorneys being Senator Vilas.

NATIONAL CHOP REPORT.

Corn, Which Will Yield Twenty-six Bushels Per Acre, in Prime Condition.

The October crop report is as follows:

Returns show that the condition of the present corn crop is considerably better than for the last two years, and is exceeded generally since that of 1879, when the condition was 98, and the subsequent averages yield 26 bushels. The present average of condition is 92, against 84.2 in September last, and 84.1 in October in the Northwest, and 85.7 in the Southwest, the great corn-growing States remaining at 92 and 93. The average yield is 26.4 bushels. The quality is much below the average, the yield will further reduce the supply. The winter-wheat averages for places of comparison are: Ohio, 97; Michigan, 97; Indiana, 97; Illinois, 97; Iowa, 97; Missouri, 97; Kansas, 97; Texas, 101; Tennessee, 93; Kentucky, 95; Ohio, 102; Michigan, 104; Indiana, 102; Illinois, 97; Missouri, 102; Kansas, 94; California, 102; Oregon, 102; Tennessee, 95; Kentucky, 95; Nebraska, 102; Colorado, 102; Dakota, 102; Minnesota, 102; Wisconsin, 102; Iowa, 102; Pennsylvania, 102; Maryland, 102; Delaware, 102; New Jersey, 102; Connecticut, 102; Massachusetts, 102; Rhode Island, 102; Vermont, 102; New York, 102; Maine, 102; Virginia, 102; Georgia, 102; Florida, 102; Alabama, 102; Mississippi, 102; Louisiana, 102; Texas, 102; Arkansas, 102; Tennessee, 102; Kentucky, 102; Ohio, 102; Michigan, 102; Indiana, 102; Illinois, 102; Missouri, 102; Kansas, 102; California, 102; Oregon, 102

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Nov. 1, 1886

FOR PRESIDENT

GROVER CLEVELAND,
Of New York.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT.

ALLEN G. THURMAN,
Of Ohio.

A FINAL WORD.

We are in the midst of the last week of the campaign. It has been a memorable contest. It has been not only a discussion of principle, but it has been one in which the personal character and individuality of candidates has entered very largely. Tax reduction has appealed with singular force and power to the masses of the people. Monopoly has been assailed with effect, and relief for the people has been demanded with convincing force. Cleveland and Thurman have proven grand standard bearers. They have been an inspiration to the plain, common working people of the land, who have rallied with alacrity and enthusiasm to their support.

And in state affairs W. R. Burt has produced the profoundest impression upon the public mind of any candidate who has appeared before the people since the close of the war. His candidacy has been a continued ovation. His arraignment of the republicans for their reckless extravagance has been fully sustained by undeniable proof, and has fully convinced the farmers and working people of the state. As governor, if elected, he will introduce economy, accountability and business methods into state affairs. He stands pledged to execute the laws and preserve order by the processes of the laws and constitution of the state, and he will tolerate no Pinkerton thugs in the service of the state. The working people are especially liable to remember this fact at the polls.

Close up the ranks!

Move the lines steadily forward!

Let the slogan be, Cleveland, Burt and victory!

BURT'S DISCOVERY.

The Detroit Tribune does not deny the correctness of Mr. Burt's figures. It concedes that taxation has increased as stated by Mr. Burt. In fact it cannot do anything else but admit that his statements are true. But it says to make this talk of extravagance, as shown by the figures, of any force, it is necessary for Mr. Burt to go further and show what expenditures were extravagant and unnecessary.

When Mr. Burt becomes governor he will undertake the job of correcting extravagance. This he promises the people he will do, and that taxation shall be reduced, and this the Tribune knows Mr. Burt will do. He is that kind of a man. He will take hold of state affairs as he does his affairs, and he will soon institute economy and faithful attention to the public business. The army of clerks in the state house will be reduced for one thing and the dead beats and mere party claqueres that swarm there and eat the taxes of the people will be cleaned out if Mr. Burt and the gentlemen on the state ticket with him, are elected, as they should be, and as we believe they will be.—Grand Rapids Leader.

A MICHIGAN IRON MAN'S PLAIN TALK.

The communication which we publish in another column from secretary Noble, of the Elk Rapids Iron Company, will open the eyes not only of the advocates of a high protective tariff but of not a few friends of tariff reform. A more complete exposure of the humbug of the protective theory and its injurious effects in practice has never been published in Michigan; and its value is very greatly enhanced by the fact that it comes from a member of the class upon which the advocates of the protective theory rely—and usually in safety—for unhesitating support. When a practical iron maker seriously declares that pig iron in this country needs no protection and proves it by showing that the Michigan product can be sold abroad for a better price than the tariff secures for it here, the protection pig is up. For if pig iron not only needs protection but would be better off without it there is no sense in continuing the protective policy in respect to any American product. It is and always has been with the high protectionists, the symbolic infant and struggling industry; and if it is an adult which no longer struggles, all other industries can be trusted to go alone. The only field for a tariff is the raising of a revenue adequate to the needs of government economically administered.

We commend this letter of Secretary Noble's to the intelligent, thoughtful men of Michigan who are to give expression at the ballot box to their convictions as to the necessity of longer taxing themselves upon everything they eat, drink, wear, and use in order to foster the making of pig iron in this country. It is a letter which will bear careful and thorough examination, not only in respect to the matter stated as to protection but those also relating to wages. The suggestion for a gradual removal of the offensive taxes which have grown so burdensome is quite in line with the doctrine of President Cleveland's message and the platform of the National Democratic Convention.—Free Press.

FOR STATE SENATOR.

When a man is so thoroughly honest and unbiased that he will support a principle as far-reaching as is that of tariff reform, though it may take thousands of dollars out of his own pocket, we believe he is a proper man to entrust with the making of laws and regulations for the government of the people. Henry H. Noble of Elk Rapids, is that man. He is a beneficiary of a protected industry, yet he declares himself in sympathy with the advanced ideas of President Cleveland and the democratic platform. He has not cast his fortunes with other protected manufacturers in their efforts to continue the system of legalized robbery, but has boldly declared himself to be in sympathy with the necessities of the great mass of consumers of taxed goods in this United States and wants all to have an equal chance for their lives. He declares his belief in the doctrine of the greatest good to the greatest number, and if his vote should elect the next United States senator, we believe that the man so voted for will be a tariff reformer to the extent of removing every unnecessary burden from the people.

As a practical business man, he will look carefully to our local interests, and will be directly in line with Grover Cleveland and Wellington R. Burt, and will give a hearty support to their efforts for honest government and lower taxation.

Vote for Henry H. Noble for state senator.

FOR CONGRESS, PRIVATE HUDSON.

The soldier voters of the ninth district are this year deprived of the excuse that they are desirous of helping a comrade in arms when they vote for a republican for member of congress instead of a democrat. They have now a chance to decide whether they shall still keep on voting for the General, or whether they shall change their tactics, and now support Private Hiram B. Hudson, a man in every respect equal to the General, and in many respects his superior.

Hiram B. Hudson is a man of the people. He has been educated in the school of practical business. He is not a rich man, and his little wealth has been earned by hard, honest toil. He has been so closely identified with the working people that he knows their needs, and has in mind methods of securing results. The interests of his comrades in arms will be guarded as carefully as they can be guarded by the general, and the business elements will find him ever ready to consider their interests.

He deserves the support of every private soldier; of every friend of honest money, payable alike to the rich and to the poor; of everyone interested in honest government and low taxes; of every advocate of tariff reform; and of every democrat and greenbacker in the ninth district.

Vote for Hiram B. Hudson, of Mancelona.

THE BASIS OF DEMOCRATIC HOPE

The hope of democratic success in this campaign is based on the intelligence and morality of the people. If they can be brought to the polls undeterred by falsehood and unintimidated by bigotry and passion, with the one great issue of the campaign clearly before them they can not go wrong. The issue is unjust and unnecessary taxation against just and necessary taxation. Falsehoods may obscure it, prejudice may blind the eyes of the masses, and silly alarms may stampede thousands into political affiliations unnatural and short lived, but the issue itself cannot be changed.—Chicago Herald.

VICTORY IN THE AIR.

The fusionists are feeling happy and more confident of victory than ever. The tide is turning against the republicans. The argument is going against them and their desperate resort to forged extracts from English papers, their theft of private letters for publication, their free expenditure of money among strikers and ward bummers, their circulation of deceiving and misleading circulars their resorts to all sorts of dishonorable methods in politics to stop the rush of voters to the side of lower taxation and reform are but hastening the overwhelming defeat that awaits them.

There is a something in the air that is called victory that is just at this time filling the nostrils of the fusionists with its sweet odor. This change we believe the people will decide to give him the general management of affairs of state. He has many times proven himself to be the friend of the laboring man, and the laborer is not ungrateful, but will remember his friend at the polls. The workingmen can give Wellington R. Burt a glorious majority if they pull together, and we honestly believe they will do it.

DEMOCRATIC GAINS IN THE EAST.

The democratic gains of 2,324 in Newark N. J., over the vote of 1884 is justly regarded as assuming a democratic victory in that state in November. It is a labor center, and a republican majority of 1,519 in October, 1884, is turned into a democratic majority of 705 in October 1886. The workingmen could not be fooled with the "pauper labor" scare. Nor can they be elsewhere. New York, New Jersey and Connecticut may be set down as safe for Cleveland and tax reduction.

FREE TRADE IN LABOR.

There is no tariff on the laboring man's sweat. There is no tariff on the importation of men to come into open competition with the American workingman. The capitalist goes into the open markets of the world and employs labor at the lowest price for the American wage earner stands in that open market with the millions of men who are seeking a livelihood and there is no tariff that protects him.—New York Daily Graphic.

For First Place.

Great amount of engineering will be done by friends of candidates to secure for their man the first place on the ticket and the best man will probably secure the coveted place. Then if he is defeated by the majority of the people, the election is assured. Electric Bitters has been put to the front, its merits passed upon, has been insorsed, and unanimously given first place among remedies peculiarly adapted to the relief and cure of all diseases of Kidneys, Liver and Stomach. Electric Bitters, being guaranteed, is a safe investment. Price 50c. and $1 per bottle at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 3

FOR GOVERNOR,

WELLINGTON R. BURT, OF SAGINAW.

Wherever Wellington R. Burt has gone, the people have turned out in all sorts of weather to meet him and to hear him. They have heard him, and are satisfied that he is a man of integrity. He impresses his audiences everywhere that he will carry his business methods into the conduct of state affairs to the extent of making an appreciable reduction in state expenses and consequent taxation. He has made a most wonderful canvass, and on next Tuesday we believe the people will decide to give him the general management of affairs of state. He has many times proven himself to be the friend of the laboring man, and the laborer is not ungrateful, but will remember his friend at the polls. The workingmen can give Wellington R. LETTER FROM EDWIN S. NOBLE.

Startling Arraignment of the System of Robbery and Waste.

To the Editor of the Detroit Free Press.

As I am almost daily in receipt of letters of inquiry as to my views on the tariff question and its relation to the manufacture of pig iron, in which I have been engaged for the past 15 years, I prefer to answer publicly in the columns of your valuable paper.

As secretary and treasurer of the Elk Rapids Iron Company I have had nearly all the high tariff literature of the Iron and Steel association freely laid before me, and it is largely due to the arguments put forth by them that my dislikes for the methods proposed by the advocates of tariff for protection is due. These methods have made me bitterly opposed to it as a principle or in practice. Practically the effect of protection on the iron business has been to induce parties to build large and expensive plants for the manufacture of pig iron where neither the geographical location or natural advantages warranted any prospect of success, unless aided by some local means for enabling their owners to tax their neighbors. A proof of this, in July, 1882, according to the reports of the Iron and Steel association there were 686 blast furnaces completed, and 30 in process of construction, making a total of 716 furnaces in the United States. In November, 1887, there were but 582 completed and 30 in process of construction, a total of 612, showing that 104 entire plants had gone out of blast and been abandoned in five years—wiped out as effectually as if destroyed by fire or flood. Now any system that induces men to build any expensive works in a locality where they never would have been built but for artificial stimulus, appears to me to be a bad one, and if protection is to be worth anything it must be extended so as to enable the most hair brained idiot in maintaining his works in the worst location.

The facts are that while the people of the United States have for a long period of time paid an enormous tax to support the pig iron industry, at last the tariff is powerless to protect. Furnaces are abandoned because built in bad localities. Workmen are scattered and gone, and the result is disastrous alike to owners and operatives.

The law of the Almighty that no artificial stimulant can be applied to man without a corresponding depression applies equally to manufacturing; and we have for years been drunken with this seductive beverage called protection, and have now arrived at the period of head and heartache which follows as surely as does the shadow of the setting sun. The question becomes one of grave magnitude: Does it pay to have a season of debauching with its present delights, and suffer the depression which must come, and has come to the leading manufacturing industries of this nation? The furnace with which I am connected, and which cost me my entire this rule, as the most important question debated at the time of its construction was; Does the locality possess such advantages as to enable it to run at a profit should the tariff be removed—consequently I do not write from the standpoint of one who has been hurt by the evils which he endures, to such a degree as to dislike a system that once gave him large profits. This company can and does make pig iron at a profit, and has this very year shipped over 800 tons of pig iron to England, receiving therefor a price a trifle better than for any sold in this country, and so could they all had they built where a sound judgment (unbiased by the glamor which the protective system threw over the iron industries of this country) dictated.

As to the laborer, I say plainly that if the tariff on pig metal was $100 a ton and every cent of it went into my own pocket, I would hire my men in the open market as cheap as I could. If I wanted 200 and found 400 sitting about I should get them cheap. If 400 were wanted and but 200 to be had, I should pay them their price. There is in my opinion no more relation between the price of wages and a protective tariff than between it and the transit of Venus. Every manufacturer who is willing to tell the truth knows this. No man buys sugar of Jones for 10 cents that he can purchase of Johnson for 8—and the manufacturer does not live who pays more for labor than will secure it. It's not common sense to suppose he would. If he be philanthropically inclined he will do something very different—endow some institution for the benefit of his workmen or their families, or establish baths, reading rooms, etc., but never will he pay more for wages than supply and demand compel him to.

The difference in nanufacturers in this respect varies only in their having the courage to own or deny it.

In the particular branch of the iron industry in which I am engaged (charcoal pig iron), there were on September 1, 1886, 89 furnaces in blast and 47 out; and I state without fear of contradiction, that if the tariff was raised from its present rate of $6.72 per ton to $50 it would not alter the price of charcoal pig iron one penny for the better.

With a substantial reduction of the tariff and an enlarged free list for raw material I believe we could manufacture and sell pig iron to the whole world. I, as an American citizen, am not willing to own that with the best ores, best fuel and I believe best brains in the world, we cannot compete with the nations of the earth if allowed to do so untrammeled by legislation. Think of mortal man assuming to say whether $6.72 or any other sum is a just tax and the proper quantity to lay upon pig iron. Only the Almighty could determine a question so complex, and yet puny legislators with their diminutive intellects assume to say how many dollars and cents shall be a just measure to exact from sixty millions of people to enable less than one hundred and fifteen thousand to engage successfully in the business of making iron.

I have given but the practical side of the question. The moral side is equally appalling.

Manufactures are asked for frequent contributions to go to the congress of these United States, to be used as a corruptive fund to bribe indirectly men who should be above bribery, to favor this or that manufacturing enterprise. Is it then surprising that young men, instead of embarking in an enterprise with the idea that they will succeed by industry, the selection of a proper location, and attaining great excellence in the article they produce, come to believe that it is a "twist of the wrist," by ways that breed dishonor and a low ideal of the methods by which men attain wealth, that success is to be achieved. I maintain that excepting only the liquor traffic there is not such a demoralizing agent at work among our people to day as in tariff for protection. As great an evil as I deem it, still it is one of long duration, and its results are as far reaching that had I absolute power today, I would first fix the tariff where it now is on the ground that no amount of tinkering or alteration has or ever will make it just or equitable and then reduce it 5 per cent a year for 20 years, giving people time to adjust themselves and their business to a change of known quantity. Uncertainty is the worst business element in the whole scheme, and every manufacturer knows it. The fact that men turned to occupations which do not fit them for business life are sent to congress to dabble in so weighty a business matter, and that each session of congress has become like a terrible night mare for fear that this or that article will be put up or put down is in itself enough to condemn the whole theory of tariff for protection.

More "Treable" for Smith.

Mr. Nicholls.—The Sentinel of the 24th is out with something over a half column of editorial on the (to him) fertile subject of "Mr. Nicholls" and takes exceptions to my use of the words "slush" and "drivel" as applied to what he and his correspondent had to say to my communication to the Sentinel of the previous week. But did I not invite special attention to what the two said and is not that the general verdict. I was but recording such terms applied they must cease writing that which can only be so designated.

But the Sentinel says "the trouble with Mr. Nicholls is that he argues from false premises." Perhaps so, let us see. My premises were almost exclusively statistics from the U. S. Report on Commerce and Navigation for 1887, and I gave the authority in more than one instance.

Now here is a chance for a man of the editor's fine ability to render a great service to the nation, by showing the falsity of that report. You had better do it, Mr. Smith, because if you do not after proclaiming your ability so to do you will very properly be deemed unpatriotic and un-American.

It is in the next paragraph, however that Mr. Smith really shines, when he gets to talking about Sir John and Lord John and lots of other Johns, for there he thinks he is quite at home. Everybody who knows him knows this, while his step and manner and mien and cane all show that he thinks he is at home on that subject. And he is as he understands it; but he doesn't understand it. The nearest he gets to a Sir John or Lord John is in the exact adaptability of some of the derivatives of the cognate name Jack to him. For instance, Jackanapes fits him exactly, and no one will dispute his title to it. Then again, Jack——, beg pardon, Balaam's beast, is more euphonious, but it means the same, and it already attaches itself to him since the hint was given by one of our worthy citizens in the Journal a couple of weeks ago. Then again he is in a fair way to win the title, Jackpudding. Only write a little more on the subject of the tariff, Mr. Smith, and it is yours, sure. So you see he is not wanting in titles and if they are not Lord John or Sir John they are something, and positively more beautiful in this case; that is, if beauty be measured by fitness.

But he isn't slow on the wor d"bigot" when he asks "who is the bigot." The exact meaning of the word is a person unreasonably devoted to some party, denomination or creed; a blind zealot, and I ask "who is the bigot."

Then he charges that I have entered "the arena of public political discussion," and I suppose being of foreign birth, have no right there if my political views differ from his and Mr. Cutchson's, and I must therefore be subjected to a personal attack. He refers to the oath of allegiance I took and evidently thinks it incomplete because I was not sworn to support the views entertained by them. Now Mr. Smith it is in the province of editors, and especially of great o es like yourself, to teach wisdom; to lay bare the errors into which the "smaller fry" may happen to run, and to do it without hatred or malice. But you, Mr. Smith, have not even attempted to do this. I presented certain facts and figures from the best official sources that did not accord with the statements made by Mr. Cutchson in his speech at this village. You have not challenged them in any way, or even made pretense that the conclusions I drew from them were erroneous, but you have gone off on your hobby of hatred to the foreign born and displayed your petty malice by intimating that I am disloyal to the government. And besides that, Mr. Smith, you have had a correspondent to do meaner and dirtier work than yourself—to splutter and make up face and attempt to bring into derision a man you profess to have great respect for. Now don't you think you are rather snakey Mr. Smith, when you make this profession of respect? Other people I know think you are.

Years ago we expected nothing better from you, but now that you make an open profession of living a better life we have a right to expect something better. We have, at least, the right to expect that you will not use deceit and misrepresentations even in your newspaper, and we have a right to expect that you will not guarantee a statement as coming "from one of our most reputable citizens" when you know very well that the statement over the signature "A Protectionist," comes from a man who has no regard whatever for the truth and whose reputation in that respect is as bad as the county affords. Now, if I am wrong in this let your readers know who "A Protectionist" is and they shall judge between thee and me. You must not, however, infer from this that I would shrink from the charge of holding political views such as are imputed to me by "A protectionist"—that is, absolute free trade and direct taxation—if I entertained them, for I have great respect for the men who honestly entertain such opinions, just as I had great respect for the abolitionists many years ago, though I was only an anti-slavery man and never an abolitionist.

Now, Mr. Smith, do try and see yourself as others see you. Turn to the right again, that we may hear from your friends and neighbors more words of commendation and encouragement toward you and less of pollution and pity for you. Try again, Mr. Smith. JOHN NICHOLLS.

for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

"Four boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me of liver complaint."—E. L. Fulton, Hanover, N. H.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Burke, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—Jas. Quinn, 60 Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrived at this conclusion slowly after a faithful trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass. 1

A TARIFF FOR REVENUE.

CONGRESSMAN SPRINGER TELLS OF ITS MANY BENEFITS.

Sharp Criticism of Candidate Harrison's Plan to Reduce the Surplus—Advantages of the Free List—Sand Thrown into the Laborer's Eyes.

[Speech of Hon. Wm. M. Springer, of Illinois, delivered in Philadelphia.]

What is the condition of affairs that confronts us at this time? The people of the United States are paying into the Treasury from Federal taxation not more than $150,000,000 a year as an equivalent for the services of the Government consisting of three distinct departments. The coming session of Congress is one to repair, if possible, the injury done by the last session. It is a remarkable fact, if it cannot be called by any other name, that the problem of reduction is one which ought to be understood, and was expected by every citizen in the land, and was expected, too, assumed, when I read in the letter of acceptance of the man who is officially charged with some of the other problems of economic science.

This assumed surplus of the importer satisfies permits a like amount to be said to be the cost of the tariff to the consumer. Nothing of this kind can be indulged in without additional cost and heavy added, in many instances nothing is added at all, but in the majority of the manufacturing industries of the country a large portion of the tax is added to the price of the article to the cost of the domestic article as well as to the foreign. Therefore, in reducing the customs revenue we are only reduce the amount of taxes that is paid upon the imported article but consumed in the domestic article, and the increased value or cost that may have been added to the domestic article, and hence this defers a half or quarter of taxation which will afford substantial relief to the consumer of the country. Let me ask this question—are the Republican friends that we meet in this great Republican State prepared to say that they are giving to every people believed that the more they are taxed the richer they will get, that they are advocating a theory not sound, but yet violate all the properties and principles of trade? Are they prepared to say based upon that theory that the more labor is taxed the more wages workingmen will get. The Democratic party, in reducing these taxes proposes to take them off all one cent revenue and to place the remaining taxation so that it will take the necessary revenue of the people. The necessaries of life ought to be relieved from taxation, such as woolen, cotton goods, boots and shoes, sugar, and those articles which are most common in preserving their wives and children.

But our Republican friends, in the platform which they have adopted in Chicago, declare that rather than give up any part of the protective system they will abolish the duties upon the necessaries of life—they will abolish the duties on tea and coffee, and on those articles which imitate the only manufacture and consumer, but whisky also. (A voice: "Whisky is cheap enough.") Yes, it is cheap enough, I know of no Democrat in my acquaintance that complains of the price of whisky. The price of whisky remains taxed and $1,000,000 per month from that source rather than reduce it to a high tax upon woolen goods and the necessaries of life. We must have a reduction of taxes. Will you take the tax off your whisky? Will you take the tax off your whisky? Will you take the tax off your whisky?

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Boyne.

The political fight is hot but the outlook is frightening; ten days more and the common people will have spoken, we trust to the intelligence of the voters of Charlevoix county to cast their ballots on November 6, in the interest of the whole people.

F. E. Fogg Republican candidate for prosecuting attorney in a letter published in the Citizen says that as prosecuting attorney he shall strictly enforce the law in this county during his term of office. Oh Frank! Frank! are you not a leetle too previous?"

The votes have not been counted yet.

The county property was moved into the new court house last week and our county officials will have comfortable quarters henceforth.

Mrs. Charles Shepard of Manton is visiting relatives and friends in Boyne this week.

Mrs. Harry Russell is on the sick list.

The earnestness with which our esteemed Supervisor seeks after the true position of fog (Fogg) on the liquor question, is only equaled by that of the mother in the old story in which a neighbor informed her that one of her three boys had stolen his horses' bridle. She felt confident of their innocence, and said she would prove it to him, thereupon she called in the boys and questioned them severally, and upon each stoutly denying his guilt she turned in triumph to their accuser, saying, "you see they are innocent, I told you so."

Mrs. George Bailey is sick with mumps.

Quite a number of our citizens went with the excursion to the south part of the state and returned well pleased with their trip.

F. D. Phillips spoke on Saturday evening to a highly interested enthusiastic audience, giving the record of republican legislation in the interest of the monied classes, and showing conclusively the interest of all laboring men and farmers to support President Cleveland in the coming election.

Blaine Deplumed. The Citizen says "Mr. Norton has done more hard work for the republican party than any other half dozen men in it." Well, who would have thought it! The plume will certainly have to change hats, as per Citizen, and we congratulate the chief of the big four on his promotion.

Whither Is It Drifting?

The Wisconsin Independent, (prohibition) says that the republican national committee have issued a document which exerts itself to show that the republican party is in full accord with the liquor interests, that their "temperance and morality" plank means nothing, and that the democratic party is the most hostile to the liquor traffic. It speaks of the Bootle resolution as:

"That small, sickly and weak addendum which the republicans tacked on to their platform as a temperance plank."

In another place this document says: "The Democratic states of Missouri and Texas consider brewers and saloon keepers as outlaws. These brewers and saloon keepers would consider themselves lucky could they live under the same laws and carry on their business under the same conditions as the saloon-keepers in the republican states of Illinois and Wisconsin."

"The moral of this is, that the German voters in each state must all themselves with the party which is the least infected with this temperance contagion' and in Missouri, so far as national politics is concerned, that party is the republican. It had the courage to declare in 1872, 'We oppose prohibition,' and to this day it has not retreated from that position."

"President Cleveland has within a year gone over completely into the camp of the prohibitionists. He has sworn off drinking, and the prohibitionists have paraded him all over the country as one of their shining examples. Cleveland has suppressed a respectable saloon, which was on the road leading to his country home near Washington."

Whither is this great moral republican party drifting, that its managers will utter such sentiments as these? Can christian temperance people find better reasons than these for supporting Grover Cleveland and the democratic party?

High Tariff and Low Wages.

The Torch Lake (Mich) Times, located near the great copper mines of that state, complains that although the companies are earning from 100 to 200 per cent more than when copper was selling at ten cents a pound —chiefly by the aid of the French copper trust—it has yet to hear of a single instance where wages has been advanced. At the same time the Michigan journal points out the necessaries of life are in sympathy with the advance in the copper market—flour has gone up by $2.70 to $3 a barrel, lard has advanced 40 per cent; everything but wages is on the upgrade.

In connection with the above facts an eastern journal calls attention to the condition of the iron-ore men in Pennsylvania. Twelve years ago they made from $2 to $2.25 a day. Since then their wages have been cut down, until at the present time their pay is from 60 to 85 cents a day.

The strange thing about this fright ful decline in miners' wages is that five years ago the duty on iron ore was raised. Previous to 1883 it was 20 per cent. By an act of that year it was placed at 75 cents a ton. This according to the official reports of the treasury department, is equivalent to 40 per cent. Nevertheless, the protected iron masters are constantly claiming that high wages and high duties go together.

It is a well-known fact that the various trusts organized so numerously during the last few years have succeeded in raising the prices of the products manufactured by them. Yet no one has heard that the wages of the artisans engaged in the manufacture of these products have been raised.—Chicago News.

The reason for Blaine's declaration that trusts are "private affairs" has not transpired. Candidate Morton's firm of British bankers has under taken to put the great salt trust on its feet financially, and Blaine naturally felt that the ticket must be shielded if possible from the adverse criticism which the disclosure of that fact would provoke.—Free Press.

When the Hon. Robert M. Morse, Jr., Massachusetts, heretofore one of the staunchest republicans in that state came out for Cleveland he declared that it was not he but the republican party that had changed views. The appearance of Ben Butler on the republican stump gives force to Mr. Morse's observation. It is only a few years since the republican party in Massachusetts existed for the sole purpose of sitting down on Butler.—Free Press.

Just Lovely.

ANOTHER CONVINCER.

John Nicholls Repels Ridicule With Argument.

ERTON JOURNAL:—Well, well, Mr. Editor, the man that I was obliged to name "the little star" because he has appeared over that signature, has multiplied him-self by 3, and last week and this appears as three stars, and tells us about "giving away his snap" and about the mountain and the mouse, and about his going to Dan Rice's circus when Dan was young, and that he learned there that the milky whey was mouldy when he was a boy, and so on and so forth. And he makes it quite evident that he thinks all this kind of talk relates to the tariff question and especially to that part of Mr. Cutcheon's speech on that subject. It cannot be denied that what he has said is fully equal to what many of the leaders of his party have said on the same subject, and yet to ordinary minds it is not at all clear that such talk bears any relation whatever to it.

One thing, however, is clear and that is that the person who appears as "the three stars" is an old man, because he talks of going to Dan Rice's circus so many year's ago. We had suspected as much before, indeed we knew that what appeared over that signature was the work of either a very old man or a very young child. Nearly every one I think who has taken the pains to read what he has written for the Sentinel, has come to that conclusion. It being then from an old man we will treat his two and a quarter columns with due respect by noticing them a little.

First, then, the old gentleman seems terribly mystified over the importations of salt,it has bothered him from the beginning; he has talked all sorts of ways about it; his newspaper has said English salt and he can't bring his mind to believe that we receive salt also from France and Germany and the West Indies and Canada. Don't be so set in your ways old gentleman, make up your mind to learn something and to that end get the government report of exports and imports, which will make it clear to you.

Then he refers to sugar; he has talked a great deal about that, too; his paper has told him that Mr. Havemeyer the New York refiner was before the committee that framed the Mills bill and that on his account sugar was transferred to the dutiable list. He admits that Mr. Mills the chairman of that committee denies it, but says the Congressional Record "doubled the matter against him. Wonder what sort of a paper he thinks the record is? Won't you please tell me where in the Congressional Record I can find what you say is there—either the page or the day of the month will do. I have the Record, and would be glad to learn.

But don't you think you are giving away your whole case by talking as you do? You know that you and the stump speakers and writers of your party have been constantly claiming that the Mills bill was framed by southerners and almost wholly in their own interest—they are ranted northern salt and southern sugar for months, yet now you claim that the original bill put sugar on the free list and that it was returned to the dutiable list at the request of a northern man, Mr. Havemeyer, and you also now say that the bill was not sectional but in the interest of a northern trust,—that is, Mr. Havemeyer's "trust."

Why, what ails you old gentleman, for I find you not only say it in one paragraph but insist upon it in the next that these southerners that framed the bill put sugar on the free list. Better be careful or somebody will be laughing at you.

But I am so glad you quoted from the republican platform, especially the part of it which favors the entire repeal of the internal taxes rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system. That is just what the platform said, and just what many (not all I am glad to know) of the republican's men. "The internal taxes" are the taxes on whiskey and tobacco in all its forms and in all its processes of manufacture and sale. So that the republican party is pledged to remove all those taxes rather than take off any of the 40 per cent tax on cotton goods or 50 per cent on earthenware and china; or 58 per cent on glassware; or 32 per cent on tin plates (although we do not make a plate), or 57 per cent on manufactures of iron and steel; or 20 to 100 per cent on rice; or 40 to 50 per cent on salt; or 72 per cent on sugar; or 67 per cent on woolen goods; or 30 to 40 per cent on wool.

Then the old gentleman in the next paragraph quotes from a letter only a few days old that he says is from Ben Butler, and he calls it his Boston letter "The letter makes Mr. Butler say: "I suppose it is not generally known that the Mills bill takes the tax off the retail trade of liquor by the repeal of the special tax on retail dealers," etc., etc. What a splendid compliment that is to the republican members of the two houses of congress, and to the committee of conference. The Mills bill was introduced last April, and has ever since been hotly discussed both in and out of congress, and yet on the 24th of Oct., after congress has adjourned, Ben Butler is made to say he supposes a very important provision of it, that involved many millions of dollars a year "is not generally known."

But our desire to please the old gentleman must not cause us to further trespass upon the readers by quoting too many of his platitudes.

His concluding seems to be about like this: He reads some small-caliber stupid partisan paper, and has worried himself into a belief that anyone who holds views different from that paper is foolish and bad. Then he has great dislike to persons of foreign birth, and great admiration for the monopolists and "trusts" that are making themselves rich by making the people at large poor. This is plainly seen in many ways, but especially by his anger at the present administration because they would not allow the Roach shipbuilding concern to rob the government as previous administrations had done. The concern became very rich by not building their ships according to contract, and it seemed hard to them, as it does to him, that they should be required to do as they agreed.

The old gentleman instead of trusting to be fooled by his advisers has been trying to store them away in his head until that has become much swollen and in a complete jumble—a kind of incoherent buzz like a disturbed bumble bee's nest, and that buzz he believes to be inspiration. Possibly he may be a very good man although his poor morality does not seem to indicate it. He prides himself on his liberal creed, he would not scoff at foreigners as he does if he accepted the invitation to look himself in the face he would have judged of that as well as of his virtues; quite likely however, he has good reasons for preserving his incog.

Indorsing his judgment in that respect we ask our readers not to be inquisitive.

"Good by, my lover, good by."

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient. A pamphlet containing full information is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada, mention this paper. Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 1y

Their Business Booming.

Probably no medicine has caused a greater revival of trade at F. G. Hines and Co.'s drug store or has their goods been in better demand than Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted.

IMPORTANT COURT DECISION.

The Drummer Cannot Be Forced to Take Out a State License.

In an opinion rendered by Justice Bradley in the Drummer Tax case of William G. Asher versus The State of Texas, the Supreme Court of the United States has declared unconstitutional all State laws imposing a license tax upon commercial travelers not residents of the State imposing the tax. Asher was a resident of New Orleans, and while selling goods by sample in Texas was arrested and fined for violation of the State law making it a misdemeanor for any person to do business as a commercial traveler without having first taken out an occupation tax. Asher contested the constitutionality of this statute, taking the ground that it was repugnant to the clause of the Constitution giving Congress the exclusive right to regulate interstate commerce. The State court decided against Mr. Asher appealed the case to the Supreme Court, which gave a decision in his favor.

THE DEAD ANARCHISTS.

Their Memories To Be Honored on November 10 in St. Louis and Elsewhere.

Saturday, Nov. 10, a great memorial gathering of all the anarchist organizations will be held in St. Louis, Mo. Similar gatherings will be held in New York, Chicago, Milwaukee, and other cities, in commemoration of the anarchists hanged at Chicago. A play has been written for the occasion which will be performed by actors belonging to the society. The play is entitled "Innocents Condemned to Death," and depicts the scenes at the Haymarket riot and the mocking trial and condemnation of the accused. The money raised at the meetings will be donated to the families of the anarchists executed at Chicago.

MET THEIR DEATH.

Henry M. Stanley Probably Slain, with Many of His Expedition.

A London telegram says that the Echo du Nord states that the President of the Geographical Society of Lille has received news from Africa that Henry M. Stanley has been massacred, with all his expedition excepting two men. The Secretary of the Emin Bey expedition had received no news of the reported massacre, and entirely discredits it, but he added: "If by the end of February Emin Pasha should send letters to Europe without announcing the arrival of Stanley at Wadelai, then I will feel there is reason to be anxious about his fate."

ENTRAPPED AND MASSACRED.

Revolting Story of Atrocities and Cannibalism from Africa.

Advices from the Bonny River, Africa, give a revolting story of savage atrocities and cannibalism. The Okrikan tribe, in revenge for some injury, invited a party of Ogonis to a friendly palaver, and then entrapped and massacred them. A cannibal festival of the most horrible and indescribable character followed. Then an attack was made upon the undefended villages, and the most barbarous outrages were committed. It is estimated that over 150 persons, including women and children, were killed and eaten.

A TRAIN ROBBERY FRUSTRATED.

One of the Plotters Arrested for Horse-stealing Discloses the Plot.

James Reissaque, who, with Calvin Moore, was arrested in a notorious district known as "Tonk-a-lua," on the State line, near Kansas City, has confessed to the charge of horse-stealing. He also said that a plot had been made by them and others besides himself and Moore to rob an outgoing Santa Fe train between Tonk-a-lua and Argentine, Kan.

DAVID DAVIS' WIDOW WEDDED.

Led to the Altar in North Carolina by Ex-Congressman Wharton J. Green.

At Fayetteville, N. C., Wharton J. Green, ex-Congressman from the Third North Carolina District, and Mrs. Addie E. Davis, relict of Vice President David Davis, were married. The bride, whose maiden name was Burr, was a native of Congressman Green's first wife, and was married to Mr. Davis at his house early in the spring of 1883. The wedding was a quiet one.

DISTRESS WROUGHT BY FLAMES.

Fifteen Hundred Persons Rendered Homeless in Hoesch, Germany.

A disastrous fire occurred at Hoesch, near Dueren, Germany. Two hundred houses were destroyed and 1,500 persons were rendered homeless and destitute. Great distress prevails.

Commemorating Bartholdi's Statue.

A banquet was given at the Hotel Continental, in Paris, to commemorate the dedication of the statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," which was given by the French people to the United States. Mr. McLane, the American Minister, and M. Gobiet, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, were among the speakers.

The Equal Rights Candidate.

Twenty-one women in convention at Boston, Mass., nominated Miss Alice D. Stockton, of Woburn, as candidate of the Equal Rights party for Governor of Massachusetts. The candidate is twenty-six years of age.

Chief Arthur Honored.

At the meeting of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers at Richmond, Va., F. M. Arthur was re-elected Chief, and Mr. Ingraham Secretary of the immense order of the brotherhood. G. B. Doherty, of Massachusetts, was elected Grand Chaplain, and W. B. Healy, of Bloomington, Ill., Grand Guide.

Dragged by a Runaway Horse.

William Rostwick of Rochester, N. Y., aged ten, went out riding with two companions. His horse shied at some object and ran away. The boys foot caught in the stirrup and he dragged a quarter of a mile before the horse was stopped. Rostwick was killed. His body was horribly bruised.

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

A General Increase in Bank Clearings Noted by Dun & Co.

In their weekly review of trade for last week R. G. Dun & Co. say:

Outside New York there is a general increase in clearings over the week of the last year of about 12 per cent., but substantially the entire increase of 30 per cent. at New York is made up of unusual speculation in stocks. Probably the gains of 7 per cent. at Philadelphia and 6 per cent. at Boston are mainly of the same nature, and the speculation in wheat and other products swells the clearings at Chicago 40 per cent. and New York, on the other hand, a decrease of 20 per cent. appears, which the difference in speculative activity does not fully explain. At all ports the imports for the month of September show a decrease of about 10 per cent. while exports show $40,000,000 more, so that the excess of imports over exports of merchandise is only $12,000,000. But prices of breadstuffs decline so much as to promise a free movement, and eight months have taken more than $50,000,000 more than last year, and nearly $100,000,000 more than two years ago. The inquiry for good money continues, and is not eased in Europe. Less trade activity is noted at Pittsburgh, a quiet trade and slow collections at Louisville, and slower collections at St. Paul, with more careful scrutiny of accounts by jobbers. Business at Cincinnati is reported to rather hesitant, and the money market tends toward stringency. Considerable liquidation appears at Atlanta, but increasing cotton receipts promise a release of greater activity there and at Memphis. Business at Nashville is reported the slackest literally with funds, making it out during the past week $1,000,000 less than it has taken in, the excess being in silver certificates.

FEUD BETWEEN FAMILIES.

The Terry and Wagoner Factions in Arkansas Start Another Outbreak.

S. H. Gilmore, representing an Eastern wholesale firm, has just returned to St. Louis from the Kings River District in Northern Arkansas. He reports a fresh outbreak of the Terry-Wagoner feud in that section. Last January three of the Terry brothers and two of the Wagoners, father and son, were killed. Recently Sam Mooks, a cousin of the Wagoners, went to Indian Territory, and during his absence John and Miles Terry brought a charge of horse-stealing against him, and secured a special appointment to go after him. They captured and killed Mooks, resisting he had attempted to escape. The Wagoner faction was retaliated by killing Miles Terry and fatally wounding John. Cull Garrett, of the Wagoner crowd, was killed, and Cyrus W. Davis seriously wounded during the fight.

SWITCHED INTO THE RIVER.

A Northern Pacific Express Train Wrecked on Crow Wing Bridge.

A Brainerd (Minn.) special says: The Portland west-bound fast express on the Northern Pacific Road was wrecked at Crow Wing River. The train was going about forty miles an hour and ran into an open switch near the east end of the bridge. The engine broke loose from the tender and the tender, mail-car, and two baggage cars went over the embankment into the river. The engine, with the engineer and fireman, crossed the bridge on the ties, but left them at the west end, and, tumbling over half buried itself in the embankment, killing the fireman, Alex. Brown, and severely injuring Engineer Swart. Clinton Mayne, a member of Company K, Third Regiment, who was riding on the front end of the mail-car, was so badly injured that he will die. The passengers had a narrow escape.

AN UNHAPPY QUEEN.

KING MILAN FORMALLY GETS A DIVORCE FROM NATALIE.

The Decree Promulgated in a Pastoral Issued by the Metropolitan Theodosius, the Head of the Church—It Will Probably Cost Milan His Throne.

The Official Journal publishes a pastoral signed by the Metropolitan Theodosius, in which he says that in the exercise of his power as a leader of the Servian Church, and with virtue of rights consecrated by ancient canons, he annulls the marriage of King Milan and Queen Natalie, and declares that it is no longer existent.

King Milan, in a letter to the Metropolitan, written previous to the issuance of the decree, after pointing out that the ordinary laws of this country could not be applied to the sovereign, who stood above them, demanded that the Metropolitan avert the danger threatened for the Servian state and dynasty by dissolving his Majesty's marriage with Queen Natalie.

The gravity of the Metropolitan's act in granting the dissolution of the marriage is fully appreciated throughout the world. No such ecclesiastical decree has been promulgated since Napoleon's divorce from Josephine.

It is hardly two months since Queen Natalie wrote thus to the Metropolitan, who is absolute head of the Servian Church:

"The King writes to me saying that he has taken steps to secure a divorce. Neither the canon nor the civil law permits divorce without sufficient causes. Not knowing of any in our case, I, for my part, shall never consent. Let his Majesty do what he wishes."

The Metropolitan did not deign to reply. The Queen telegraphed:

"The journals to-night mentend that I am divorced. I cannot credit it, for such a decree can be pronounced only by a Queen Natalie, one of the interested parties, who has not received any citation whatever. Up to the present day I have not a single paper about it."

The Metropolitan briefly replied:

"His Eminence the Bishop of Nisch will present you with a reply to your telegram."

And the Queen answered:

"I must inform you that I shall not receive the Bishop of Nisch before I know before what ecclesiastical court a demand for divorce has been brought. I shall never do anything to reproach myself with I am not afraid of anything. I, for my part, have committed no crime. Let not forget that at your age the hour cannot be far off when you must appear before the Sovereign Judge, and do not burden your soul with your sin."

To this the Metropolitan replied:

"Until now no decree of a divorce has been presented to the Synod, the competent authority of the independent autocephalous Servian Church."

And the Queen sent her last despairing message:

"The Holy Synod not being qualified to connect itself with divorce, I protest energetically against the iniquity and illegality."

These letters will go into history. They contrast strikingly with correspondence between King Milan of Servia and the Metropolitan Michael, the latter addressing the King as "Most Gracious Sire," and the King addressing the Metropolitan as "Most Reverend Lord." The contrast between the two is complete. The ancient prelate, in the language of diplomacy, the moderns have porcelain. But although there was this difference of the glass, the ancient prelate did not differ so greatly as might be supposed from those of modern times, their blues and greens were of compounds of copper, their violet was gold, their yellow was silver, their white was salt of tin, while they used lead, cobalt, and other materials well known to modern potteries.

KING MILAN AND QUEEN NATALIE.

Magical Illusions.

Other pleasing illusions can be produced by art and of chemicals. In wetting a piece of the boat sugar with phosphorized ether, and throwing it into a bowl of water, the surface of the water will become luminous in the dark, and by gently blowing upon it fantastic undulations will be formed, which illuminate the air above the fluid to a considerable distance. The water must be rendered blood warm. If to phosphorized ether be applied to the hand or other warm objects it renders them luminous in the dark.

Fix three pins in the table and lay a piece of money upon them; then place a heap of flour of sulphur below the money, and another heap above it, and set fire to them. When the fume is extinct you will find that a thin plate of metal has been detached from the coin, thus making two out of one.

Dissolve camphor in spirits of wine, and deposit the vessel containing the solution in a close closet where the spirits of wine will evaporate. If any one enters the room with a candle, the air will inflame, making an effect as bright and sudden as lightning, and there is no danger whatever from this spectacular effect.

A pretty trick is performed in this manner: Take a pan, dip it into glycerine and scatter any arbitrary number whatever—say, 1630—and let the pan remain. You must have a confederate, and, on joining the company, suggest that some one write some number. The confederate will quickly respond, writing the figures already on your arm on a piece of paper. Let him exhibit it to the crowd, and burn it on a plate. After telling the company that you propose to make the identical figures appear on your arm, rub the ashes of the paper on the spot where you had previously put the glycerine, and you will have the numbers of your confederate's marked down on your arm in very bold letters.

Work and Play for Children.

Perhaps some mother whose children are still in babyhood, or whose exhausting demands on her strength and time and patience, may take courage to know that I find it easier all the way up.

With a heart full of love for little children, still I do think they are relentlessly selfish by nature, and needed foster or allow their natural propensity to tyrannize.

Big boys and girls, 6 and 8 years old, learned to be amused, when too tired to be amused, when too tired to give themselves food and clothing.

Lead glazing was very common among the early potteries.

Delft ware was derived from Majorca, an island which formerly had extensive potteries which turned out exceedingly valuable wares. The potteries of this island invariably glazed their ware first with a white glaze, which was burned in, then painted with pictures, generally in all the colors

Japanese Force also—Exquisite Pieces from Far Away Ch-na—The Antiquity of Pottery—Modern Makes That Are Very Valuable.

There is a marked difference between pottery and porcelain. The latter is composed of coarse clay, glazed with some substance entirely foreign and distinct from itself; the latter is made of materials that readily combine with these substances, and, as the body of the piece and the glaze are practically one and the same, the two are fused together. The ancients, in their rude and primitive way, the moderns have porcelain. But although there was this difference of the glaze, the ancient potters did not differ so greatly as might be supposed from those of modern times, their blues and greens were of compounds of copper, their violet was gold, their yellow was silver, their white was salt of tin, while they used lead, cobalt, and other materials well known to modern potteries.

MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS.

EVENTS AND INCIDENTS THAT HAVE LATELY OCCURRED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties, and General News Notes.

—A biological laboratory, with State Veterinarian E. A. Grange at its head, has been established in Lansing. The doctor's office has been at the Agricultural College heretofore, but the equipments there are insufficient, and it has been decided to locate the new laboratory at Lansing. A large order has been sent in for apparatus. The laboratory will be conducted in connection with the veterinary department of the State Experimental Station, and will be devoted to practical experiments and the study of micro-organisms.

—Recently, says the Grass Lake News, while a small knot of men were talking together at the Central Depot in Jackson, the peep of a chicken was distinctly heard. Thereupon one of the number opened his vest, and in an inner pocket was revealed a chicken just hatched and still partly in its shell. He reported that he had carried the egg for twenty-one days on a $10 wager that it would hatch from the natural warmth of his body.

—The Supreme Court holds that where an unmarried voter sleeps in one precinct and eats in another he must register and vote in the precinct where he eats. This is a decision as important bearing on local elections hereafter.

—"The Sou" line has issued a new "Michigan" freight tariff, which has gone into effect, raising rates from New York and Philadelphia to Minneapolis and other points.

—There is a locomotive engineer running on the Michigan Central Road who is a perfect double for the late Gen. Sheridan, and the striking likeness is remarked by every one who sees his face at the cab window or notices him oiling up his pet engine. His name is Brown—Jack Brown every one calls him—says the Kalamazoo Telegraph. He has been connected with the Michigan Central for thirty-five years. He is a stout, jolly, redbeard man, and he would create a sensation wherever the lamented Gen. Sheridan is known if he would walk through the streets in his uniform.

—Fred Mitchell, aged 42, was found dead hanging in his barn at Reed City. He leaves a widow and three children. No cause is known.

—Robert Henderson has an exhibition in our office, says the Petoskey Democrat, a potato that weighs just exactly three pounds. This we believe to be the largest potato on record in Emmet County. If there are any heavier, we would like to have them shown up. Mr. Henderson says that he could pick out 100 potatoes out of a load he had in market that would weigh 600 pounds, or ten bushels. How is Emmet County on potatoes?

—The weevil is reported in Macomb County clover.

—The Jackson Courier knows of a laundry in that city where every person from the proprietor down, chews gum.

—The experiment of giving the scholars of the Congregational Sunday School at Clinton five cents to spend as they pleased, so that value in seeds, results in their gathering in a harvest that amounted to over $100. The money will be devoted to missionary purposes.

—In the Circuit Court at Adrian, Judge Lane sentenced Minnie Conkling to three years and eight months and Mary Pace to eight months, in the Detroit House of Correction. The girls were the last of the six industrial school incendiaries.

—A woman named Mrs. Burr, who lives in Copley, two miles from Luther, while trying to preparing the body of a child that had died of typhoid fever, for burial, contracted blood poisoning through a blister on her hand, which broke while she was working. Her arm and body swelled to a large size, and it was with difficulty that her life was saved.

—The logging engine on the Wilson, Luther and Wilson Road, at Luther, ran off the track and became completely wrecked. A brakeman named John Ripley was seriously injured.

—Chief Engineer Geo. Cox will make a new survey for the Soo and St. Ignace Railway as soon as the snow is on the ground, says the Soo News, making it this time a direct line between the two places. The construction of the road depends largely upon the attitude of the people along the line. Mr. Cox has been promised much of the right of way, including an entire mile into the Soo. Unless the same liberality is shown by others who are to be benefited, it is not likely that the road will be pushed ahead. It is expected that St. Ignace will exhibit a more generous spirit now than when the project was agitated last winter. A direct line to St. Ignace will materially benefit both towns, and it will give the Michigan Central and Grand Rapids and Indiana an outlet. There are enough capitalists interested in the project to make it go, but the right of way must be secured. A new charter will be taken out if the direct route is chosen.

—Pine Lake Alpena shipped by water 1,175,000 feet of lumber, 450,000 shingles, 100,000 lath, 6,000 cedar railway ties, and forty cords of cedar. Eight cargoes went to Toledo, five each to Sandusky, Buffalo, and Cleveland, three each to Detroit and Chicago, and one to Wilson, N. Y.

—When Art Lasso removed from Brooklyn to Hudson he took with him a sitting hatch which stuck to its eggs the entire trip, and in spite of the cold weather and the long ride hatched out every egg a day or so after its arrival in Hudson.

—A boy named Gunk had his nose torn off at Sterling by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge.

—A Roscommon County farmer who buried a lot of watermelons to see if he couldn't keep 'em till next spring, has been obliged to do the job four times in order to hide their place of concealment from his frolicsome neighbors.

—Miss Rose Rice, of Morenci, pared a bushel of apples in two minutes and eighteen seconds.

—The convicts at the prison certainly have no reason to complain of the fare provided by the State, which, the Jackson Patriot says, has been gradually brought up to a condition much better than many poor families of Jackson are enabled to sustain. Steward E. F Willets gave a Patriot reporter the bill of fare for each day, together with an idea as to how much is required per month, which is published: Sunday—Breakfast, rained hominy and butter, rice, coffee and sugar; dinner, roast beef, potatoes, two kinds of vegetables, and gravy; supper, bread and milk and tea. Monday—Breakfast, mutton stew, potatoes and onions, bread and coffee; dinner, corned beef, two kinds of vegetables and gravy; supper, bread and coffee, and occasionally onions or apples. Tuesday—Breakfast, bread, butter and coffee; dinner, pork and beans. Wednesday—Breakfast, the same as Monday; dinner, fresh beef and bean soup. Thursday—Breakfast, corned beef, oat meal and syrup; dinner, the same as on Tuesday. Friday—Breakfast, hash; dinner, the same as Monday. Saturday—Breakfast, dried beef stewed in milk and potatoes; dinner, same as Wednesday. Bread is served each day except Sunday. Each convict is required to eat mush and milk twice a week, at which time they are not given meat, but get bread and vegetables. On Thursday the men who take mush are given corn bread and fresh gingerbread or apple jelly. The cost per diem per man during the month of September was 9.8 cents, a total cost during the month of $2,173.22 and an average per day of $72.44. During the month of September the requirements of the culinary department of the prison were as follows: Flour, 27,432 pounds; meal, 1,400 pounds; milk, 35,290 pounds; coffee, 1,000 pounds; sugar, 1,200 pounds; beef, 7,840 pounds; pork, 800 pounds; pepper, 96 pounds; oatmeal, 400 pounds; tea, 50 pounds; butter, 600 pounds; saleratus, 20 pounds; mustard, 40 pounds; mutton, 2,362 pounds; dried beef, 1,411 pounds; cabbage, 70 pounds; potatoes, 209 bushels; beans, 31 bushels; tomatoes, 83 bushels; beets, 10 bushels; syrup, 111 gallons; cucumbers, 44 gallons; salt, 6 barrels; squash, 150; green corn, 1,552 dozen ears; rice, 190 pounds; honey, 30 pounds; pickles, 24 gallons.

—Mrs. Samantha Streeter, of Spring Arbor, who was robbed of $1,150 in gold, has offered a reward of $50 for the arrest of Detective Allen and Police Detective Snyder for the robbery. The money, of course, will be returned to the owner. It is estimated that in Leelanaw Township alone the potato crop this year will exceed 150,000 bushels.

—The Manchester High School has a statistical genius who finds the fallest scholars in that school to be 5 feet 11 inches and a girl each being that high. The twenty-three boys aggregate 127 feet 10½ inches in height, and 2,909 pounds in weight, while the twenty-seven girls aggregate 142 feet 9 inches in height, and weigh 2,142 pounds. The average age of the scholars is 16 years and 7 months. The Prohibitionists have four boys and four girls, the Republicans nine boys and seven girls, and the Democrats ten boys and fifteen girls.

—The Smead system of ventilation will be put into the Clinton school-house at a cost of $700.

—Over 200,000 bushels of onions have been raised in the Detroit River district this year. The market was overstocked.

—Several of the leading doctors of Alpena have organized a hospital, known as the "Lake Huron Hospital and Medical and Surgical Institute."

—The East Saginaw Board of Education has $39,111.55 laid up for a rainy day.

—Friend Van Every, P. J. Norris, and D. B. McKenzie were seen at Detroit and at Jackson, in Farmer's restaurant, by escaping water gas used in cooking. When discovered they were nearly dead, but will recover.

—A Medina girl can beat all the boys climbing hickory trees and gathering nuts. She recently made an ascension of fifty feet in a tree and gathered five bushels of hickory nuts. The eagle and plucky young lady deserves to get up in the world, and she undoubtedly will.

MOISTURE IN HOUSES.

A Bit of Scientific Information for the Housekeeper's Benefit.

It is stated that the sudden change of the weather recently, from cold to warm and damp, has caused the thousands of dollars of damage to wall paper and other articles in houses. Of course it has, and it is so simply because many people do not study the plainest common sense principles in airing their houses.

One evening lately people went to bed with a basis for extra blankets because of the sudden and severe chill in the atmosphere. When they rose in the morning, their bedrooms, parlors, dining rooms, etc., were yet chilly from the cold of the previous day, while the outside atmosphere had suddenly become not only warm, but hot and oppressive with dampness.

Incomfortable people opened their windows and doors because the weather was warm, forgetting that the excessive moisture in the atmosphere would rush in with the warm air and swiftly deposit itself on the cold walls, furniture, etc., and penetrate wall papers, curtains, bedding, and everything within reach that presented a surface colder than the air that carried it into the house.

Of course the moisture loosened and discolored paper; made curtains limp as a wash rag; made beds damp and musty, and generally spoiled everything that water could spoil; but all could have been avoided by following the plain, common sense rule of not opening houses suddenly to suddenly changed atmosphere, carrying an excessive quantity of moisture.

A pitcher filled with cold water and placed in a room in summer will "sweat"—at least that is what it is commonly called. The pitcher does not sweat, because it is not porous and cannot sweat; but the cold water inside of it chills the outer surface, and, as soon as the outer surface of the pitcher becomes cooler than the atmosphere in the room, the moisture of the air will be precipitated upon the pitcher in drops.

This simple illustration should teach all housewives to avoid suddenly opening rooms in a house when the outside atmosphere is warmer than the temperature of the rooms and full of moisture. In all such cases the wall paper, furniture, etc., being cooler than the outside air, will speedily have the moisture of the atmosphere precipitated upon them, and it will require days to restore the house to the dry condition that is essential to health.

There are no arbitrary freaks in the laws which govern the atmosphere surrounding us, and there is nothing abstruse in mastering them. Warm, damp air will ever precipitate its moisture in houses or elsewhere whenever it comes in contact with anything chilled by a cooler atmosphere, and that is the whole story. The only thing to be added is that, when people have been ignorantly or negligently allowed their houses to become damp, they should light fires and dry them as promptly as possible.—Philadelphia Times.

A Story of the Cid.

A strange story is told of the Cid. He was considered invincible by the Moors, and brave as were the turbaned warriors they never could withstand his redoubtable champion of Spain. In the midst of a campaign the Cid died. Grief and dismay fell over the entire Spanish soldiery, and as an attack from the Moors was imminent, the fear of defeat increased their sorrow. At length it was resolved to place the dead man, dressed in complete armor, with his helmet on and visor down, upon his war mule, and thus, following once more their leader, the Spanish knights rode against the foe. The dread Cid, though powerless to strike a blow and cold in death, was so feared by the Moors that they fled; the Christians pursued and gained a great victory.

No lofty tomb marks the spot where the Cid found a grave. In a cheap glass covered case in the town hall of Burgos his bones and those of his Ximena's are exposed to view. This little handful of bones and a bottle filled with small pieces of the skeleton, are all that Spain has to remind her of her once brave and formidable champion, Don Rodrigo de Bivar.—Home Journal.

Propagation of Date Palms.

The date palms, which form the wealth of the Arabs of the desert, and one of which now waves its long boughs in the breeze before us, are all female; the males or pollen bearing flowers of the date kind always grow on a separate tree; and as pollen is produced by them in vast quantities, it is not necessary in palm groves to have more than a single male stem to some forty or fifty fruit bearing individuals. The Arabs, therefore, never raise their palms from seed, as they cannot make sure of the sex of seedlings; they take suckers from the root of a female tree, already known to be a good bearer of fine fruit; and these suckers not only follow the sex of the so called mother, but also reproduce its special peculiarities of flower and seed in every respect. They cannot fail to do so, indeed, seeing that they are part and parcel of the original palm, actual members of the self same plant; just as the various branches of an apple tree all bear the same kind of apples, or the boughs of a currant bush all produce the self same currants.—Popular Science Monthly.

A Tree Upside Down.

Trees that layer freely, as the apple and quince, may be made to grow by bending their tops down to the earth and slightly covering with soil. In Eastern tropical climes the banyan tree extends its long, slender branches to the ground, where, taking root, they extend the tree in every direction, presenting a similar appearance. As a curious experiment a prince tree has been turned upside down, first by rooting its tops and gradually loosening the roots and turning them into the air, where they budded and bore fruit. For a time such trees will be top heavy, as the trunk is naturally larger next to the original root and tapers downward.—American Cultivator.

Navies in a Transition Stage.

The navies of the world have been for years past in a transition stage—in fact, ever since the introduction of armor plating for ships of war, which necessitated the manufacture and use on board ship of heavier guns, which have since been competing with the thickness of armor until it seems probable that the extreme limit has been well nigh reached. In either case, the ideal man-of-war has been sought for the continual change and improvement; but on looking into the future, nothing but further change can be seen ahead. It is, therefore, essential to find out, as far as possible, which of our various types of ships best fulfills the requirements expected of them.

The true solution of this question, and of many others waiting to be solved, consists in answering among them being the question, "What is the value of the torpedo as an offensive and defensive weapon?" will have to stand over till after the next great naval war. The wars of late years have not helped us much. The American civil war developed the defensive torpedo to a stage beyond which it has not since made much advance; but from the Franco-German and Russo-Turkish wars but little was learned, beyond the undoubtedly great value of torpedoes for purposes of defense, in each case the stronger fleet being rendered innocuous by their use. But such questions as "The best way to defend a large ocean trade from attack by cruisers?" which to England is of vital importance, remain as obscure as ever.—Blackwood's Magazine.

The Aquarium's "Happy Family."

In my largest aquarium five gold and silver fish, several shiners, three minute bullheads and a few tiny rock bass, found at the bottom of a deep well, dwelt amicably together. Two small turtles and three varieties of snail kept them company. All went merry as a marriage bell until I introduced a stickleback to the assembled crowd. This new monster proved the quintessence of malicious industry, nibbling the fins and tails of my choicest fish into an uneven fringe in an incredibly short time.

The brilliant, opaline coloring of the sunfish makes them specially attractive, but these ferocious creatures must have a tank to themselves. My fish came in time to know me, and although nearly all were shy of strangers, at a tap of my fingers on the glass they would sally from their hiding places and cluster together. Sometimes I fancied that even the snails recognized me; be that as it may, the intelligence of my banished turtles was an undoubted fact. One of them would manage by adroit climbing to somersault himself out of the aquarium on to the floor, where he strayed contentedly about, until a certain member of the family entering he would follow him from room to room, wherever he went. Six soft shell turtles from the Mississippi banks had special quarters of their own, and as genuine curiosities, were often the observed of all observers.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Bonds of Lesser Denomination.

The denominations and the distribution of railway bonds deserve criticism. Ordinarily the denominations are $500 and $1,000, but $10,000 bonds are not uncommon and some are issued for $100,000. These denominations hinder the wide distribution of the securities among the people, because they are too large to secure purchasers among persons of moderate means. Only the rich can afford $500 or $1,000 investments; many people of less means would gladly invest in safe railway securities of $50 or $100 denominations.

To reduce the denominations of railway bonds would enlarge materially the home market for them. It would give the railways a larger constituency of interested investors in the territories they serve, a constituency competent to restrain in a marked degree the excesses of ill considered hostile railway legislation, and to contribute in many ways to railway stability and prosperity. It is pertinent to inquire who is likely to be able most intelligently and effectively to participate in adjusting fairly the frequently strained relations of railways and the public, the Dutch bondholders in America or the American farmer on the western prairies, who has invested a few hundreds in securities of the roads which carry his grain to market?—Forum.

Preparation of Fruit Syrups.

Everybody knows, says M. Manche, in The Archives de Pharmacie, that syrups prepared from the fresh fruit juices are far preferable to any others; but that these syrups in their fresh state contain a large amount of carbonic acid in unduly fermenting. When the process usually in vogue is followed, and sugar is added to the juice in the cold, a liquid is obtained which soon becomes so dense that the fluid it contains is difficult to make its escape when heat is subsequently applied, and the consequence is foaming, and sometimes a partial caramelizing of the sugar, from the fact that the syrup makes a denser layer at the bottom while the lighter juice is forming on top. To avoid all this M. Manche recommends that the juice be boiled before any sugar is added, replacing loss from evaporation by distilled water. The result is said to be better in every way.—Scientific American.

A Popular Boston Chestnut.

The tale is to the effect that Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes and the venerable Dr. Peabody, of Cambridge, once had an appointment to see a sister of Eurydice. Dr. Holmes arrived first, and when a few moments later his friend drove up in a cab, he greeted him with the very obvious pun:

"Ah, you rid, I see."

Dr. Peabody was wonderfully pleased with this sally, and on his return home attempted to repeat it for the benefit of his family.

"Dr. Holmes was extremely witty this afternoon," he said. "We went to see the Eurydice, and when I drove up he said pun quick as a flash, 'Ah, doctor, I see you came in a buggy.'"

I do not vouch for the story, but tell the tale as it was told to me.—Arlo Bates in Providence Sunday Journal.

A BIG TELESCOPE LENS.

The Great Lick Instrument Not Large Enough—A Delicate Undertaking.

The other afternoon Mr. Alvin Clark, the manufacturer of the great Lick telescope lens, received a letter from the president of the University of Southern California, located at Los Angeles, asking for information as to a forty inch lens, and intimating that in order for a telescope to eclipse that at the Lick observatory would soon be sent.

A correspondent who was present turned his attention to the numerous lenses of different sizes and in various stages of manufacture while Mr. Clark was reading the letter. He had just been talking with the man who had made up that could read patent magnetic signs on the moon's rocks with regard to the possibility for further advance in astronomical researches, and he feared the Elder might make it necessary to shorten his visit. Mr. Clark's eyes twinkled as he read the letter. Then, without a word of comment, he handed the missive to the reporter and resumed the patient rub, rub, rub of a small lens glass on the polishing block.

"What do you think of that?" he asked, when the reporter had made a careful mental note of the contents of the letter.

"I thought it had been stated by some savants that it was impossible to finish a lens any larger in diameter than that sent to the Lick observatory," the reporter said.

"I know such a statement has been made," replied Mr. Clark, "but I do not indorse it. I've been thinking about lenses now for a good many years, and I think I can see something about it. If I can get the glass the proper size there will be no trouble. Two small turtles and three varieties of snail kept them company. THE YEARS AND I.

We clinged our hands the little young years
And I
We saw the hurling world before us lie,
We laughed, clasping our dreaming eyes and sigh,
We listened our fate, the tide of hope, run high
When we clinged hands—the little young years
And I

We saw Love flit before us on the way,
And shine with light that far outshone the day,
We heard his call, we hastened to obey,
We sought him eagerly but he fled from
To show the site where his sweet city lay.
The little young years and I.

We clinged our hands, the gray best years and I,
We saw the darkness round behind us lie,
We wept, aloud, we shook with sob and sigh,
We cursed our fate, the tide of grief run high
When we clinged hands—the gray best years
and I

We saw Death flit before us on the way
And dost a shade that did obscure the day;
We heard his call, we hastened to obey,
We shrank from him as fain we would delay
To find the site where his dread city lay
The gray bent years and I.

The Hammock and the Swing.

A writer in The Chicago News gives the result of an experiment, showing that the instinct of children has in it, not only a love for recreation of a choice sort, but a sanitary common sense. A number of swings were suspended at a summer home for children, and near by were slung two dozen hammocks. The latter were almost always full, but the swings rarely held in use. The hammock is the most natural invention to give perfect rest and ease to the whole body, with a delicious sense of motion and activity. Every house should have several hammocks swung under the shade trees, for the use of both adults and children. It will tend greatly to prevent the strain of every day toil, and so sweeten the intercourse of its members.—Globe-Democrat.

French Inspection of Butter.

Among the recent decrees made in France is one relating to the inspection of butter for the repression of fraudulent dealings. By this decree three points are authorized to take samples of butter in any place. The butter butter is exposed for sale, stored in a warehouse or in transit by land or water. Each sample taken is to be subject to a special examination. Pure butter, mixed butter, margarine, oleomargarine and grease intended for consumption, in transit, must be contained in closed packages, and the origin and nature of the merchandise must be conspicuously specified thereon.—Chicago Herald.

Death in Court Plaster.

"Isinglass court plaster" is a material more plentifully pregnant for evil. It furnishes an ideal atmosphere and pabulum for bacteria and has sent many an unfortunate to the ground. It is questionable whether it can be disinfected so as to be safe. Phlegmon, pseudo and true erysipelas are its most usual companions; its most frequent victim being the accoucheur and office surgeon (or his friends) who carries it about his person for emergencies, and who dispenses it with a "lick and a stick."—Dr. A. R. Jenkins in The Annals of Surgery.

By Ball in England.

When traveling by rail in England you are not only looked after by the officials with great care (for you are under a parental government), but by the guard are not allowed to be careless; in fact, it is their business to injure yourself, even against your intention.

"Oh, yes. I am not surprised at receiving this letter, for when I was in California a year ago the president of that university intimated that they should want a larger telescope than that on Mount Hamilton. There is a wonderful interest in astronomy in California. All sorts of people are studying the stars. This fellow with his lens I am polishing is for a telescope I am making for the president of that university. It is for his personal use, and he begged me to make it with my own hands, so I am doing my best to please him. Last time, I have also filled other small orders from that state. In addition to these small orders I have received no less than three letters from different colleges asking if I could make a forty inch lens. I have written all these persons that I was ready to accept any and all orders for a forty inch lens. In fact, I was so sure that there would be a demand for such a lens that I drove an order to the glass men in Paris to save for me the first large mass that they succeeded in getting out. I may get it in a few weeks and I may have to wait months and weeks for it. I heard the other day that they had cut out two extra large plates and were finishing them for the exhibition next year. If it's true, I shall secure them if money will do it."

"What causes this delays?"

"It is all in the casting," was the reply. "All these lenses are made in France, near Paris. They are making them all the time. They melt up a lot of glass, and when it is of the right consistency they set it aside to cool. The glass is melted in pots, and after every casting the pots are broken away, leaving a large mass of glass. Then they examine it and test it to see if it is suitable to split up into lenses. It must be just right or it must be melted over. They have orders for all sizes of lens, but they do not consider those orders until they get the block of glass. The least indication of grain or sediment will show that it cannot be used for larger lenses. Then they break it up to see if they can use it for small ones. There are generally enough imperfections in ruin the block for large lenses. If mass is visible to the eye the block is tested with the polariscope, to see if it is of even density throughout. If all the conditions are perfect, then they will split up the block and get out a large lens in the rough. If they succeed in doing that there is still great danger that it will be broken in the first handling to get it down to the proper size for grinding and polishing. After that is accomplished the worst danger of breakage is passed, though of course it would require the utmost skill and caution not to break it while putting on the finishing touches."

"Do you break many?"

"Lots of them. We do not break as many now as we did at first, but in the course of a year we smash a good many. Our experience in the past has opened our eyes a little, so we can generally tell, before we touch a lens, whether or not it is sound."—Boston Cor. New York Sun.

TRUSTWORTHY MATTER PERTAINING TO A VARIETY OF SUBJECTS.

A Swine Breeder Describes a Plan for Renovating Sows in Connection with the Score Card That May Be Practiced by Any Farmer.

In the annexed cuts are given a plan for measuring swine in connection with the score card that was recently described and illustrated in Swine Breeder's Journal. Swine breeder says: "I would take straight edge and rule. Lay straight on the back of hog No. 1. It will fit its back almost the entire length.

PLAN FOR MEASURING HOGS.

"Now," explains the swine breeder, "if it fit the entire length, and would give an equal full score on back, and if the lower line of the side were straight would also score full. If the ham was deep, thick and even curve down on to the hock and square in the back (part or nearly so) would score full and would take all parts that were even, round about it, where required and give full score. Now take the No. 2 hog, it almost straight on the back, but not entirely so. Score seven points or cut one point, lower line not quite so straight as hog three point. Ham cut one point, although is more off from straight line than in number 1. The hams in No. 1 would call good, while in No. 2 the ham is off at least three points. At the dotted lines showing where it is off the most. The line of back shows a good bed measurement. The distance from back line of No. 2 is four times as much as on No. 1. I would want the heart measurement as much or more than the back measurement. The shoulder I would want more like No. 1. The dotted line on No. 2 shows deficiency as well as showing by lines that back and lower line are deficient several points."

PLAN FOR MEASURING HOGS.

Without straight edge and rule or tape we could not get at the exact score where two hogs are very nearly alike. There is no use for a tape line. Place the hog on a board, and draw a straight line along the side, then square down from the back of the hog, and then square down from the back of the hog, and then square down from the back of the hog, and

JACK AND I.

I was so tired of Jack, new boy,
And Jack was tired of me,
Most longed for vessels will sometimes
Be wrecked upon the sea;
Two fractious ones Hart's hearts, made warm
Of life's best gifts with eager haste.

O! tired we were. Time sangs so long
The world looked rose pink and strong;
We cuddled our fate chains, and pined
Down the path, was soon hid from view.

Tired, tired of love and peace were we
We had no pain, no sorrow,
We had no grief, no care, no fear
Was none, and so life was dull.
And so we aligned in mutual despair,
And wished each other anywhere.

But sorrow came and with it the pain
Of death's dark, awful, sweep
O, then our hearts took warm again;
Then each to each was dear.
We vowed that life could nothing
While Jack had one and I had Jack.

THE CASTAWAY CHICKS

Three little chicks, at close of day,
Left comfortable nest, and strayed away.
Two cozily nestled inside the house
With one on the outside to scan the view.

As the tide came in and carried the close
Over the waves into a small ocean,
The chickens, oh, the terrible pitings,
Wished themselves back under mother's wings.

But the waves were high, and all were drowned
The little chickens were never found;
So may their fate be a warning to all
To all other chickens who ruh away.

IN SWEEPING ROBES.

BY ADA PENLEY.

"You will marry me, Edna Sherwood, or yourself and father shall be thrust from Brooklale."

"Have mercy!"

The words dropped pleadingly, dispairingly from the cold lips of the man's companion.

"Have mercy," Edward Faulkland reiterated with a harsh laugh, his black eyes riveted on the peerless loveliness before him. "Did you show me mercy when I lay my love at your feet?" he continued in low, passionate tones, seizing the girl's hands, his hot breath scorching her pale cheek. "No, you trod upon my love, coolly telling me you loved another." The velvet pansy eyes, fixed upon the distant cottage fields, flashed with scalding tears. "I swore vengeance then, my beautiful, struggling dove," he went on, hissing, ly. "You wove your silken spell around me with your wondrous beauty and innocent, coaxing ways, fool that I am, I would risk my soul to call you mine. As for my handsome nephew," he said between his teeth, crushing the jeweled hands cruelly between his strong fingers, "I'll kill him—yes, you too—before I will allow him to win the only woman I ever loved from me.

With a smothered cry the girl sank upon her knees among the blue-bells, her dainty lace-trimmed robe lying in soft, dreary billows around her, the warm June sunlight resting upon the rings of golden curls falling about her shoulders; the faint, sweet scent of orange-groves floating up from the clustering trees in the vale below. To the left stretched immense cotton-fields, looking in the distance like one vast sheet of snow; birds twittered and chirped in emerald-clothed oaks and elms, and upon the warm summer air was borne the mournful requiem of the ocean, as the white-frilled waves broke upon the pebbly shore beyond the belt of woods.

"Oh, be merciful!" she wailed, raising her eyes imploringly. "I cannot be your wife, Mr. Faulkland, for as you know, I love your nephew. We were engaged long before you returned from Europe; forgive me, I never dreamed you cared for me. Only be patient, perhaps we may yet find the re-cipt. Papa and I will search day and night; will you not wait a few weeks? Oh, Mr. Faulkland, you know papa paid off the mortgage. Why will you not give us another receipt? Don't—don't turn us from dear Brooklale! The home where I was born and mamma died."

The sobbing, girlish voice ceased, and with a despairing glance at the hard, glittering eyes bent upon her, the girl struggled to her feet, leaning like a broken lily against the gnarled trunk of a huge elm.

"You might as well try to soften yonder stone cliff by a touch from your pretty white hands as to plead to me for mercy. Hear me once for all, Edna, he went on, his cold, merciless tones falling upon the flower-scented air like the hiss of a serpent. "If you do not marry me, I will foreclose the mortgage, and your father and self shall go forth homeless, nay, beggars, for Brooklale is mortgaged for more than its value. I also have, as you are aware, a lien upon your father's remaining property. Now listen, my pretty one," leaning nearer the shrinking girl he continued rapidly: "Your father did pay the mortgage. A month ago to day he handed me the money in my library. Some time after his departure I found the receipt I had given Mr. Sherwood lying in the hall, where he undoubtedly dropped it as he passed out. Then it was that I thought of the scheme by which I might win you, whom I secretly worshiped for months. I will keep my promise and hand you the paper the moment we are pronounced man and wife."

"Villain!" she cried, with blazing eyes. "I will expose you."

"What will your simple word weigh against mine, the richest land-owner in the country?" he sneered. "You are to be present tonight at the ball I give in your honor. If you wear crush roses I shall look upon it as an acceptance of my suit. If not, expect no mercy from your humble servant."

With a mocking bow, the speaker swung around and threaded his way among the dense trees. The girl stood like a beautiful piece of snowy statuary, the sound of his receding footsteps crushing upon the underbrush, striking duffy on her ear.

"Oh, God! is there no escape from the network that villain has woven around your pure and true? she panted. "Must I sacrifice my more than life, or else see papa turned adrift upon the world?" The words ended in a dry sob.

"Hist!" rang out lowly, cautiously. The fragrant, flowering bushes were pushed aside by a slim, brown hand, and a graceful figure, clothed in some soundless material, glided out.

"There is a way to escape the villain," she said, in rapid, musical tones, her sad, dark eyes riveted upon the girl's lovely, colorless face. "I heard all; have faith in me, and wear the flowers to-night. I dare not say more; we may be discovered. I will be at the ball; until then, hope."

Without another word the woman swung around, and walking rapidly down the path, was soon hid from view.

"Ah! if I could hope," the girl said, wearily. "I am afraid there is no escape; though she may know some thing about that unprincipled wretch, it can not help us, for he has the precious receipt. Oh, Rupert, Rupert! how can I give you up?"

With a heart-broken cry the girl sank down amid the flowers; her long hair, heavy with its weight, breaking loose from the silver arrows that confined it, lay in a golden veil on the soft green grass.

Eleven boomed out on the starlit night. As the last stroke of the clock in the high tower at Faulkland died away, a gentleman came out from the brilliantly lighted hallway and looked down the winding drive; music crashed in the brilliant drawing-rooms, the silver-toned voices floated out from the open casements, the stars gleamed and twinkled through the rents in heaven's draped curtain, lanterns shone like fireflies amid the trusting foliage, and where the man stood a great bar of gaslight fell in a vast slant upon the broad marble steps.

"I wonder if she will now defy me?" he muttered, uneasily, turning back into the house.

Uncle, have you seen Edna?" a fine-looking fellow asked, joining Mr. Faulkland a few moments later. "Oh, there she is now!" he exclaimed, eagerly, springing forward as a figure in trailing azure satin, a bunch of crush roses at her waist and nestling amid the tresses of her wavy hair, swept down the wide stairway. "I am so glad you have come, Edna, darling."

"As well as I ever expect to be," Edna's father said, with a smothered sigh.

"Have courage. You may yet find the receipt," Rupert murmured, drawing the girl's fingers within his arm.

"Allow me to relieve you of my beautiful valise," dropped in a steely voice.

Rupert flushed crimson.

"What do you mean, sir?" he demanded, angrily, turning his flashing eyes upon the sneering face of his uncle.

"Edna," the cold tones went on, "will you kindly inform my nephew that you have used a woman's privilege and changed your mind in regard to the choice of a future husband?"

"Uncle Edward, you are a greater scoundrel than I thought," the young man commenced, in white heat of anger.

"Child, you shall not sacrifice yourself" her father exclaimed, trying to draw the trembling girl toward him.

"Be true to the man you love, dear. We will resign Brooklale to this scamp; perhaps in the years to come we may be able to buy the dear old place back."

For one brief moment the girl wavered, fixed her heavy eyes upon her lover, who seemed turned to stone; then, with one wild, agonized look at her father, who still held his arms out to her, utterly shook her head.

"Quite melodramatic," Mr. Faulkland said, smoothly, a cruel smile barking beneath his drooping iron gray mustache. "Come, dearest Edna, I wish to present the future mistress of Faulkland to my guests."

With a smothered cry the girl recoiled like a beautiful stag at bay, her eyes full of dumb appeal, her exquisite face as colorless as the pearls resting upon her heaving bosom, then clutching the flowers at her waist until the delicate petals were crushed and bruised, she placed one gloved hand upon the coat-sleeve of her lost and moved slowly toward the hall-door, leaving behind her upon the tessellated floor a trail of dying rose petals.

"Take me to the conservatory," she murmured, faintly, as they threaded their way amid the dancers.

"Shall I procure you a glass of wine?" he asked, startled at her deathly pallor.

"No—yes, get me a glass of water," she said, sinking weakly upon a seat in the dusky conservatory.

"Can I bear it?" she moaned, looking after the retreating form of her escort. "No, I cannot; better death than a life linked with his. In spite of my letter judgment I have hoped, as that mysterious woman bade me, but heaven help me, she has failed."

"Not so," broke in a cautious voice from among the rare plants near her. "Bend lower while I tell you something; quick, before that miserable wrecker of woman's happiness returns."

* * * * * * *

It was the night of the wedding and silently within the old gentleman's arms. The bridal party swept into the large ballroom, lights shone down from globes of pearl, turning the diamond tiara holding the bride's veil in place to one steady stream of fire; the bride and groom stood beneath the snowy bridal bell. The groom's responses rang clear and triumphant, but the bride's voice sounded low and tremulous, like the heavy folds of the lowered veil. At last the words, "I pronounce you man and wife," were spoken, and with a low scream of relief, Faulkland turned to the trembling form at his side.

"Now, my dear, give me a widely kiss," he said, smilingly, trying to draw aside the veil.

"The receipt first," she murmured, keeping tight hold of the lace.

Smiling lightly, he took a paper from his pocket and handed it to her. Clutching the receipt she stepped to Mr. Sherwood's side and thrust it into his hand.

"Check-mated!" rang out a girlish voice, and Edna, followed by Rupert, stepped from their place of concealment back of the heavy window curtains.

"What does this mean?" Faulkland demanded, gazing fiercely at Edna, who, attired in sweeping satin robes, a bridal-veil resting upon her glorious hair, seemed the exact counterpart of the veiled bride.

"It means that you have been beaten with your own weapons," said Rupert, sternly, "and have gone through the marriage ceremony with your wronged, deserted wife."

With the snarl of a wild beast, Faulkland tore the lace from the bride's face. "Curse! he said, brutally. "I thought and hoped you were dead."

"It isn't your fault that I am not," his wife exclaimed, bitterly, confronting him with flashing eyes. "No doubt you believed I did not recover from that terrible attack of fever in the room where you deserted me and left my penniless upon my death-bed, as you supposed. By the mercy of God I was saved, and after a weary search found you in time to balk you in your infamous scheme. It was my plan that Miss Sherwood and I should trick you alike," she went on bravely, drawing a step nearer Rupert as her cowardly husband raised his hand to strike her. "She sent for you this evening that you might see her myeldeen and witness the nothing. We planned that I should personate the real bride, Miss Sherwood's height and mine favoring the deception."

"Curse you! I will have your life for this!" Faulkland hissed, leveling a pistol at the trembling woman.

With a bound, Rupert reached his side and dashed the weapon to the floor. Muttering a curse between his clenched teeth, the villain sprang through the open window and was swallowed up in the darkness without.

The following morning he left Faulkland, and a year afterward was killed in a drunken brawl somewhere in California.

Though Rupert, as his heir, inherited his vast estates, he preferred residing with his beautiful wife and her father at Brooklale. For miles around, the country people bless the sad, darkened lives at Faulkland and is known as the lady who saved the golden-haired beauty of Brooklale from a villainous, nefarious scheme.

Two Kinds of Boys.

The plain, awkward boy always stands in great fear of the handsome and graceful boy. The dapper, graceful, trim, little youngster, who glides about among the admiring girls like Apollo among the nine graces, who dances so lightly that he leaves the grace of a London dandy, and who twirls his cane like a Beau Brummel—such a one looks with a sort of refined horror upon the awkward boy, with much the same feeling a bright American lad might look upon a young Hottentot.

And the plain, stolidly awkward boy looks upon his more graceful contemporary with a feeling very akin to envy. The awkward boy is at home in the barn, but an embarrassed foreigner in the parlor; he is graceful enough in the field, but put him in the drawing-room and he will fall over the chandelier. He is as frightened at the sound of a piece of some good old lady speaks to him, he cannot find a half-dozen words in the 115,000 in the dictionary with which to answer her; and if a pretty girl speaks to him, she overwhelms him with confusion and he stands as dumb as a sphinx, but immediately falls in love with her and nourishes a hopeless passion for the term time.

The graceful boy has no such trouble. The old ladies whisper, "How polite! a gentleman!" and the girls, who are charmed; everybody likes him socially, he is invariably a favorite.

But there is no reason that the awkward boys need be discouraged. Smart boys are made to order for the awkward boys, as a general rule, are dreadfully stupid.

In a few years, when the awkward boy is walking or possibly riding down to his place of business, he will be very liable to pass his graceful rival of an earlier date carrying his dinner-pail to his work. When he is mayor, the graceful boy will be—not half as gracefully as in the old time—and ask him for a chance to work on the streets. When the awkward boy goes to Congress—and awkward boys have a way of getting there—his graceful chum may possibly aspire to be his private secretary, but it is probable that he will be too proud to attend to such an estate as that. The awkward boys have a very great chance of rising in the ranks. Perhaps it is the youthful habit of stumbling about that enables them so often to stumble over our thirty-eight gubernatorial chairs, or into the White House.

But this is not written to glorify awkwardness. The awkward boy is perhaps natural to the callousness of boyhood's youth, but a boy should get over it as he gets over his freckles and his clumsiness projected into middle life sets us unpleasantly as hairy dresses on a full-grown man.—Yonker Blade.

Stopping Runaway Horses.

A Boston correspondent of the Woonsocket Patriot tells how a young people's prayer-meeting stops a runaway horse: "When you see a runaway horse do not try to check him by a rush from the opposite direction or the side, for you will be immediately trampled on and killed. Instead, prepare yourself for a short run behind the horse. Measure with your eye the distance, and when you feel the while he is yet some way off—perhaps by feet in the case of a fast or heading runaways. You may depend upon his keeping a straight line, for a really frightened horse is half blind and would not see or for a steam engine. He will go straight ahead until he stumbles into something. So do you get close to the line on which he is running and, as he passes you, grab the rein near the saddle. Gather the reins firmly, and then, leaning backward as you run, give them a powerful yank. You may be able to bear yourself somewhat as you give the yank, half turn and run back of the horse. The strong jerk on the bit tells the horse that he has met a master, and prepares him for the final struggle. A step or two forward after the first yank, do it again. This is the finishing stroke. It never fails when given by a determined man. The horse is on his haunches. Keep a firm hold on the reins till you secure the horse by the nostrils, and hold him so till he is pacified."

In stopping a span of horses Mayne tries to get to the side of the wither one, as if pulled to its consus the other can not be managed. The task is easier if the horse has a curb bit. A runaway may also be stopped by the driver in the same manner: "If you will steadily with all your strength on a curb bit," says Mayne, "the effect on the horse's jaw is just what it is if you tie a cord tightly about your finger. The blood doesn't flow and the finger becomes numb. After a firm pull has been maintained for a few seconds a moth for a while it ceases to have any effect. You cannot then force him out of a run if he is frightened. But give a little head a little till the mouth recovers from its numbness, then jerk him with the whip if you have a free road, and then stop nearer Rupert as her cowardly husband raised his hand to strike her. "She sent for you this evening that you might see her myeldeen and witness the nothing. We planned that I should personate the real bride, Miss Sherwood's height and mine favoring the deception."

"Curse you! I will have your life for this!" Faulkland hissed, leveling a pistol at the trembling woman.

With a bound, Rupert reached his side and dashed the weapon to the floor. Muttering a curse between his clenched teeth, the villain sprang through the open window and was swallowed up in the darkness without.

FOR THE LADIES.

DEVOTED TO THE FAIR DAUGHTERS OF LAMENTED EVE.

Seasonable Hints About the Latest Styles in Dress—How the Fashionable Array Themselves—Dressing Room Not Costly Toilets.

NEW YORK CORRESPONDENCE.]

The ball season is about to begin. Twice new dances got the indorsement of the Dancing-masters' Convention in New York, and as they are not particularly demonstrative or revolutionary they will undoubtedly come into immediate use among modish people. One of these is the glide mazourka, which is a partial revival of an old round dance combining the polka and the waltz. In its new form it has more of a waltz movement than before. The general effect is graceful, and the long, sliding step is sightly, unless it is practiced too carelessly on an over-polished floor, such as some of our ball-rooms present. Several of the freshly smoothed and waxed floors made ready for the winter's dancing are as slippery as ice, and the glide mazourka would seem to be almost impracticable thereon. The other new round dance is called the Berlin, and it is very ingenious, since its slow, graceful polka time can be used as well for a gallop, waltz or a schottische. The awkward sight of a couple waltzing to polka music has of years been too common. Many couples are as stiffer under an unusual time as seem a polka, and to them the Berlin will be a great boon. The Berlin is serviceable to those who like a polka. The other novelty devised by the dancing-masters is a modification of the figures of which are more intricate and show than ever before beautiful qualities yet introduced for amateurs. It is happy news and trustworthy that for at least some seasons the dancing will not be impeded and encumbered by trains. Women may drag a length of finery along the floor after them, but they will not do it in the round dances at all events. The great majority of ladies at balls will have their skirts just clear the floor, as shown in the two pictures of approved costumes heretofore given. The devices of shape and ornament accounted shown in these illustrations are all brand-new, and they are sure to have a vogue, for they are being embodied, with immeasurable modifications, in the gowns of the fashionable world. The silk fabrics employed in such toilets are of the finest and richest qualities, as well as wonderful in variety. The new armure-royal silks are in all the new colors of the season, in plain and brocaded patterns of the new artistic designs introduced this season. The most delicate shades of gold colors, pearl-pinks and rosela tints, pear white, and the new green, are in ascendency, as are stately flower patterns in unique effect and in solid color in peau de soie and satin, and in stripes with all kinds of patterns, in brocades which unite all these fabrics, and in a variety of other ways on one goods. The most elegant gowns are those which are modelled of the Directoire style. The waists are fitted to the form, and are from the waist in classic effects. Hanging scarfs and straight effects, which add to the height of the figure, are always aimed at in these garments. Puff trimmings of feathers in duffy marabout-like bands are extensively used on Directoire gowns. The heavy materials—velvets and heavy brocatelle effects in broaded silks are made up in Directoire styles, over skirts of cashmere, embroidered wool, or plain heavy silk or velvet. The silk petticoats of evening dresses, with brocaded bodices and trains, are frequently covered with a profusion of lace flounces, and jabots of wide lace are placed down the sides of dresses where the train meets the petticoat, and wide falls of lace finish the sleeve and neck. Plain evening dresses made very dressy by a drapery of beaded silk network—jet for black gowns, and self-color for colored dresses. There are small emissaes, or, if preferred, half blouses or plastrons, which surround the collar, front and back, forming a long point back and extending to the waist in front, where they taper to a double V, over which a large clasp or plaque of the same beads is set. These outlines are edged with handsome pendants or drops to match, offering or round. This forms one of the prettiest corsage trimmings for the season, and adds very greatly to the elegance of a dress.

The heads of three ball-room belles are represented in two young and handsome ladies, who are evidently fashionable. But what are ugly women to do? The young girls whose natural crown of beauty is abundant hair-dressing is a comparatively unimportant matter, and but when one is reduced to chaut lugubriously with Lady Jane, the question, "that "spreading is the parting straight," and let "wraths her wrinkled brow with well-saved combings," the hairdresser's art is of the first importance. That is the reason why so many of our rich matrons employ an expert to arrange their hair for all occasions of consequence, or at least have this done often enough to learn how to repeat it with their own hands. It is wonderful what can be done by a clever artist in producing coiffures exactly suitable to improve persons toward whom nature has been unkind, and in whom the charm of youth has long vanished. A clever hairdresser said recently, speaking of two very plain women, that their social success, so far as their appearance went, upon the manner in which their hair was dressed. Of one this candid critic said: "To see her before the glass waiting for me to go when her maid and I had fixed her up, she was a comfortable rival for so matchless a beauty. The satisfaction she felt on seeing herself transformed lighted her up, called all her powers into play, and made her acting for manslaughter. The other was pollier and ugly, though a fright. Well, she supported triumphantly proximity to the prettiest woman in the room. In a plain style of hair would not have been the eyes from the face or tickled into good-humor, but the poor creature would have been ruin. I had to be her maid, and I know exactly where to draw the line." After this she would deny the thrall of the coiffeur, or his claim to his cherished title of artist?

Women in the cities will do without all other luxuries, and many comfortable, for the sake of promenading in a sealskin sacque or cloak and with glittering diamonds hanging to her ears. These things represent the aspiration of the great majority in the matter of dress. It is for that very reason that our moneyed and more exclusive belles will this winter adjure fur, for the sake of being separate from the mass of good dressers, and will take to equally costly but more portable wraps made of fabrics and in styles which will last only one winter. In that way they publish the fact that they can afford to buy an expensive outer garment every season, and need not resort to furs, which can be continued through a number of years. The pictures showing of these perishable cloaks, made of velvet in ornate shapes, and trimmed with lace and feathers, are fantastic similar to those will be foremost in the winter regard of our fashionable women. Open sleeves are attached to them, and they are quite fashionable on most of the winter mantles. The most stylish and comfortable shapes should have been introduced for garments presumably worn in keen cold the cold is astonishing, but not so much so as that women have been fashion enough to encourage the fashion. This season dressmaker-makers have made the loose flowing sleeves on all their bodices, and there is, therefore, every possibility that bronchitis, coughs, and congestions will be unusually prevalent. A mantle-maker to whom I spoke on the subject acknowledged that these sleeves were the most uncomfortable ever introduced, but that in quite of

Fashion Small Talk.

THE newest jerseys are made in the Directoire style.

HOUSE waists or tea jackets are made of the new brocaded silks.

FILLETS of ribbon to wear in the hair with evening toilets are imported.

HUMMING-BIRDS and pelonsiers enhumber the bagnes dresses among the new importations.

MATELASSE galloons are the novelty in trimmings. They make rich borders for cloth dresses.

CAERIGE and visiting dresses are made almost exclusively in the Directoire and Empire styles.

NOW TEA gowns are made of cloth, pale shades of green being the favorite color, with white or Suede cloths for the fronts.

MARVELS are announced in the way of buttons, but only a few dull silver and gold ones are shown. These nonpareils are only for ornament. On dress waists, where buttons show, small crochet-ed ones are used, or those of the gown stuff, so preferred.

GENERAL JACKSON'S TROUBLE.

Unable to Reconcile the Ladies of the Press.

(From the Chicago Herald.)

It was a special in a Chicago paper and of a relations that soon brought a storm around Jackson's head, that not even his iron will could dispel, and he found that woman's sweet will was quite as firm as his own. This was the Mrs. Eaton episode.

Peggy O'Neal was the dashing daughter of a tavern keeper in the early days of the city, and O'Neal's tavern was the place where many Congressmen and Senators boarded. Peggy often waited upon them, and of course, fired with them. She was very pretty, very bright and very gay. She finally married a purser in the navy named Timberlake, who after a few years, committed suicide and left her a widow.

Gen. Jackson and Maj. John Eaton boarded at O'Neal's tavern when they were Senators from Tennessee, and Maj. Eaton's impressionable heart yelded to the fascination of the Widow Timberlake. About the time Jackson was elected President the Berlin, and the widow, and when Jackson was inaugurated Eaton was appointed Secretary of War. Thereupon Washington society awoke to the fact that Peggy O'Neal, a tavern-keeper's daughter, was a giddy, if not an improper female, as the wife of a Cabinet officer would not only have a high social station, but would have the pas over them. Such a social innovation was not to be tolerated, and never been seen before in Washington, and has never been seen since. Who one accord the ladies of the Cabinet and of the diplomatic corps, Senators' wives and ladies of high and low degree who revolved about the White House as a social centre, declared they would not visit Mrs. Eaton, nor return her calls, nor meet her socially, upon any terms, except as a duty, when they met her upon the public receptions. Thereupon Jackson, who was the most chivalrous gentleman in the world, took up the cause of Mrs. Eaton, utterly disregarding all the stories told about her, remembering how his own wife had been maligned.

But all the power of the President could not move the ladies of Washington to recognize Peggy O'Neal. Mrs. Calhoun refused, the wives of Secretaries Ingham, Branch and Berrien refused, and Mrs. Donelson, Jackson's niece, who was the mistress of the White House, refused. At the public receptions and levees Mrs. Donelson received Mrs. Eaton with courtesy, but when the President asked her to call upon her, she replied, in her high dignification, the favoritism ice flatly refused.

"Then you must go back to Tennessee, my dear," said Old Hickory.

"Very well, uncle, I'll go back," was the decisive reply. And back she went, but the President soon sent for her again.

Jackson then appealed to his secretaries, asking them to induce their wives to call on Mrs. Eaton, but the gentlemen informed the President they could not control the action of their wives in such matters. Meantime the adroit Van Buren, Secretary of State, who was a widower and without family complications, entertained Mrs. Eaton, and induced the English Minister, who was a bachelor, to do the same. This was Van Buren's first step to the Presidency, for it won Jackson's heart. It was all in vain, so far as Mrs. Eaton was concerned. Finally the relations between the President and Maj. Eaton on one side and the recalcitrant secretaries on the other became so strained that no Cabinet meetings were held for months, and Eaton finally challenged Secretary Branch, who declined the meeting. Van Buren then, as a way out of the difficulty, tendered his resignation, and induced Maj. Eaton to do the same. But the other secretaries refused to resign, and Jackson was obliged to request their resignations. Thus a woman was at the bottom of Jackson's first Cabinet explosion, and it all grew out of White House etiquette. Mrs. Eaton died in Washington for many years after, and died a few years ago.

Where Log Cabins Flourish.

A Kentucky gentleman who had been camping out on the Big Sandy and Lake Erie railroad, last summer, were returning in a sail-boat and, a few miles from port when the wind died down, and with it the sailing breeze.

A discouraging situation, truly.

"Never mind, I can row you there inside of two hours," said the gentleman who had charge of the party, as their murmurs arose.

"Row us there! Why, there are twenty miles to the company boat—it's a big job you undertake," said one.

"I have done the job three times before and can do it again," cheerfully replied the gentleman, and he stripped off his coat and sway the sail and bent to the oars. He was a big, muscular man, and he took no more under headway again.

"What would I get give to enjoy your health and strength," remarked the Professor.

"I am pretty healthy, and though I am past sixty, I can outdo any of you in this pastime, yet I was only three years ago I stood at death's door, and I attribute to pill as my salvation. You never was in the woods all winter, logging, and I got into the water one day and caught cold. It settled on my lungs and I had a bad cough with it, keep on till I run down almost to a skeleton.

"Call in a physician?

"Yes, I went twenty miles through the woods to see him; he gave me some medicine, but it didn't help me much.

"Why didn't you come home?

"I did intend to go, but I came across a family from the States, who had come out to settle in Arkansas, and I stayed with the settlers in America used, and it soon stopped my cough I put on my log cabin again."

"You has but to travel along the frontier to learn how easy it is to get along without medicine, and how quickly the natural remedies which the old grandmothers know of, are found in the woods, where the physicians do not live.

"The wife of a family knows how to make a tonic and a cathartic from herbs and roots, and how to make a poultice of meal and herbs, and how to make a cough and consumption remedy, she learned from her mother, who learned it from her mother, who learned it from her mother, who learned it

FARM AND GARDEN.

OPPORTUNE SUGGESTIONS ABOUT THINGS IN EVERYDAY LIFE.

Diseases of the Respiratory Organs of Horses Usually Classified Under Three Heads—Local and Non-Contagious, General and Contagious, Chronic or Acute.

Diseases of the respiratory organs prevail to a great extent among horses, and are classified under three heads. Under the first head—local and non-contagious—explains a veterinary surgeon in Ohio Practical Farmer, we find a disturbance of this respiratory apparatus caused by cold, which attacks the bronchial tubes, and the nasal organs are also involved, resulting in a discharge, more or less, from the nose. Such a disturbance is amenable to treatment, and cannot be considered infectious or contagious, except when in a more advanced state. The word contagion means the propagation of disease by contact. Infection means almost the same, but in the latter the virus must be received into the system, while in the former it has only to come into contact. Any disease of the respiratory organs, if allowed to run unchecked, becomes general, as the whole system becomes involved; the disease, if neglected or trifled with, causing a disturbance which is the first warning that fever has set in. We have quickened pulse, higher temperature and a general fever. It is then contagious. In the chronic or acute form the whole system is involved, and in this case it is both contagious and infectious. It does not mean local, but takes the malignant general type capable of causing the death not only of the animal affected, but of all other animals and even species that may come in contact with it in any form, either by breathing the air or being touched with the virus.

In Fig. 1 is shown distinctly the circulatory system of the thoroughbred, so that a mere glance is sufficient to convince one how any disease of the respiratory organs may be carried through the system and thus involve the whole animal system finally. Internal artery, pulmonary vein, vertebral artery, dorsal artery, lumbar artery, iliac, etc., etc., are all clearly exhibited.

Fig. 2 shows a bed case of farcy. It illustrates the external effect of farcy. A disease supposed to be glanders by many, but, according to the authority quoted, it is a specific disease of the horse.

The Heliotrope in Winter.

With good management the heliotrope may be made to bloom profusely during winter in either the window or conservatory. To have a supply of winter and spring blooms, select plants that have started from slips in June, and which have low, bushy forms.

During the flowering stage the plants should have from 30 degrees to 60 degrees heat, and about once a week, or when in full bloom twice a week, they may with benefit receive liquid manure at the roots. The plants, like the flowers themselves, after cutting, do better for not being crowded together or with others.

The heliotrope defends in a compost consisting of three parts of fresh loam or decayed turf to one part of rotted manure, with a good sprinkling of sharp sand added.

In dealing with that common pest of such plants, the green fly, care must be taken that the foliage be not injured with the usual remedy, tobacco smoke. This remedy may with safety be applied in moderately strong volume if the simple precaution of syringing or otherwise completely wetting the foliage just previous to fumigating is observed, otherwise the plants would be liable to become badly burned.

Posts Preserved with Petroleum.

In building a fence around our young orchards several years ago we tried many plans for preserving posts. Having occasion to remove the fence this winter we noted the conditions of the posts as follows: Those set with no preparation were decayed at lush or more in thickness; those coated with a thick wash of lime were better preserved, but were quite seriously attacked by worms; those posts coated with tar were perfectly sound as when put in the ground; those painted with petroleum and kerosene were equally as sound and as good for setting. The posts got thoroughly dry, and then with a mop of clean kerosene and a whitewash brush, give the lower third of the post, the part to go into the ground, two or three applications of the oil, letting it soak in well each time. Posts so treated will not be troubled by worms or insects of any kind, but will resist decay to a remarkable degree. This we find to be the simplest, easiest, cheapest and best method of preservation.

A Good Tonic for Fowls.

Probably the best tonic for fowls, says American Agriculturist, is the Douglass mixture. Take one pound of sulphate of iron and two ounces of sulphuric acid and dissolve in one gallon of water. Add one tablespoonful of this mixture to one gallon of drinking water for the birds.

Remove the droppings from the poultry houses every morning instead of once or twice a week, as is often directed. If this practice were strictly adhered to there would be less disease among poultry and better results generally.

Cull the fowls very closely. It will not pay to winter disqualified birds. There is more success with fower birds and higher prices.

Cream is a rocky absorbent and therefore quickly injured by association with odors of all sorts.

Adventures of a Scientist.

Bonsingault spent ten years in South America, making the most of every opportunity to study the ground phenomena in which that region is so rich, and reaped as the fruit of his sojourn an abundant harvest of observations in many departments of science. His work included numerous mineral analyses; the discovery of a new mineral, which he named after one of his teachers, Gay-Lussite; analyses of the milk of the "cow tree," of palm wax, of guanos, one of the thermal waters of Venezuela; and the discovery in the province of Antioquia of a bed of platinum, a metal which had previously been known only as it was disseminated in sands. He often made his analyses of minerals on horseback, with the aid of a portable balance; he carried a Fortin barometer along over mountains, with which he estimated the height of mountains. His methods of investigation were sometimes extraordinarily ingenious.

In taking the temperature, for instance, in the crater of Pasto, having found his thermometer inadequate, he let down some of the tin foil wrappings of his chocolate cakes. The tin was melted. The temperature was, therefore, higher than the melting point of that metal, or more than 235 degs. C. He then let down a pistol ball, which was not melted. The temperature was thus found to be lower than the melting point of lead, or less than 362 degs. C., and was, therefore, somewhere between the two extremes. The guide who accompanied him on this adventure could not conceal his nervousness at hearing the subterranean roarings of the volcano, and, looking into the crater, asked, "What if it should burst out?" "Then we should be lost," replied Bonsingault. The guide answered, calmed by the coldness of his superior, "That is what I think, too." In 1831 he accomplished the secret of Chimborazo, which Humboldt had been obliged to give up, with the loss of one of his instruments—and recovered the instrument.—Popular Science Monthly.

"Baking Day" in Australia.

A hard and tough compound, known as damper, is used as bread by the people of Australia. Judging from its consistency, one might guess, without being told, that "baking day" does not come very often on the sheep runs. The author of "Wild Life" thus describes the making of damper:

"Mike, the shepherd, brought out an empty flour sack, carefully folded it in two, laid it upon the ground, and spread over it about five pounds of flour. Clearing a space in the middle of the heap, sometimes in the way that builders mix mortar, he filled it with water, and worked the flour in for half an hour, when the dough was so stiff that, patted out into a cake three inches thick, it might almost have kept its shape without flowing for a minute.

"His helper had by this time made a fire large enough to roast a sheep. Mike pulled off the half burned brands leaving a mass of glowing embers. Raking these together he stirred them to drive off the dust, and then with a long stick worked them away from the center, into the clear space upon the bare, heated ground, he skillfully dropped the great, shoes shaped cake of dough, and left it some minutes to get the outside used to the heat," as he said.

"Finally the embers were scraped together and spread over the cake, and the operation outdoor oven was left to do its work. Just before bed time the cake was withdrawn from the now powdery ashes, and the shepherd, laying it with his knife handle, remarked, 'Sounds hollow! all right!'

"Then he set it on its edge inside the hut to cool—a well baked damper."

The Annapolis Naval Cadets.

The jibs, or "sympathers," as they are also called, are at once quartered on board a large, old fashioned wooden frigate, which always lies alongside the dock, and does duty during the school months as a gunnery ship. The vessel becomes the residence of the jibs during the summer months, here they have their first experience of life at sailor life, sea bore, among other things, they first acquire the art of sleeping in a hammock. It is truly an edifying sight to see these jibs on their first night struggling with their hammocks.

The hammocks hung in the navy, you know, are very unlike those in which people swing under the trees in the country. The navy hammocks are made of heavy canvas, and are slung from the beams of the ship. They are usually hung quite high from the deck, so that it is not easy for a beginner to climb into one with any degree of grace—even if he manages to get in at all. Usually the novice struggles in from one side and goes head over heels out at the other—mattresses, pillows and bed clothes all accompanying him. After two or three unsuccessful attempts of this sort, however, the greenest begins to improve, and one or two weeks of practice is sufficient to make any one an adept in the art.—St. Nicholas.

Six Hundred Millions of Cash.

If one of those giants about which we heard so much in our younger days was to develop a modern Hill Sykes tendency and select the treasury department as the scene of his operations, he might make a pretty good haul, provided the watchmen were asleep at the time.

Suppose all the money in the treasury were piled up in one room. My giant burglar would find at his hand $234,000,000 in gold and silver, $250,000,000 in bonds, and an additional $100,000,000 in new silver dollars, if he happened to time his visit when the new silver vault in the main courtyard is full, and a silver stream of $600,000 a day is steadily flowing into that subterranean treasure house.

Here is nearly $600,000,000. Just think of it! More money than can be found in any bank in Europe. The Bank of England has only $101,000,000; the Bank of France, $452,000,000; the Imperial Bank of Germany, $297,000,000.—Washington Cor. Boston Globe.

A Dinner to Suit.

That food has an effect on the mind and actions was believed in by Mosop, who always ordered his dinner to suit the character he was about to play. For Zanga, in the "Revenge," manager for Barbarossa, veal cutlets, and for Richard, pork.—Gentleman's Magazine.

CLOTHES OF THE DEAD

The Old Custom and the New—Second Hand Clothing Dealers.

It used to be, among the women of a past generation, a custom to leave their clothes by will in the same manner that they did their "second best bedstead" or any other gift worth mentioning. Had their furs, laces, brocades and "body linen" among their nearest kin, and generally left the planter and sometimes things to old family servants or poor relations. But these personal possessions, with the exception of laces, are rarely bequeathed nowadays. Mrs. John Jacob Astor kept to the old customs, and I saw a poor, pretty girl wearing one of her sealskin coats last week, it having been specially bequeathed to her in the will. The usual course is that taken by the heirs of Mrs. A. T. Stewart, who sold all her enormous wardrobe to dealers in second hand clothes. Though little was said about it at the time, a good many society women took occasion to purchase certain things through the dealers, but generally hand-embroidered stockings, silk underwear and gloves, which would not be recognized and which they got very cheaply.

There is a woman on Fifth avenue who makes a business of buying the wardrobes of dead women, and who is fast making a fortune out of the bargains she gets. Most of her customers are people whose goods from her have no idea of the real society, but perhaps she will be fairly a dealer in imported goods and has certain French and English boxes and cases into which she packs many of her goods and sells them as new. She will take the whole wardrobe of the deceased, new and old, good and bad, and then sits down through a careful process of selection. The new things, or those nearly so, which are really imported or have that appearance, she packs into the boxes and ties them up daintily and disposes of them to rich customers. Many a time a woman has come to her and said: "I want to find something—stockings, gloves or what not—like some I wore last Mrs. Quelquechose have. See if you can find them for me." The dealer has in course of time sent her a note saying that she has found something very near what she asked for. In reality they are Mrs. Quelquechose's own, and the dealer had them all the while. The gowns that are new or very nearly new she sells to the dressmakers, who freshen them up a bit and sell them to out of town customers.

Then the dealer has a list of customers who are perfectly familiar with the real nature of her goods. They are mostly women who are struggling to keep their place in society, with less money and a great desire to keep up appearances. They keep the run of her place and get some bargains, because though in things they buy are somewhat worn, they are worth the money for the good Parisian cut and style. They buy from her black and inconspicuous gowns that are like those worn by a dozen other women who are likely to be recognized, and sometimes they have turned them over at home and buy them for the sake of the good material in them. There is a third class of the wornout and shabby clothes, sheets, shoes and general belongings which are sold in a lump to the junk and dealers in the Bowery. And so all the things that have been the dear dead women of our households become useful to the far winds, worn by her friends, sometimes, her servants, strangers and women whom in life she would have turned from her door in scorn she passed. There is something very pathetic to me in the use, in much disposal and use of these most intimate personal possessions of a lovely woman. The old way was best.—Cor. Brooklyn Eagle.

How to Develop the Lungs.

The exercise which I have found of most value in developing the lungs may be described as follows: Standing erect as possible, with shoulders thrown back and chest forward, the arms hanging close to the body, the head up, and the firmly closed, inhalation is to be taken through the nose, at the same time the extended arms are to be gradually raised, the back of the hands upward, until they meet above the head, each other above the head. The movement should be so regulated that the arms will be extended directly over the head at the moment the lungs are completely filled. The position should be maintained from five to thirty seconds before the reverse process is begun. As the arms are gradually lowered the breath is exhaled slowly, so the lungs shall be as nearly freed from breath as possible at the time the arms again reach the first position at the side.

By these movements the greatest expansion possible is reached by upon inspiration the weight of the shoulders and pectoral muscles are lifted, allowing the thorax to expand fully, while upon exhalation in lowering the arms we utilize the additional force of this pressure upon the upper thorax to render expiration as complete as possible. These deep respirations should be repeated twice or six times, and the exercise gone through with five or six times a day. It is hardly necessary to remark that the clothing must in no way interfere with the exercise. In some cases this exercise is more advantageous than taking lying flat on the back, instead of standing. In the patient the inspiratory muscles become rapidly strengthened by opposing the atmospheric pressure exerted by the abdominal organs against the expanding lungs, and, on the other hand, expiration is more perfect and full on account of the pressure of these organs. This is an exercise now advocated by several leading vocal teachers of Europe.—John L. Davis, M. D.

A Chicagoan at Lunch.

That a Chicagoan dislikes to lose any time is patent to an observer in any of the down town restaurants during the noon hour. Almost every second enter has a paper propped up before him and is devouring it with a hungry avidity while he devours his lunch he also devours the news at the same time. When he finishes one side of his paper he lays down his knife and fork long enough to expose a fresh side to his view, when he resumes the double occupation of reading and eating. The average Chicago business man can consume a fry without missing a news item, and can keep posted on the affairs of the city without overlooking an oyster.—Chicago Herald.

HOLIDAYS IN GERMANY.

Pleasant Life Led by the People of Berlin—Their Recreations.

Somehow life in Europe seems more like a holiday than in America—even among the so called working classes. In the first place there are so many church festivals that often it interferes sadly with an unfortunate foreigner who has planned to finish his business within a certain limit of time. He often finds it necessary to consult the calendar and see whether some saint has not gotten ahead of him. We lost two days in Amsterdam, one in Berlin and nearly another in Moscow; but fortunately the latter was in honor of some one whom they did not think epitaic enough, and so saved it. Then, too, the Saturday half holiday seems to be very general, and the length of each working day is much shorter than with us. There is a great deal more time to make a holiday attractive in Europe than in America. If the governments seem to be hard on their subjects in some things, they have at least made great provisions for their happiness in this respect. In America our Fourth of July and Christmas and New Year's, as I think, are three of the most tiresome days in the year to get through. We have so few such days that we are at a loss as to how to dispose of ourselves and kill the time.

But here every one seems to appreciate them with all the eagerness of an American boy, and perhaps on the whole they accomplish as much, enjoy life more and live longer. Here, for instance, in Berlin is a large park within one of the business districts. It is entirely free and there are no restrictions and no impertinences. There are fountains and ponds and statuary and flowers and trees in abundance and in every sense is the park a delightful place to spend a good time. Then adjoining are the Zoological Gardens, which are stocked with animals and birds, and with every thing pertaining to the science of zoology, make them a pleasant place of resort. Here every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday afternoon from 3 to 5 is the time of the finest military bands give open air concerts, which are very popular music. There is but a trifling admission fee, and hundreds of families—fathers, mothers and children—come out together and take their dinners at the fine restaurant connected with the gardens, or it may be bring their own provisions with them. And so they have the very most kind of a time, and all the while the air filled with cool, delicious music as was heard during the centennial year, when one of the German emperor's military bands visited the United States. There is no interruption. The best of good order prevails. All people seem to understand that they are not prepared to do a better day's work on the morrow than they would have done without these few hours of relaxation.

The "Crater den Linden" in its day was doubtless a fine street, but of late years the magnificent old trees have died out and been replaced by small ones, so that aside from the buildings which line it it is no finer than our Madison avenue. Disease killed out the trees, they say; and now the street is to be lighted by electricity, and the trees, they say, and now the street is to be lighted by electricity, and the trees, they say, and now mourning because they find it not. Thousands upon thousands of dollars have been spent, and it is to be hope that they may all in this been. And yet it may be but by all. The Gerhardt Electric Bitters, if used according to directions and the use persisted in, will bring you good digestion and cast the demon dyspepsia and its stall instead suppose. We recommend Electric Bitters for dyspepsia and all diseases of liver, stomach, and kidneys. Sold at 50c. and $1 per bottle, by F. G. Hines and Co., druggists.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A Specific Remedy. A Treatment Free.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and contiguous tubes. Microscopic research has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are quickly relieved from one to three applications made at home by the patient sure in two weeks. For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of six cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above candidly. 16eow

DEFEAT OF CLEVELAND.

THE PRESS ON THE ELECTIONS.

The Democratic Party Will Rise in Triumph Above the Defeat of To-Day.

The result of yesterday's election will make Benjamin Harrison the next president of the United States. It will place the national government in the hands of the republican party for four years from the 4th of March next. It will settle, for the present, at least, and on the lines marked out by that party, the great and important tariff issue which the country has so long and thoroughly discussed. When President Cleveland in his famous message to congress demanded a reform of the tariff, he furnished to the country a greater and more vital question for consideration and discussion than any other which had been before the people for twenty years. He swept aside the dead issues of the time and brought the democracy face to face with a great and important principle. It was a courageous, darings, and, we believe, a patriotic act. Viewed from a political standpoint this very issue may be charged with Mr. Cleveland's defeat, he has nevertheless won a victory great in its results and most important to the best interests of the nation. He has compelled attention to the fact that unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation, and for this will generations of his country rise up and call him blessed. The democratic party gave to the president a loyal and hearty support in his struggle for the emancipation of the war taxes. It stood by him unflinchingly through the greatest and ablest canvass that has ever been made in this country. But a nation is not converted from old beliefs in a year. The tariff is one of our most cherished political dogmas. The country was not educated to the point of promptly and suddenly investigating the claim made for this political fetish, and that is why Benjamin Harrison was yesterday elected president of the United States.—New York Graphic.

"Gov. Hill says well that President Cleveland "is satisfied with the 5,000 of the people. He did, indeed. In the nowester, braver man never occupied the white house, nor yet one who received the country greater, purer service. The kinghood of party leadership was denied him. The gifts of magnetism and grace were not given him by nature. He was born out of the cradle in the hour of his birth. But loyalty, courage, integrity, devotion to duty, a rugged, self-reliant spirit, and a stern, unflagging faith in truth and in the sure supremacy can afford to step down and out with the sense that, however fallingly, he was true to his convictions and made no one ashamed to point to him as a selfish interests of any kind."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

It would be improper to refrain from comment on the wholly unprecedented respect of Mr. Cleveland's defeat. His misdemeanor is that he sought to lighten the burdens of the people. He, as the executive, begged for a smaller civil and miscellaneous list. The legislative insisted that he should be better supplied with unneeded contributions from the people. The attitude of the republican legislative was unheard of. The fact that the people should support that attitude seems incredible.—Chicago Herald.

"The tariff question," says the Leader, "is settled for many years to come." No greater mistake could be made. When President Cleveland sent his now celebrated tariff reform message to congress he inaugurated an irrepressible conflict between two opposing ideas—a conflict which must from its very nature go on until the tenth triumphs, for nothing is ever settled until it is settled right. Unsettled questions have no pity for the peace of statesmen or politicians."—Grand Rapids Democrat.

Those who look beyond the turmoil of the present cannot fail to see that the cause supported by the democracy yesterday is in the end bound to win. It cannot suffer from one defeat or from ten defeats, for it represents the principles upon which this government must be conducted, if free institutions are to be maintained in this country. Will the democrats of "the Old Roman" flashing 28 fully through the confusion and tumult of the fray. To all approaches for help, which the president thought he had no right to give, his one answer was that this was not the administration's but the people's battle. When he was called directly from national democratic headquarters whether he was for us or against us he smiled pleasantly and considered which was only half a jest as a tribute to his integrity, as indeed it was, though at the expense of his wisdom. It is true to say of him that he did not raise his hand to help himself from the beginning to the end of the campaign; that he did not encourage anybody else to help him, and that in many cases he did not permit his official subordinates to help him. This was magnificent, but it was not politics. Undoubtedly, it and all that had preceded it made the difference in the vote of the state of New York. It cost us, and him, the loss of it."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The democratic party defeated itself. Never, from the time he was first nominated in April until election day this year, has the party given Cleveland genuine support. It distrusted him always. It had no use for a man whose only party capital was his reputation as an honest, upright executive who dared to do right; who did not believe that the chief end of a party was to get offices and distribute patronage and make money out of government jobs. He has been a stumbling block and a rock of offense from the beginning. Since the day he entered his presidential office and showed at first that he es teemed the pledges of reform which carried him there, he was the target for the reproof, the scorn and the sneers of nearly every prominent democratic newspaper and every prominent man in his party. A republican president could hardly have had to endure more abuse and contumely than every democratic editor from Maine to Oregon has poured upon Cleveland the first year of his official life for trying to keep his promises.—Detroit Journal.

"Gov. Hill says well that President Cleveland "is satisfied with the 5,000 of the people. He did, indeed. In the nowester, braver man never occupied the white house, nor yet one who received the country greater, purer service. The kinghood of party leadership was denied him. But loyalty, courage, integrity, devotion to duty, a rugged, self-reliant spirit, and a stern, unflagging faith in truth and in the sure supremacy can afford to step down and out with the sense that, however fallingly, he was true to his convictions and made no one ashamed to point to him as a selfish interests of any kind."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

It would be improper to refrain from comment on the wholly unprecedented respect of Mr. Cleveland's defeat. His misdemeanor is that he sought to lighten the burdens of the people. He, as the executive, begged for a smaller civil and miscellaneous list. The legislative insisted that he should be better supplied with unneeded contributions from the people. The attitude of the republican legislative was unheard of. The fact that the people should support that attitude seems incredible.—Chicago Herald.

"The tariff question," says the Leader, "is settled for many years to come." No greater mistake could be made. When President Cleveland sent his now celebrated tariff reform message he inaugurated an irrepressible conflict between two opposing ideas—a conflict which must from its very nature go on until the tenth triumphs, for nothing is ever settled until it is settled right. Unsettled questions have no pity for the peace of statesmen or politicians."—Grand Rapids Democrat.

Those who look beyond the turmoil of the present cannot fail to see that the cause supported by the democracy yesterday is in the end bound to win. It cannot suffer from one defeat or from ten defeats, for it represents the principles upon which this government must be conducted, if free institutions are to be maintained in this country.

KNIFED BY DAVID HILL.

HOW CLEVELAND WAS DEFEATED

New York State Manipulated Solely in the Interest of Its Chief Magistrate.

NEW YORK, NOV. 8.—The jeremiads are being sung today. One is the wail of the mugwump, and the other is the requiem over the blasted prospects of Governor David Bennett Hill. The political career of his Excellency is without doubt wound up. He organized this state for himself without paying any attention to Cleveland. All the liquor men and disreputable members of society generally were for Hill, as he has vetoed the high license bills both years they were passed by the republican legislature. All through the state where his friends are the strongest he ran ahead of Cleveland. Where Cleveland democracy is strongest he suffered but slightly, but not in proportion to the number of mugwump votes found in those localities. In his own county Hill ran 520 votes ahead of Cleveland. In Erie county where Cleveland used to live, but where now Governor Hill's friends have control of the democratic organization. Cleveland was defeated by over 2,000, while Hill has had a good plurality, a difference of about 7,000 votes. In Rensselaer county, where Cleveland was defeated by 374, Hill had 780 plurality. This is the county where Chairman Edward Murphy, of the democratic state committee, lives and is the leader. In Monroe county, where Governor Hill's friend, secretary of state Cook, lives and has control of the German vote, Cleveland was defeated by 5,000, and Hill ran ahead of Cleveland more than 2,000 votes. Rochester is in this county. In Onondaga county where Hill has many friends in the democratic organization, he ran 1,200 votes ahead of Cleveland. Syracuse is in this county, and Hill's friends control the city organization there. In Oneida county Hill ran over 800 votes ahead of Cleveland. David Dudley Field, the state committeeman from this county until he was put off the committee by the Cleveland men on account of his disreputable character, is a great ex-gambler and a friend of the governor.

In New York the liquor men had a Hill organization of their own, and made enough difference in the vote throughout Hill without any gains throughout the state. They were encouraged in their purpose by the state committee. On election night, when it was ascertained that the state told that Cleveland was defeated and Hill was elected, the state committee held a jubilation meeting. It was more making up of minds about it that the crowd around the hotel took it up, and the news spread through the town. Senator Gorman was sent for from the national committee to the Hoffman House. And told the state committee that they might have at least the decency to conceal their joy. After this they subsided for a while.

Another cause for feeling against the democratic state committee is the way it acted in giving out the returns. It was evident about 8.30, so soon as the news came from Brooklyn that Cleveland was defeated. The news from Brooklyn was not given out to the crowd around the headquarters who were waiting for the returns, but it was announced that Cleveland's plurality was 13,000 in place of 12,000. While the crowd was taking in this news and cheering the result and what they believed was a victory for Cleveland, several prominent democrats, friends and friends of the governor went out in the Hoffman House and placed bets against the unfortunate democrats assembled there. They took advantage of the inside knowledge on the apparent imposition practiced on the crowd to win many thousands of dollars. When the report was circulated that Cleveland's plurality in Brooklyn was 19,000, bets of two to one were made that Cleveland would carry the state. A well known bookmaker, James E. Kelly, of the firm of Kelly & Bias, together with these men who had information from the state committee, took these bets and all others that could find, and these confiding democrats who placed confidence in the state committee were worked to the extent of all the money they could put up or got trusted for. It is safe to say that these men will never have the opportunity to practice a similar imposition on the democrats of this city.

The Treasury Department Rules on the Importation of Spirits.

The Treasury Department has ruled that "Benedictine" is dutiable at $2 per gallon, and 3 cents per bottle, and not at the rate of 50 per cent. ad valorem as a proprietary medine.

Lewis N. Clarke, plaintiff in error, vs. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Clarke, who was master of the excursion steamer Mayflower, running between Pittsburg and Beaver Rocks, was convicted of violation of the law of Pennsylvania prohibiting the sale of liquor without license, and was sentenced to imprisonment. Application was made for habeas corpus which was refused by Justices Harlan and Bradley, of the Supreme Court, and the prisoner was brought to the full Supreme Court. It is claimed in behalf of the plaintiff in error that the state law under which he was tried apply to vessels engaged in navigation; that the effect of the law would be to prohibit the sale of liquor on boats, and to regulate it contrary to the act; and that unless the law is held to be void, the commerce of the United States will be prevented from entering the State of Pennsylvania. It is further claimed that Congress alone has the right to regulate commerce, and that the license to engage in the coasting trade makes the vessel by United States regulation, with the right to exchange commodities, subject to Congress. The Supreme Court, after hearing the argument for the plaintiff, declined to hear argument on behalf of the Commonwealth. This action, it is believed, indicates that the court will decide that the law in force in the State on the case as presented by counsel for Clarke.

INTERESTING TO PROHIBITIONISTS.

Liquor Sold Upon Rivers Is Subject to State Laws.

The Supreme Court of the United States has heard argument in two cases of interest to Prohibitionists and steamboat men, viz:

In answer to an inquiry relative to the gauging of whiskey on the Mississippi River, the Treasury Department has replied that distilled spirits must be gauged at the port of original landing unless entered for immediate transportation without appraisement. If gauged on a steamboat anchored in the stream, or at any place, if on a warehouse vessel, they are not to be stamped until withdrawn for consumption. The gauger returns of transported American whisky entered for transportation must be transmitted with the entry to the port of destination, and the capacity, wastage, etc., set on the back thereof.

A PHILADELPHIA HOMICIDE.

A Cuban Murders a Mrs. Stockes—The Prisoner Is Now Unknown.

A mysterious shooting affair, which will in all likelihood cause the death of Mrs. Hettie Stockes, occurred in Philadelphia. Pa. Three shots were heard in her house, and an officer, upon investigation, found that a Cuban named Fred Raimos had shot Mrs. Stockes three times, two of the bullets taking effect in her face and the third one in one of her lungs. The officer arrested Raimos, but succeeded in doing so only after the prisoner had fired a shot and had then clubbed into insensibility. Both Mrs. Stockes and Raimos were taken to a hospital. No, the slightest clew as to the motive for the crime was learned.

Polish Revolutionists.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph says: General Gourko has sent a telegram to the Minister of the Interior announcing that he has discovered the existence of a revolutionary society in Poland with numerous branches. Many members have been arrested, including a number of students, a magistrate, and several Government officials, all of whom are in prison at Warsaw. The society has issued a manifesto regretting the failure of the recent attempt on the life of the Czar at Kelais, and threatening a repetition of the attempt.

Tramped to Death by Horses.

Joseph Rogers, aged 38 years, a mulatman, was killed at College Point, near Long Island City, L. I., by horses tramping upon him. Seven men on horseback, one of them named Myers, a cowboy, were riding through the village. Rogers was loading the wagon with milk-cans, when one of the men rode over him, and was followed by two others. One man attempted to stop the persons who made an attempt to rescue Rogers from under the horses' feet.

Counterfeit Silver in Indiana.

Counterfeit 25-cent pieces of the issue of 1877 have been again placed in circulation at Tipton, Ind. A large number of people have been imposed upon, and several of the merchants have been loadly victimized. The secret service department has been notified, and an effort will be made to secure the arrest of the counterfeiters.

Fatal Shooting at Louisville.

F. H. Pitt, a lightning-rod agent, was shot and fatally wounded at Louisville, Ky., by Daniel McDaniels, one of his employes. The cause of the shooting is unknown. McDaniels fled.

A Forger Hoaxed.

Near South Windham, Me., a terrible explosion occurred in the mills of the Oriental Powder Company, and the buildings were blown to atoms. Two men were fatally injured.

Col. Duffy's Funeral.

The remains of Col. James Duffy, of Martinsburg, were interred at Lancaster, Pa. Among the pall-bearers were Senator Don Cameron, George W. Childs, Secretary Bayard, and President Roberts, of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

A Sewing-Girl's Luck.

Some months ago, at Kansas City, Mo., Lewis Naylor, a dry-goods dealer, tendered one of his sewing-girls, Jennie Quick, aged 17, with a check in payment for her services. Miss Quick demanded cash, a quarrel followed, and while being ejected from the store her arm was broken. She sued for $10,000 damages, and has just secured a verdict for $7,000.

Captain Kidd's Treasures.

James M. Eddy, of Providence, R. I., dug up 1,500 silver coins in his back yard at Hexamite. They were elected there by an ancestor of his, who sailed with Captain Kidd, buried his treasure on his farm, and left a chart locating it. Mr. Eddy will keep on digging.

MRS. LUCY PARSONS.

She Goes to Europe to Take Part in the Anarchists' Demonstration.

A New York special of the 31 inst. says:

Mrs. Lucy Parsons, the widow of the executed anarchist of Chicago, has gone to London, England, on the invitation of the British social Democratic Federation, of which William Morris, the author of "Earthly Paradise," is a leader, for the purpose of taking part in the celebration of Saturday, the 11th of November, the anniversary of the Chicago martyrs. Two memorial meetings, at both of which Mrs. Parsons is to be present, are to be held there that day, the last in Aegosta Park in the afternoon, and the other in Exeter Hall in the afternoon. She may also be present at another meeting—a memorial anniversary the evening of the 11th. It is said that the Chicago executions would be commemorated this year not only in Great Britain but also in France, Italy, Switzerland, Belgium, Spain, and other European countries. Mrs. Parsons will return to the United States. She expects to return before December to Chicago.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF TRADE.

The Volume of Legitimate Business Unprecedented in a Presidential Year.

The review of trade for last week, as reported by R. G. Dun & Co., is as follows:

The simple fact that bank exchanges outside of New York, in one week, are one-sixth of a Presidential campaign, exceeded those of last year by more than one-third, and those of 1882 by nearly one-half, gives some idea how the volume of legitimate business is unprecedented, for only a part of the increase can be attributed to excess of speculative operations. Reports in regard to the business of the country are of the utmost satisfaction, Boston and Detroit, and a satisfactory business at nearly all other cities. The strike of the Knights of Labor, which was the prevailing quiet, is attributed to political excitement, and a fight of authority in many cases, which, it is said, was not active, demanded at Kansas City, will not be active, demanded at Kansas City, will not be active, demanded at Kansas City, will not be

A writ of habeas corpus was refused by Justice Harlan and Bradley, of the Supreme Court, to which cases were then brought on the full Supreme Court. The plaintiff contends that Congress alone has the right to regulate commerce, and that the license to engage in the coasting trade granted the vessel by the United States carries with it the right to exchange cargo for whatever liquor, and that the State law is therefore void. Counsel, after hearing argument for the plaintiff, decided to take the case under advisement. This action, it is believed, indicates that the Court is prepared to decide in favor of the State on the case as presented by counsel for Clarke.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF TRADE.

The Volume of Legitimate Business Unprecedented in a Presidential Year.

The review of trade for last week, as reported by R. G. Dun & Co., is as follows:

The simple fact that bank exchanges outside of New York in the last week, on one of a Presidential campaign, exceeded those of last year by 7 per cent, and those of the year before by 3 per cent, is sufficient evidence of the volume of legitimate business to be considered, for such a part of the immense can be attributed to excess of speculative operations. Reports indicate marked improvement in the various lines of trade at Nashville, Memphis and Detroit, and a fair increase at Louisville, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Paul, Kansas City and Omaha. In Chicago the prevailing quiet is attributed to political excitement. A lower or advancing tendency was noted at St. Paul, and an active demand for lumber at Duluth, with much better business prospects in Western Kansas, which leads to caution in dealing with that section. Improvement in collections was noticed at Southwestern and Northwestern centers. The business failures in the United States for the past week were 201 against 207 last week, and 179 in the West. The coal trade was somewhat dull. The stock market, after a little depression, was less active but stronger, and the average price of 50 leading stocks was a fraction higher than the previous week. The exports increased the last month about 7 per cent, and the imports fell below last year's about 7 per cent. Wheat, corn, coffee, cotton, lard, and petroleum are lower than the previous week, the general average of prices, nevertheless, remaining substantially the same. The failures for the week numbered 201, as compared with a total of 179 the previous week.

MURCHISON THE ERROR.

The Los Angeles "Times" Explains How the Letter Became Public.

The Times of Los Angeles, Cal., the paper that first printed Lord Sackville's letter, publishes what the editor claims are the real facts connected with the Murchison-West correspondence. The Times says:

Information has been gathered directly from the author of the letter, and it is now in order to answer all the facts in the case. The idea of writing a letter to Minister West originated with Murchison himself in the latter part of August or early in September. He is a republican citizen of California, and thought he was doing a service to his country and his friend in exposing a man. Murchison said at the outset, and before sending the letter, that the object was to perpetrate a joke or gratify curiosity, but to get West's answer. Murchison's first letter was in the letter. Murchison's letter was dated Sept. 4, and West's answer Sept. 12. The Minister's letter was received at Pomona Sept. 20 and kept by the receiver until Oct. 12, a full month after it was received in Los Angeles. Mr. A. Wolf, City Attorney of Los Angeles, and Mr. Lewis Vincent, Secretary of the Republican Committee, Henry A. Gage, Colonel-at-Large at the Chicago Convention; Harrison Gray Otis, editor of the Los Angeles Times, and one other local candidate. They saw the letter and knew its contents. It was discussed at length, and it was unanimously determined by the persons present to make the letter public without delay, which was done, the date of the first publication here being Oct. 21.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

Bradstreet's Comes Out Ahead in a Famous Suit.

An important decision, and one which will be of interest to business firms, has been rendered by Judge Gordon at Philadelphia, Pa. Over Levick & Co., all merchants, sued the Bradstreet Company to recover damages for alleged untrue information furnished them. The plaintiffs had asked the agency to give them a report of the Union Refining and Manufacturing Company, of New Jersey, and they reported that the company had a paid-up capital of $600,000, and were in good condition. On the strength of this Crew, Levick & Co. gave them credit for the amount of $500, which they have never been able to collect. It was alleged that the Union Refining Company was insolvent at the time the report was furnished. The Judge, on a motion of non-suit, granted it on the ground that the contract was as if between two private people; the defendent corporation being a private and not a public one, and that Crew, Levick & Co., in signing their contract with them, had waived the right to recover on the ground on which they are now striving to get a verdict. He said that if they could have proved willful or malicious negligence the circumstances would have been different.

A SUB-COMMISSION FOR AMERICA.

Testimony in the Parnell Case to Be Sought in This Country.

A well-known Irish attorney of Denver, Col., has received information from London to the effect that after reaching a certain stage in the proceedings of the Times-Parnell investigation the Judges constituting the commission will appoint a sub-commission who will come to America to take testimony relative to the utterances of the Irish Nationalists in this country. The subcommission will hold sessions in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Denver, and will subpoena witnesses from all parts of the country, who will be examined as to their utterances as published in various papers. The gentleman, who expects to appear as one of the attorneys in the case, further stated that if the witnesses fail to appear before the commission it will be taken for granted that they are afraid to answer the questions that may be propounded to them.

THE NEW WESTERN.

The New Street-Car and Wagon Bridge at Omaha Opened.

The new Council Bluffs and Omaha street car and wagon bridge has been formally opened to the public. At least one hundred thousand people were present at the exercises. Special trains on all the railroads leading into the Bluffs brought thousands from the State of Nebraska. The Governors of Iowa and Nebraska were present and participated in the exercises. A mammoth industrial display was made by both cities far surpassing anything ever seen there. The procession was over six miles long. The work of constructing the bridge was begun last November. The structure with approaches is 3,000 feet long and cost $600,000. It is handsome and durable and will be of incalculable advantage to the cities.

BELVA AND WELLES.

The Two Candidates for President and Vice President of the Equal Rights Party.

Charles Stewart Wolles, of New York, who was nominated for Vice President by the Equal Rights party in place of A. H. Love, has written a letter of acceptance. His platform contains twelve planks, the principal one of which, of course, is suffrage for both men and women. He wants to stop the adulteration of food, to reform the marriage and divorce laws, and favors a protrata tax. Government ownership of all public improvements, and several other things. The letter is now about equally divided.

PERISHED IN THE FLAMES.

Four Persons Lose Their Lives in a Destructive Fire in Minneapolis.

A prairie fire started at Jackson, Minn., and spread quickly, causing the farmers to flee. The bodies of four persons who perished in the flames have been recovered, their names being Henry Oebsenreiter, aged 16; his mother, aged 40; Mrs. Mollie O'Connor, and a baby 4 weeks old. Henry Kopp was fatally burned. Many others were injured, but none fatally burned. The losses amount to $20,000.

INTERESTING SUITS.

A Negro, Having Been Driven Out of Fort Bend (Texas), Wants Damages.

Some interesting suits are soon to be filed in the United States Court in Galveston, Texas, against a number of citizens of Fort Bend County for damages growing out of recent troubles in Fort Bend, the result of which was the driving of a number of colored people out of that county. Among them was Charles Ferguson, who has since been in Chicago, where he has enlisted in his cause some prominent legal talent.

New Railway Mail Division.

The Tenth Division of the railway mail service has been put in operation, with headquarters at St. Paul, Minn. Its Superintendent, Walter H. Butler, has been actively engaged in its organization for a month past. The new division includes the Northern Peninsula of Michigan, the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, and the Territories of Dakota and Montana. It will have twenty railway postal cars, employing 652 men.

A Family Monument.

—George H. Vanderbilt has purchased 1,000 acres of mountain lands near Asheville, N. C., where he will build a large industrial institute for the education of poor white children who will be taught how to work in wood and metals, and thus become skilled mechanics. The institute will be a monument to his family. Mr. Vanderbilt intends to make it a monument to his family.

Murder at St. Louis.

Henry Lange, a river contractor at St. Louis, Mo., quarreled with his sister-in-law, a Mrs. Sudbeck, and slapped her in the face. Attorney McDonnell, and lawyer in Knapp, Stout & Co.'s mill, interfered, and struck him twice with total effect. Lange is in jail. The victim went to St. Louis from Muscatine, Iowa, where he has a wife and seven children.

Will Send a Man-of-War to Hayti.

The situation in Hayti is so serious that a man-of-war will be sent to that country for the protection of American interests. The vessel is now undergoing repairs at Norfolk, and instructions have been issued to hasten the work on that vessel so that she can be put into commission at once. She will proceed direct to Port-au-Prince.

Appointed Charge d'Affaires.

The Hon. Michael Henry Dulles has been appointed British Charge d'Affaires at Washington. Lord Sackville has returned to England on leave of absence. It is understood that the English Government will allow his case to rest until after the Presidential election.

Railroads to Consolidate.

It has been learned from a reliable source that the Chicago, St. Paul and Kansas City Railroad will consolidate with the Iowa Central within a month. A. B. Stickney is President of both roads, and the closest of advisers on matters of this kind.

Shot Her Dead.

While Polly Phillips, aged 20, was watching the Decoration parade in Fort Madison, a man walked up to her, and exclaimed "There, take that!" and shot her dead. The murderer, whose name is said to be Gallowey, escaped.

Twenty-one Persons Killed.

A St. Petersburg special says: It is reported that the accident to the Czar's train resulted in the killing of twenty-one persons. The Minister of War and the commander of the body guard were injured.

HARRISON IS ELECTED.

THE INDIANA MAN WILL BE PRESIDENT AFTER MARCH 4.

New York State Gives Harrison a Plurality of 10,000 and Upward—Fifty Republican, Probably Elected Governor of Illinois—The Southern States Roll Up Large Democratic Majorities.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.

Harrison has been elected President of the United States. He has carried New York State, his plurality exceeding that given upon the vote on President in New York City showed a Democratic plurality of 50,000, and in Kings County a majority of 20,000. In this last county gain over 1881 of about 13,000 in New York and a loss of 3,000 in Kings County. In all the interior counties of the State large Harrison gains were recorded, and he carries the Hudson River with a plurality of at least 20,000. Cleveland's plurality in Albany County will be about 1,500, against 5,000 last year.

Gov. Hill ran 5,000 ahead of Cleveland in New York City. He ran ahead of Cleveland in the interior counties by probably 8,000 votes. Hill's plurality will be about 18,000, against a majority of 19,000 for the State ticket a year ago. The Legislature is Republican by a large majority. Cornell, Republican, is elected, and that the Republican candidate, Judge Rumsey, is chosen for the Court of Appeals.

The Congressional delegation in New York City will be 15 Democrats and 5 Republicans, instead of 16 Democrats and 4 Republicans, with an increase of two Republican members in the Interior.

Tremendous interest centered in the New York Stock Exchange, which, in the Gould memorial Hall, easily led both his opponents by 10 votes, and in the Western Union building, where the news was received, it was hailed with a cheer that shook the building. Democrats there, even the women, joined in the cheering, and when the name of Jay Gould was added to the cheers for Hill and Cleveland, it was a long time before the cheering could be stopped.

The Democratic vote is increased about 5,000 over 1884.

Both parties claim the State by a good round majority, and it will be the fourth time in 20 years that Chairman Usher for the Democrats by 10,000. Returns are now slow in coming in.

Cleveland's majority will be from 150,000 to 170,000.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Scattering returns indicate the election of all four Congressmen by the Democrats. Both parties claim the State.

DELAWARE.

The Democrats have carried the State by reduced majorities.

RHODE ISLAND.

Rhode Island gives Harrison over 4,000 plurality. A close complication of the vote is as follows: Harrison, 21,968; Cleveland, 17,968; Fisk, 3,378.

KENTUCKY.

Kentucky gave Cleveland over 40,000 majority. The majority will exceed 40,000. Lexington and Louisville have gone heavily against by the Democrats. Democratic Congressmen are elected in the First, Second, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth districts, and heavy gains are reported in other districts. Foley (dem.) beat Walker in the Eleventh District, and John Wilson (rep.) has a good chance in the Ninth. The State ticket, headed by Morehead, has a majority of 2,000, against 140 two years ago.

OHIO.

The State has gone for Cleveland by 20,000 majority.

INDIANA.

The entire Democratic Congressional delegation was elected by majorities ranging from 500 to 2,000. There was no opposition to the Democratic candidates. The Democrats have a majority of from 15,000 to 20,000 in the State.

ILLINOIS.

Returns received at this office show the Chicago District gains 1,200 over the vote of 1884. Indications point to a Republican Governor.

ALABAMA.

Cleveland carried Alabama by a majority fully equal to that of four years ago. Heavy gains are reported in the Mountain Region. Reports from other parts of the State show a solid Democratic Congressional delegation, was elected by a majority very far in advance of that in 1884, and the vote grows in many places seemed to manifest a greater interest in the result than the white.

ILLINOIS.

Returns indicate that Cleveland has carried the State by 25,000 votes, and the Democrats have elected eight out of ten Congressmen, the loss of a gain of one Republican Congressman, and gives the Democrats a gain of six members at least certain, with a chance of another.

GIVING THANKS.

The President Proclaims Thursday, Nov. 29, as a Day of Thanksgiving.

The President has issued the following proclamation:

"Current thanksgiving and gratitude are due from the American people to Almighty God for the abundance of the fruits of the earth, which have ripened the last few months under favorable conditions to them a free government. With peace and tranquility prevailing, we are in the way of prosperity and greatness. He has not withheld from us the rain and the sunshine which have ripened the harvests, and we are dependence upon His ordinances, and should be mindful of the source of our blessings. Wherefore, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby appoint and set apart Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day for public thanksgiving and prayer, and I do recommend that on that day we all cease from our ordinary occupations, and in our respective places of worship, with prayer and praise, render unto God our Father, who dwelleth in the heavens, the tribute of hearts whose hearts have remembered the bounties of the year, and have been touched with the tender compassion which has followed the losses of our fellow-men by the ravages of fire, pestilence and tempest. Let us give thanks for peace and health, for the preservation of our homes and firesides, and for the prosperity which has added to national greatness.

"Let us remember the effective dispensation with which a portion of our land has been visited, and let our hearts be softened and our hands be opened to the needy and distressed, in a generous emulation to the deeply pious of ancient times, who, when they reaped their harvests, left some of the ripe ears ungathered for the poor and the stranger.

"For years we have enjoyed a measure of prosperity which has exceeded that the blessings of other lands, and we have been in danger of forgetting that we are the recipients of the bounties of the Most High. We have become so engrossed in our business affairs that we have ceased to offer to the Ruler of the universe the tribute of praise and obedience which is His due. Let us, in the midst of our business, pause long enough to offer our thanks for the bounties which we have received, and ask for the continuance of the blessings which we have enjoyed during the past year.

"Done at the city of Washington, on the first day of November, eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, and in the year of Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirteenth.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my name and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"GROVER CLEVELAND.

"By the President:

"T. F. BAYARD,

"Secretary of State."

GEN. BEECH'S REPORT.

What Has Been Done by the Army Ordnance Bureau During the Year.

(Washington, D. C.) special.)

In his annual report Gen. Benet, Chief of Ordnance, says that the amount expended $1,.00 during the last fiscal year, and that 41,139 rifles and carbines, 1,000 pistols, and 1,000 sets of cavalry accoutrements have been completed relative to the distribution of the arms, ammunition, rifling, etc., for an arm of smaller caliber than the present rifle. He has the intention to use compressed and perforated cartridges, but as yet the powder manufacturers not succeeded in producing a satisfactory article. The cartridge belt has been lately accompanied by too great a pressure. The cost of the new rifle, he says, will be still under study and trial. The results obtained in Prussia, France and Austria are not known. There is a great improvement in the manufacture of powder for cannon and rifles. The report says that a tract of nearly acres of land immediately outside of the city limits of Augusta, Ga., has been selected for an arsenal, and the work of constructing buildings thereon has begun. It is accepted. In the absence of regular appropriations for ordnance purposes the use of the proceeds from the sales of unserviceable ordnance stores has been authorized, and a experimental gun at the Watervliet Arsenal, and one at the Sandy Hook Proving Ground, has been completed. Of this place $20,000 has been expended, and the first field guns and howitzers have been finished, so that the present capacity is about 1,000 field guns and one hundred-inch and one ten-inch gun per annum.

Railroad Manager Appointed.

M. J. Carpenter, of Chicago, formerly local manager in the interest of the Chicago and Northwestern road, has been the general purchasing agent for the Duluth, Missabe and Northern Railway, which, it is claimed, has been appointed general manager of the Duluth and Iron Range, with headquarters in Duluth.

Favorable for Winter Wheat.

The weather crop bulletin issued by the signal office says: "The weather has been generally favorable for farm work in the winter-wheat States, and the rainfall for the month of October has generally put the winter-wheat crop favorably."

NOTED DAKOTA FEMALE

SHE LIVES THE LIFE OF A FAIRY AND YEARED MAIN.

Mary Ann Irvine, an Eccentric Woman Character, Dies in Fifty Quarters, Leaving Thousands—The Potato Crop—Other News Notes.

(Sioux Falls (Dak.) special.)

Mary Ann Irvine, one of the most noted characters of Dakota, is dead. She died in the residence of thirteen years in the county of Sioux Falls, she proved herself a veritable Amazon; had lived and died in the utmost filth and squalor, leaving a thousands of dollars of accumulated wealth. A woman in Dakota, nor probably man, is more dreaded by all who come in contact with her than Mrs. Irvine. Violent, vengeful and mean, she would hesitate at nothing against the person or property of any one who had offended her.

For years she enjoyed prominently a variety charges, such as applying the torch to the property of neighbors who had aroused her passions, threatening their lives, etc. A loaded revolver was her constant companion, and many a man has been made its target.

It has always been believed that Irvine had more to do with the murder of Mrs. Ingalls than Mr. Egan, who was hanged for the crime. She and Egan were seen together many occasions immediately before the murder; but no one dared challenge the aged woman, and Egan himself was too much in fear of her. The last two years she had been failing in vigor, but not in her old time energy and fierce temper. To the neighborhood, for no matter where she lived she was her center, and they quietly submitted rather than make themselves the objects of her vengeance. It was through her hovel immediately after Mrs. Ingalls disappeared that the alarm was given from a neighbor were found in the cellar, "no one ever dared enter her door, and it was only a very short time before she could be seen in her accustomed place in the door of her house. When it was discovered that the disappearance of the Canada lady, Irvine was should not be sent for, she objected to the search, and was with difficulty persuaded to be present at the search with the door for his free would she allow the cellar door to be unfastened. The search was prompted by a hatchet, which was found so full of old manure of the door of her house. The cellar door of doors before the attendants could find entrance to her cellar door, and after her death a search among her effects revealed deeds, mortgages, notes, money, cash to the amount, in the aggregate of $35,000. The woman was 63 years old and had three children, to whom her property will revert.

THE POTATO CROP.

Fl ures Showing the Yield the Present Season to Be the Largest Ever Grown.

The following estimate of the production of the United States for 1888 appeared in the Chicago Journal of Commerce: There is longer room for doubt that the potato crop of the present season is the largest ever grown in the United States. From statistics gathered by the Chicago Journal of Commerce, based on actual and authentic returns, we make the following estimate: Ohio—Average, 13,000; average yield, 90 bushels; total, 13,500,448 bushels. Indiana—Average, 12,000; average yield, 85 bushels; total, 6,791,500 bushels. Illinois—Average, 186,217; average yield, 80 bushels; total, 20,904 bushels. WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Figures from the Annual Report of Gen. Eugene Semple.

Eugene Semple, Governor of Washington Territory, in his annual report estimates the population of the Territory at 175,000, an increase of about 24,000 during the year. The assessed valuation of property is about a gain of over $65,000,000 in the last year, and the total valuation is about $200,000,000. Public lands have been entered to the extent of 1,000,000 acres, and 1,000,000 acres more are ready for entry. Timber cut last year, 92,264 acres; cash entries, 1,213,2 acres; homestead entries, 1,000,000 acres; timber land, 18,720 acres; desert land, 24,000 acres. Government work in the Territory has cost the Northern Pacific Railroad Company $12,328,700 in cash, and the Governor says, is in a prosperous condition. The total earnings of the road in the Territory are $95,700 during 1887. Good and abundant crops also in a prosperous condition. The assessment roll for the last two years has increased over 100 per cent. Immigration has been unusually active, and the Territory has the Chinese question to contend with. The Governor says, "Great pains should be taken to protect the Chinese in their rights, and to prevent their expulsion by violence. The Chinese are industrious, law-abiding people, and should be protected in their rights. The Chinese question is a delicate one, and should be treated with the utmost care and prudence. It is a question which, if not properly handled, may be productive of much trouble and expense to the Government. The Chinese are here in the Territory, and have a right to the protection of the laws. The Chinese question is a question of the Government, and should be treated as such

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Nov. 15, 1888

FOR CASH IN ADVANCE.

For 1889 we propose to put the JOURNAL as near as possible on the pay-in advance plan, and to give every subscriber the worth of his money.

There is at this date 326 subscribers on our books who are in arrears, and the aggregate amount due is more than enough to discharge every obligation against the office, and pay the running expenses three months in advance. The amount due from each is not large,—in no case exceeding five dollars,—but the aggregate is a very important matter to the publisher who is compelled to satisfy bills for help and material.

As an encouragement to more prompt paying, we make the following offer of Reduced Prices for Cash in advance, to hold good until January 1, 1889:

One year	$1 25
Six months	65
Four months	45
Three months	35
Two months	25

After that date we shall begin to strike from our list all delinquents, and make an earnest effort to conduct the paper on a cash-in-advance basis.

When you take a city paper you know that when the time is out it stops, without notice, and you cannot get it again until you pay. And there is no reason why the country paper should not be conducted pretty nearly on the same basis.

With an increase of current receipts we can meet all our bills more promptly, and make the paper in all respects brighter and newsier than ever.

Now is the time to begin.

RESULT OF ELECTION.

Grover Cleveland is defeated. Benjamin Harrison is the next president of the United States. The republicans will have a working majority in both houses of congress. Michigan is republican. The ninth congressional district is republican. Charlevoix county is republican, although the democracy captured two good offices.—clerk and register.]

Some of the causes for this result are discussed by leading papers on our first page, but the most tangible reason to the ordinary observer is, we didn't get votes enough. We had our old vote, but we didn't get our share of the increase.

But whatever the cause, whatever the temporary surprise and disappointment, democracy has too often suffered in like manner to be effectually silenced. Two years from now we shall again present a solid front, and make a vigorous demand for the reins of government.

THE OFFICIAL FIGURES.

A representative of the JOURNAL attended the meeting of the board of canvassers at Boyne City on Tuesday and Wednesday, and we reprint our tables, corrected according to the decision of the board. We also add the vote of Antrim county on representative taken from the Mancelona Herald:

BECAUSE I LOVE YOU.

BY SARAH F. SOLOON.

"I cannot bring you wealth," she said;
"I cannot bring you fame or place
Among the noted of the race;
But I can love you.

"When trials come to cast you, sweet,
I can be sunlight at your door.
My I give your precious lips shall greet,
Because I love you.

"When daylight dies over the west,
You will come home to me for rest,
And I shall sing upon your breast,
Because I love you.

"If sickness with its pangs your lot
I will bend low, with quiet tread,
And pray God a blessing on your head,
Because I love you.

"As dew clings to the violet,
Or sunbeams to the mountain wet,
So my life into yours is one
Because I love you.

"Only myself, my all, I bring;
But count it, sweet, a precious thing
To give my life an offering
Because I love you.

"I love before no other shrine,
If I go first across death's line
I will return to claim you mine,
Because I love you.

RED, WHITE, AND RED.

BY ILKA.

AMONG the various localities affected by the strife in the years 1861 and 1862 North and the South, perhaps none was more fertile in romantic incident than were the western counties of Missouri. The dissensions which had given rise to bitter animosities between "bleeding Kansas" and the "Border Ruffians," was the one hand, and the "Border Ruffians," as was the obnoxious epithet bestowed upon the other, had at the outbreak of the war reached such a degree that little security was felt on either side of the rushing river. On the Missouri shore every Northern man was looked upon with suspicion, and, in fact, every pro-slaveholder, whether of Northern or of Southern origin. There was an outside appearance of civility and neighborliness, but it was the civility with which the lamb regards the fox, not knowing how soon open warfare may be declared.

Nestled in among the hills was a little village, populated almost entirely from the old Southern States. Every shade of opinion was to be found among them; as a matter of course the pro-slavery sentiment predominated. It was expected at no distant day to see a large and thriving city occupying this bend of the river. My father, who was the leading physician in the hamlet, was among the first settlers. Born in Virginia, he had no anti-slavery prejudices yet he felt the system to be detrimental to the white race. Before coming West he had emancipated himself by disposing of his negroes, reserving a couple of house servants. Perhaps, in a state of more public spirit, the state of public feeling was considered less a hostile sentiment.

On a certain spring morning this remote spot was astir with the reverberation of the guns of Fort Moultrie. Now there could no longer be any doubt where my father stood. He declared unconditionally for the Union. Our house had—what many of the log structures had not—a commodious cellar, and here at night Kennedy used to hold their secret meetings. When at last Governor Jackson disclosed his true attitude and called upon the State militia to repel the invasion of Federal troops, the public feeling found expression in wild speeches from the lieutenant-governor of both parties. Lyon was preparing to move against Jefferson City, and recruiting officers were busy mustering troops for both sides of the conflict. Lexington was already rumored to be born of the free frontier spirit which is always ready for necklace, lynching or rescue.

Our household consisted of my mother, my sister, a little younger than myself, Among the school-boys I had was Raymond Kennedy, a young, bold, daring Carolinian. In physique, he was the perfection of manly vigor, handsome and courteous in bearing, and a warm partisan in favor of secession. My father had deprecated the growing attachment, and I gave heed to his cooler judgment against Raymond's hot-headed rashness and violent temper. When he he sought me to put my faith in him into practice by consenting to be his wife, my father's warning withheld the wished-for answer.

Our homes were adjoining. In the garden was a little wicket, through which one had always exchanged neighborly courtesy of the most friendly sort. Since it was known that my father looked with disfavor upon an alliance, the feeling between the two families had been somewhat constrained; still we went in and out of the little wicket as before.

One night as I was sitting alone, my father gone to visit a patient, old Maria, a family servant of the Kennedys', came hurriedly in with her baby in her arms. "Miss Jessie, pis please write a letter for me, honey? Ole Massa John done gone ahunting. I can't stay a minute. Jis write to my children back in Virginny. Mebbe I neber sit sodder again."

"You must ask your mistress to write," I was fearful that my assistance would be granted, might be misconstrued.

"O, honey, Miss Jessie, ole missus can't write more'n I kin. Please hurry and do, Miss Jessie. I'll pray for you, honey, dead I will."

"What is the trouble, Maria? I must know more about it."

"Well, yo see, ole Massa John done brung a man around to dinner dis mornin', and I ing among the leaves. It was the letter which I had written, and which old Maria her basin had dropped before she reached her master. Intercepted by a Kennedy, the letter was carried to my father. Entering our office, Raymond Kennedy denounced our whole family for conspiring to assist runaway negroes. Enraged at my refusal of his hand, and feeling that it was through my father's influence, he was eager to provoke a quarrel. Drawing his bowie-knife, a weapon with which all Missourians were then armed—a fearful tragedy would have been enacted but for the interference of the bystanders. Thwarted in this, he muttered vengeance. The following day he was enrolled upon the list that sent so many martyrs to the lost cause.

The Federal troops were drilling in a lot on the outskirts of the town, without as yet, any regularly appointed officers. When it was known that Raymond Kennedy had enlisted, a shout went up: "Our Captain! our Captain!" He was received with demonstrations of joy, and when he counseled an immediate departure to join the forces of Price, they gave the word of cheer. It was decided that upon the arrival of the next boat this newly organized company would embark with Raymond Kennedy as first officer. He knew the indignation with which this move would be regarded by every Union man, and he gloried in it. In his mind it was a fair offset to English insults he was received by me his betrothed. Such an nature would have forgiven all the past, and he again would have been the supplicant lover.

I went about the house with eyes strained toward the hills for the first white wreath of smoke which should herald the approach of the evening steamer. Finally, upon the clear noon-day air the shrill whistle sounded. The little hamlet was alive in an instant. The levee was crowded with men, women and children, while the negroes stole surreptitious glances around the corners of fences and corn-cribs. The boat rounded to the shore as the company came marching down the single street with its fife and drum, and colors flying, to the martial music of "Dixie" and "Yankee Doodle." Men, of pronounced Union sentiments were conspicuous by their absence, and a strange quiet was over all. I stood upon a bluff which commanded a view of the whole scene, knowing that my figure would be thrown in silhouette against the clear sky, as a background. My pride came to my aid and I made no moan. I thought that Raymond would relent at the last and send me some token of reconciliation, but he did not. In anticipation of this, I had formed a resolute plan of action. Where my father was with long, floating streamers, I had it closely in view, watching the boys as they stepped on board, some laughing and jesting, others furtively breaking away the tears, and all leaning over the guards to repeat some last message. Raymond Kennedy stood in the bow of the boat, distinct as the smoke-stack itself, with his arms folded, taking no part in the general leave-taking. I felt that his eye was upon me, as I knew was no sign to reveal what emotion was passing within. The boat stood up a gay march, the gang-plank was withdrawn, and the boat swung out to resume her way down the river, and still he stood there motionless.

Almost as if we were being carried out of our homes, we thought we passed in view, and toward the Confederate camp. My father's lips brace himself more erect, then a wave of his hand in the military salute. By this time the boat was fairly turning round, and he was lost to view. Not till then did my courage give way. I sank down among the reeds in the broad sunshine and covered my face with both hands. The townspeople wended their way back to their accustomed business or pleasure, while the heavy throbs of the steamer, as she plowed through the waters, seemed like the throbbing of some smitten heart. I sat there through the long summer afternoon, watching the shadows grow longer and deeper, and at last the full moon rose, and I still sat there, with my burning the waters to molten gold, and where they lay in shadow, all was dark and cold

FARM AND GARDEN.

SEASONABLE SUBJECTS CONSIDERED IN A PRACTICAL MANNER.

Various Methods for Keeping Potatoes Over Winter—A Potato Pit and an Underground Root House Illustrated and Described.

In some sections of the country the commonest way for keeping potatoes over winter, especially early potatoes for seed, is to store the tubers in cool, well ventilated cellars. Opinions vary as to whether the potatoes should be packed in large bins or in smaller lots in boxes or barrels, but it would seem that most growers store in large masses. It pays, as all agree, to shovel or handle the seed potatoes over several times during the winter. The suggestion is made in Rural New Yorker—from which journal the potato pit here illustrated was taken—that potatoes could be stored successfully in sacks, which could be emptied and refilled once each month or six weeks during the winter.

FIG. 1—A POTATO PIT.

Many of the large potato growers use pits for storing their tubers. In the illustration is shown a pit in which the potatoes are put as soon after being harvested as possible, when they are covered with straw or corn stalks for a few days. They are then covered with boards and earth, the ends of the pit being left open. Later the ends are closed, and a small amount of ventilation is afforded by means of a whisk of straw, which extends up through the center of the covering to the open air. In the illustration A represents a pole supporting the boards; B, six inches of earth; C, eight inches of manure; D, six inches of earth; E, eight inches of manure; F, a straw ventilator, and G, a space of eight inches between potatoes and boards.

FIG. 2—AN UNDERGROUND ROOT HOUSE.

In the second cut is illustrated an underground root house that was recently described in Prairie Farmer as follows: This plan may be varied if a bank can be had, so that the roots may be dumped into a chute at the top and distributed by carriers nearly where wanted.

Storing Cabbages for Winter Use.

Every year the old problem of the best mode of keeping cabbages in winter is discussed, some growers advising burying the cabbages heads up, while others advise heads down. This question may be disposed of briefly thus: If the heads are mature and solid they should be buried roots up, but loose heads can be pitted roots down, so as to grow and make solid heads by spring.

One of Ohio's progressive farmers, Waldo F. Brown, writing in Ohio Farmer, says:

To bury cabbages select dry land with a slope to carry off the water; pile them on a dry day and if there is any water in the heads invert them and let them drain. Open a trench eight inches deep and wide enough for about four rows of heads packed as closely as they can be. You will leave a part of the loose leaves to protect them and no straw will be needed, but the earth may be shoveled directly on to them. Put on from ten to twelve inches of earth and shape it up so as to keep out the rain. After the ground freezes protect the pit with straw or corn fodder so as to prevent freezing and thawing, as this is what spoils them. Enough for us to Christmas may be stored in boxes in a cool cellar.

Loose heads may be stored roots down, and will grow and make solid heads by spring. Open a flat trench four or five feet wide and set a row across the upper end, setting them at an angle of 45 degs., with the heads packed as close as possible, then cover the roots with earth, tramp it down on them and place another row with the heads resting against the roots of the first row. When your pit is filled it will show a solid mass of heads. Now put up boards a foot wide or more around the edges and cover to this depth with light litter, using first corn fodder and then leaves, and put a roof over it, and although the heads may freeze a little, the roots will not, and the cabbage will mature and be crisp and fresh in the spring. If you see signs of mice, put some pieces of apple with a little strych nine on them around the top of the pit.

Frosted Corn Fodder.

The best treatment for frosted corn fodder, says Country Gentleman, is to preserve it in stooks from the weather in the usual way, and before feeding out to pass it through a cutter, which will cut a third of an inch long, and then moisten it lightly and sprinkle meal over it. The stalks will afford some nourishment, the dead leaves little or none. We are aware that any analysis has been made of frosted leaves, but they are not so good as straw. Chopped and placed in the silo, there would probably be no heat enough to prevent a sour fermentation, and they would be spoiled, but much would depend on the condition of the stalks and of the leaves, which would vary with circumstances. The result would be uncertain.

Squashes for Late Keeping.

Remember that every squash that is raised will eventually furnish the impertinence of carefully handling all specimens that are to be kept for winter use. Be careful, too, not to let the frost touch squashes, but harvest them as soon as fairly ripe. For long keeping the safest plan is to store squashes on shelves or elsewhere, one layer deep, with a little space between each squash. When piled in large heaps squashes decay in a comparatively short time.

There are many farmers who are like the man who tried to haul the load of potatoes up hill with no tail board in the wagon box. If there were more farmers who would keep the tail board in the wagon box, there would be less complaint of the farmer's low estate, and an income of the year they would have more to show for their year's labor, say a Stockman.

THE FERMENTATION OF CIDER.

An Effectual Way of Cleansing Cider from Fermentative Effects of Scalding.

There are many different ways of preventing fermentation, but in any case the cider ought to stand in large, open cedar tubs long enough to ferment slightly, so as to cause a considerable scum to rise to the surface, when it may be skimmed off, and also give time for the sediment to settle at the bottom before anything else is done with it. Nothing is more important than to abstract by natural means the minute particles of pomace that are held in solution by the cider.

A quite effective way of cleansing the cider and preventing after fermentation is to scald it just after it has been slightly fermented and settled. To do this it may be drawn off or dipped out of the casks into large copper kettles, or for large quantities an old copper still, holding three or four barrels, will be better. When fire is applied the heat will cause a large amount of scum to rise at once to the top to be skimmed off.

The heating should cease as soon as the boiling point is reached, when the cider is again placed in clean open casks to stand and settle until it has become entirely cold, when it may be drawn into barrels and tightly bunged.

The effect of the scalding, if done at the right time, is two fold. It quite thoroughly cleanses the cider and stops the fermentation at the right point to leave it a sweet and pleasant drink. While the cider thus treated will afterwards taste somewhat of the scalding, it will not be unpleasant to those who like it sweet, and is to be preferred to cider in which the fermentation has been arrested by mustard seed or charcoal. Cider treated in any of these ways will keep for years without becoming hard.

Where the quantity of cider to be made will not justify the expense of such a cider may be fermented and settled in barrels, bungs open, by drawing from one to another.

Bleaching and Storing Celery.

With the increased consumption of celery, improved modes in its culture have been adopted by progressive agriculturists. Numerous and with these improved modes is the plan of bleaching celery by setting up boards a foot wide edgewise on either side of a row of plants and pulling the soil up against the lower edge of the board, so that the light is excluded. The boards are kept in position by short stakes notched to fit them and placed across the top, or any other contrivance that serves the same purpose. The chief advantages claimed for this mode over the old plan of earth bleaching are no rust in warm, wet seasons, and a saving of labor.

The old method of drawing the soil up against the celery gradually until the bleaching is done, is still practiced by many farmers. A plan that has many advocates among small farmers is that of digging a trench as deep as the plants and about one foot wide, and placing the plants therein, retaining all the soil that adheres to the roots when they are lifted. When the trench is packed closely with plants set in same position as they grew, a protection of straw, leaves, etc., is given to keep off the frosts.

If the celery crop is a small one it may be stored in any cellar where there is no fire heat. One plan is to place it in boxes a little less in depth than the celery is high, and from eight to ten inches wide. Place a few inches of sand on the bottom of the box and pack the celery in as tightly as possible without bruising. The boxes thus packed may be placed on the floor of the cellar. Larger quantities can be stored in a cellar as follows: Place a board on edge eight or nine inches from the wall, put a few inches of dirt or sand on the floor, pack the celery in perpendicularly, roots down. When one row has been finished, another may be made by putting up another board eight or nine inches from the first; this may be continued as long as desired, or till the cellar is full. A little above freezing may be considered the best temperature for winter keeping of celery.

Keeping Grapes.

The late E. P. Roe kept Catawba, Isabella, Diana and Iona by picking on a clear day, using grape scissors so as not to handle much, removing all imperfect berries and placing in clean, dry earthen jars, in layers a bunch deep, and filling the jar in this way. Place a double sheet of paper over the top layer and put on the lid. Strong, unbleached muslin is pasted entirely over the lid or cover of the jar when the covering has fully dried and hardened the jars are buried on a dry knoll beyond the action of the frost, a stake being placed over each jar to locate it accurately.

Heeling in Trees.

In the first cut is shown the usual method of heeling in trees that are received in the fall and are not to be planted until the succeeding spring. Where the climate is not very cold, says "Green's Fruit Grower," this method is usually successful, if the location is well drained and on an elevation.

FIG. 1—HEELING IN TREES.

The second cut, says the authority quoted, gives a better method. Here the trees are laid down slanting, all of the trunks of the trees being covered with earth and the tops lying so low as to enable the owners to cover them easily with evergreen boughs.

FIG. 2—HEELING IN TREES.

When protected in this manner there is no danger of injury, provided there is no rubbish or brush piles, etc., near by, to afford mice.

A and B are air spaces, C allows air from the outside to enter, and F carries off foul air. D shows earth covering. E shows spaces between joists resting on timber above, upon which the earth is placed. If the root house is to be built above ground, lay your wall, and inside this provide an air space of one foot all around. Bank the outside up with earth, sloping from top to bottom. Even all the earth about stands inches thick at the edges, and rising, so that the water may pass to the skies.

Take Time to Rest.

There are many ways to travel, but if you desire to travel for pleasure and rest, let me commend to you a sailing yacht as a pleasant means of locomotion; and if you want to get away from the world's giddy unrest, from cares of business and from all the worries and petty annoyances that make life in the city a daily round of wearying toil, I say to you go and do as we are doing.

"Cannot spare the time," you say? Ah, well, then go on, my friend, and worry and toil, and get worn and weary and exhausted, and one day you will "spare the time," ay, as far as this world's cares are concerned, you will spare not only time, but eternity, too, and by the time you should have died, if you had lived a natural life, temperate in labor and indulgent in rest, the world will be whirling around as smoothly as if you had never been, and you will, long before, have been in your grave and forgotten. When the Lord made men he did not intend that they should be gray haired, with furrowed cheeks at 40, as a rule. He doubtless intended that they should not only work, but rest.—J. Armoy Knox.

Girls at Vassar College.

Freshmen at Vassar have easier times than at colleges for boys, and they ought to, for they are girls and etiquette rules. Every girl in the college early in the school year goes forth on certain afternoons, card case in hand, to call upon the freshmen or other newcomers in her corridor. If the freshman be out a card is left; if in, the acquaintance is formed. In either case the card must be returned within 24 hours, and afterwards visits are more informal and parties are given.—New York Sun.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these distressing complaints are caused by the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, which quickly relieves catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient more in two weeks, U. S. For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 10eOp

SENTENCE COMMUTED.

Mrs. Robinson, of Massachusetts, Will Not Hang.

Mrs. Sarah Jane Robinson, the Somerville, Mass., poisoner, will not hang. She will for the rest of her life remain in solitary confinement in the State Prison—the only female convict ever imprisoned in that institution, and the second prisoner to suffer solitary confinement. Governor Ames and his council commuted the death sentence to solitary confinement for life. When the condemned woman heard the verdict she fell back into the chair and moaned: "My God! I wish it had been the other way." She had prayed her mind to die, and the sudden end of her misery seemed far preferable to the lingering torture of solitary confinement. For several minutes she gave way to the wildest outburst of grief and rocked to and fro, crying out for death. Ever since her conviction and sentence, Mrs. Robinson has steadily maintained her innocence, she expected to hang, but said that in time her innocence would be established. The action on the part of the Governor and the Council has practically settled the question of hanging women in Massachusetts. Tremendous pressure was brought to bear in this case to save that State from the disgrace of hanging a woman. This has not been done since July 10, 1780, when Rebecca Waugh was hanged in Worcester for murder.

POISONED BY THEIR SISTER.

A Young Girl Shown to Have Administered Arsenic to the Sowards Children.

The Coroner has concluded his investigation of the poisoning which resulted in the death of Isaac Sowards and the violent sickness of two other children of the family at Ingerfoll, Ind. The evidence showed that a 12-year-old sister of the poisoned children purchased arsenic at a drug store and administered it to them, but whether by accident or design is not known. The Coroner, however, recommended that the girl be held to the Grand Jury.

CANADA TREATING WITH SPAIN.

Efforts to Deprive the United States of Her West Indian Trade.

It is learned that Sir Charles Tupper is actively engaged in negotiating a treaty of commerce between the Dominion of Canada and Spain. Sir Charles proposes to secure for Canadian products the advantages in Cuba and Porto Rico that were granted to the United States by the treaty rejected in 1885. It is hoped to build an extensive trade in the Spanish West Indies for Canadian products, thereby cutting into the United States' commerce with those islands.

GOV. GUY ASSASSINATED.

Tragic Ending of the Election Contest in the Chickasaw Nation.

News has been received from Tishomingo, the capital of the Chickasaw Nation, that Gov. Guy has been assassinated. Advices from Chickasaw Nation are that serious trouble has been brewing between the followers of Gov. Guy and his opponent in the late election, Byrd.

A Brutal Crime.

A blood-curdling and atrocious murder was committed at Wenona, Ill., the victims being Peter Howe, a wealthy banker, and his wife, the one aged 75 and the latter 65. About a half mile from the business part of that city stands the Howe residence, a large, two-story frame structure. Here lived the aged couple, with one domestic in the household. Upon being entered, Mr. and Mrs. Howe's bedroom presented a ghastly sight. The walls and bed-clothes were covered with blood, and lying on the floor was a car coupling pin, to which adhered hair and clotted blood. The murderer proved to be Charles Burkhart, who afterward committed suicide with a razor.

Found $10,000 in a Book.

Great excitement was caused at Paris, Ky., by the finding of a large amount of money, some say as high as $10,000, in a book in Long's second-hand book store. It is known that one man had as high as $200 all of which were old greenback bills issued in 1862. Some of them were counterfeit, but most were good. The Northern Agricultural, and Bourbon Banks took a good lot of it, all of which the cashiers pronounced good, but Cashier Northcott of the Deposit Bank refused a $10 note which was a base counterfeit. Mr. Long does not know where the book with the money came from.

To the Victors Belong the Spoils.

The Findlay (Ohio) Postoffice employes recognize the fact that on and after March 4 a new administration will be in power. The Postmaster, his deputy, all his clerks, and all the outdoor carriers have tendered their resignations to the department at Washington, the same to take effect immediately after the date named.

The Bald-Knobber Chief to Hang.

William Walker, chief of the Christian County Bald-Knobbers, has been sentenced by the Supreme Court of Missouri to be hanged. Mr. Walker and three other Bald-Knobbers were indicted in 1887 for the murder of Charles Green and James Eden.

Tried to Blow Up the Court House.

A special from Henrietta, Texas, states that a desperate attempt was made to destroy the court house at that point by the use of some powerful explosive, supposed to be dynamite.

J. H. Graham.

Colonel J. H. Graham recently died in Galesburg, Ill. The Colonel Graham was formerly a resident of Illinois, and held a commission as Major in the famous Seventh Illinois Cavalry (the famous Grierson Rangers). He removed to Alachua County, Florida, a number of years ago, and had been a resident of Gainesville most of the time.

The Yellow Scourge.

A Jacksonville, Fla., special of the 16th inst. says: There were twelve new cases of yellow fever and one death to-day. Total cases, 1,491; total deaths, 385. At Gainesville there were eight new cases of yellow fever, six being whites. There was no death.

DEATH GATHERS THEM IN.

One Hundred and Sixty More Killed by an Explosion at Pittsburg, Kan.

A most appalling mine horror occurred at Frontenac, a mining suburb of Pittsburg, Kan., in which 150 men were buried 200 feet below the surface of the earth. A terrible report, like a discharge of artillery, shook every house in Pittsburg and shocked the people into a state of paralyzed consciousness. Searchers for the cause started toward the coal mines, and met a mangled, bleeding man, who said that No. 2 shaft at Frontenac had been destroyed by an explosion and that all the men in the mine except himself and a Dane were undoubtedly dead. At the mouth of the mine the tremendous force of the explosion was apparent. There were huge seams in the earth, and the timbers of the hoisting apparatus were shivered and burned, and foul gases were escaping. The men were about to quit work for the day when the explosion occurred. It is believed that not one survived the shock, as the explosion must have destroyed everything in the pit. Big fires were built near the mouth of the pit, and beside these blazing piles the wives and mothers of the entombed miners placed their children, while they themselves tried by all kinds of entreaties to induce the miners from the other shafts to enter the pit and rescue their relatives. Beseeching parties started down the shaft, but were forced to return back owing to the foul air. Most of the miners at these shafts made a stand against the mines of Pennsylvania. Pittsburg is in the center of the coal mines of Southeastern Kansas, and is about 100 miles south of Kansas City, on the Ferrit Scott and Gulf Railroad.

NEW LORD MAYOR.

Mr. Whitehead Inaugurated as Lord Mayor of London.

Sir Adam Whitehead, the newly elected Lord Mayor of London, is an advanced Radical in politics, and he has amassed a large fortune as the proprietor of the great fancy-goods store in Kensington known as "Barker's," where, according to popular report, it is possible to purchase every imaginable article, from a bicycle down to a second-hand coffin. Born fifty-four years ago, the Lord Mayor is an active, energetic-looking man, and was educated at the Appleby Grammar School. He has twice unsuccessfully contested a division of Westmoreland against the Hon. W. Lowther. He was elected Alderman of Cheap Ward in 1882 on the death of Alderman Breffit, and served in the office of Sheriff of London in 1884-1885. The Conservatives were extremely disgusted at the idea of seeing a follower of Mr. Gladstone and supporter of the Irish home-rule doctrine established at the Mansion House, and great pressure was put to secure the election in his stead of Sir Henry Isaacs, the senior Alderman in rotation. The attempt, however, was unsuccessful, and Mr. Whitehead, who is personally popular, was duly chosen by the Liverymen. The inauguration of Mr. Whitehead took place in accordance with traditional usage, Nov. 6.

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

The Election Had but Little Effect Upon Business.

R. G. Dun & Company's review of trade for last week:

The volume of legitimate business was wonderfully well maintained during the last week in the face of the election excitement. Perhaps the fact that it was more remarkable for gains and losses than for any previous election excitement speculation had been unusually active and extravagant. There has come a more confident tone in many branches of business and a larger trade with improving prices is reported by many. There has been a marked abstinence of many operations and purchases in past months. In the reports from the interior points generally it is noteworthy that the aggregate of transactions was large for only a few days before the election, and has been continued in fair or active demand, while in nearly any complaint of stringency was heard and collections, though somewhat interrupted, were on the whole satisfactory, with improvement in many cases. Speculation in wheat, which was extreme in operation, together with the temporary inactivity of speculation, explains the market. The circulation of all kinds of money reached $1,807,837,000, being by 9.6 per cent larger than a year ago, $1,650,000,000 being Treasury paper, $1,700,000,000 being bank paper, and but 6 per cent. below last year's $2,000,000,000 of circulation, which was 4 per cent. below last year's. Prices of the chief staples of production have been very well maintained, but with a free movement, if wheat advanced five cents, and then fell back to cent, with sales of 31,000,000 bushels, corn advancing 3 cents, with sales of 5,000,000 bushels. Oats advanced 2 cents, pork 10 cents per barrel, and lard 5 cents, the latter trading in cotton bids, with sales of 350,000 bales, cotton being 1-16 cent higher, and wool firmer, but as compared with 23 the previous week and 214 the week previous. For the corresponding week of last year rise four weeks.

A FORTUNE RECOVERED.

Mexican Bonds to the Amount of Over $7,000,000 Secured by an Indiana Man.

Gen. Herman Sturm, of Indianapolis, Ind., a man who once possessed great wealth, but lost it through his dealings with the Mexican Government, has, after many years of persistent effort, procured the allowance of a claim which will restore his fortune with interest. At the time of the Maximilian invasion he entered into a contract to furnish the Government a large supply of guns and ammunition at a greatly advanced cost. Philadelphia capitalists were interested with him in the transaction. Through the wrecking of a steamship containing a large part of the cargo and the failure of the Government to pay for the purchase Sturm was bankrupted, and others associated with him lost heavily. Sturm endeavored to recover insurance on a part of his loss, and the case was in court many years. Two years ago there was an adverse ruling on the claim in court. Sturm pushed the matter, however, and has been awarded by receiving an allowance of $2,125,000 on his claim. This is to be paid in Mexican bonds and he will net another the full amount. He owes heavy attorney fees, which will also tend to reduce the amount received.

ELEVEN MURDERED.

Discovery of the Bodies of a Number of Bishkeks.

A special dispatch from St. Ambrose, Canada, a town ten miles below Quebec, said that complaints had been made recently concerning the condition of the city reservoir water. The authorities finally resolved to empty the water to find out the cause. The task has been commenced, and to the great astonishment of the engineers and workmen, the remains of eleven children were discovered at the bottom of the reservoir, in an advanced stage of decomposition. The authorities of the locality are at a loss to know who are the authors of the murders, as an inquest has revealed that every one of the children had been born alive, and had breathed for several hours at least. The police suspect certain factory girls, but have not sufficient proof to make a clear case against them.

KILLED IN A FIRE.

Five Factory Hands Meet Death at Rochester, N. Y.

The most disastrous fire ever experienced in Rochester, N. Y., occurred in the works of the Steam Gauge and Lantern Company. It was located in a building of seven stories, with two detached buildings near the Genesee Falls. About forty people were at work, mostly on the third floor. The smoke was very dense and the men could not reach the fire escapes and they were forced to jump from the third story. Fourteen jumped on the west side of the building and were frightfully injured, five of them dying within an hour. Four others have since died. The names of the dead are: Joseph Barner, John Grenmoor, Joseph Webber, Harry Schneider, and John Gall. The fatally wounded are Richard Pasch, Frank Siddons, Dan Watkins, and John Gerlis.

KILLED BY AN EXPLOSION.

A Boiler Blows Up, with Fatal Effect, at Lancaster, Pa.

A boiler belonging to the Lancaster Chemical Company, whose plant is situated just north of Lancaster, Pa., blew up with terrific force, completely demolishing the building, and killing one man and injuring five. The casualties were: John Riddle, fireman, sixty-nine years old, killed outright; Alexander Hambright, engineer, badly injured; C. F. Miller, one of the proprietors, George Smith, a man named "Mickey," and a boy named Hook, slightly injured. The boiler was nearly new, and the reason for the explosion is unknown. The Chemical Company also supplied the United States Electric Light Company with power to run their dynamos for the city light, and Lancaster is, in consequence of the disaster, in total darkness at night.

MANITOBA'S LEGISLATURE IN SESSION.

Debating the Advisability of an Appeal to the Queen.

A special session of the Manitoba Legislature has been opened to consider the railway situation. The Governor, in his opening speech, said that the Government had under consideration the advisability of appealing to the Queen for the purpose of having Manitoba's relations to the Dominion of Canada more clearly defined. After the Governor's speech Premier Greenway addressed the House for three hours, especially refuting the charge of "boodling" made against him by the city newspapers. He said that President Hill of the Manitoba Road had indirectly offered him $20,000 if he passed certain legislation needed by the Manitoba Road.

GUESSING ABOUT MURCHISON.

A California Paper States That His Name is Francis G. Haley.

The Evening Express of Los Angeles, Cal., publishes a statement in which it says that the real name of the author of the Murchison letter sent to Minister West is Francis G. Haley, and that he is thought to be living in Mexico. The article also declares that Mr. Haley is a native of New York, of Irish descent, and that he moved to Pomona four years ago from Ohio. The article also states that Haley wrote the letter to the British Minister upon his own responsibility and without consulting any other person.

"GO" STRIKER SHOT.

Ed Hall, a Switchman, Killed by Charles H. Huston, a Burlington Engineer.

A fearful tragedy occurred in Creston, Iowa. Ed Hall, a striking switchman, was shot and killed by Charles H. Huston, an engineer. Eye witnesses say that Hall was trying to persuade Huston to put up his revolver when he was shot. The coroner searched the clothing of the dead man and found no weapon. Hall since the strike has had a number of fights and has been quarrelsome when drinking, but his friends claim the shooting of Huston by Hall was done drinking when the tragedy occurred.

CHARGED WITH FRAUD.

Deputy United States Mineral Surveyor Thomas H. White Arrested.

Thomas H. White was arrested in Deadwood, S. D., on a charge from United States Marshal for perjury in his official capacity as United States Deputy Mineral Surveyor, and held in $5,000 bonds. White is a Corniishman and the Lead City Press says of Sept. 3 that he came in from breaking up a $10,000,000 deal of the Harney Peak Tin Mining and Milling and Manufacturing Company, by his correspondence in the Financial News of London.

The Indiana Paper Company's Mill Destroyed by Fire.

The large paper and bag mill of the Indiana Paper Company, at South Bend, Ind., has been almost totally destroyed by fire, together with the contents. There were about 500 bales of pulp on the floor, which the fire caught, and then burned like powder. The loss is placed at $300,000, with nearly $60,000 insurance.

A GEORGIA ACCIDENT.

Fatal Railroad Wreck on the Savannah Road.

A train of the Savannah and Western Road, coming from Savannah, ran down the Macon Fair, was wrecked near Ellaville, Ga. The killed are: Charles Sowyth, Dodge Tyson, Henry Martin, George Davis, and John Hanover. A dozen others were injured, among them Chancellor C. C. Hightower.

Jack Rabbits Must Go.

James Watson, one of the largest landowners of Victoria, Australia, having over 12,000 acres in his estate, offered free, says jack rabbits are so formidable that the Australian Government is considering a scheme of inclosing the country and allowing the people to shoot Sew South Wales rabbits for sport and bar the pests out. Australia is paying $125,000 a year to keep the rabbits down on what is known as crown land. The Government offer of $125 is a pair for all that are killed and expert men have taken $30 in a week at it. The government still keeps standing its offer of $100,000 to any man who will discover something that will exterminate the pest.

Oppose Gen. Blake's Appointment.

The Premier has sent a cable dispatch to the Queensland agent in England saying that the appointment of Gov. Blake, of Newfoundland, to the Governorship of Queensland has excited general anger and wonder. Ex-Premier Griffetho agrees with the Premier in condemning the appointment. Last month the Governor urged the English Government privately to submit the name of the proposed new Governor before the appointment was made. Lord Knutsford replied that it was impossible to allow the colonial ministers to share in the responsibility for the nomination.

Dynamite Bombs in Paris.

A Paris special says: A dynamite bomb was exploded in a registry office in the Rue Boucher, and another bomb was exploded in a registry office in the Rue Francaise. Much damage was done at both places, but no one was hurt.

Fathers of a Clothing Firm.

A. S. Daugherty & Co., clothiers, of Fort Wayne, Ind., have made an assignment. Liabilities are $75,000. The firm has lost their creditors, who are principally in the East. Liabilities, about $20,000; assets unknown.

Killed in a Collision.

At the Fishkill depot, New York, a passenger train collided with a freight train of 7 cars. The passengers escaped except Mrs. Edward Shivel, of St. John, who was killed.

Death of an Old Lady.

Mrs. Hannah Sharkey, aged 111 years, died at Youngstown, Ohio. She was a native of Ireland, and came to this country about seventy years ago.

FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

A PROBABLE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY IN BOTH HOUSES.

The Republicans Have Most Likely Secured Control of the National Government—Where the Republicans Gained—Compiled from Latest Returns.

[Chicago special.]

Returns from the Congressional contests show that the Republicans have secured full control of the National Government, increasing their majority in the Senate, and establishing a majority in the lower house. The Legislature of Delaware is Republican by 3 on joint ballot, which will result in the election of a Republican United States Senator to succeed Saulsbury and in the retirement of Secretary Bayard to private life, for a time at least. If the Republicans of West Virginia have secured the Legislature of that State, as claimed, a Republican successor of Kenna will be chosen.

In the lower house of the present Congress the strength of the parties is: Democrats, 169; Republicans, 153; Independents, 4. The returns so far received indicate, granting doubtful districts to the Democrats, that the lower house of the Fifty-first Congress will stand: Republicans, 165; Democrats, 152; a Republican majority of 7. It seems likely that this Republican majority will be increased rather than diminished.

Several Congressional districts are very close and it may require an official count to determine who is elected in them. In regularities in ballots cast for Carlisle in the Sixth Kentucky District are alleged, and it is said that an attempt will be made to have such ballots rejected, and that if the number of them is not, it is thought, large enough to elect Carlisle, he will be declared ineligible. In several other districts, where the election is close, contests are likely to be made by the defeated members.

The net gains of the Republicans are: California, 1; Connecticut, 1; Iowa, 2; Louisiana, 1; Maryland, 1; Michigan, 1; Minnesota, 3; Missouri, 2; Nebraska, 1; New Hampshire, 1; New Jersey, 1; Pennsylvania, 1; Tennessee, 1; West Virginia, 1. The net Republican losses are in Illinois, 1; Kentucky, 2; New York, 1; North Carolina, 2; Virginia, 3.

THE CZAR AND FAMILY.

EMPEROR ALEXANDER.

THE DOMESTIC LIFE OF THE CZAR OF RUSSIA.

How False Impressions Corrected—Not so Bad a Man as He Is Painted—Not a Coward, but Fearless—A Story Illustrating His Courage.

BY WILLIAM ELEROY CURTIS.

The readers of English newspapers, which publish the largest amount of information about Russia and its rulers, have been frightened and aghast that the Czar is a monster, a drunkard, a man of unrestrained temper, a libertine, and combines all faults and follies of his predecessors without any of their virtues or agreeable qualities. Only the other day I saw an account in an English paper which has a character for accuracy that the Czar had shot an officer of his household dead in his tracks for some trivial offense, that the officer requested the privilege of being shot rather than be disgraced, and even upon the Czar's own word of honor he was shot two months. There was not the slightest foundation or excuse for the slander except British malice, or the desire to revenge some real or fancied injury on the part of the correspondent. The paper, which is violently opposed to the Czar, and which is supported by pitiful whining still among the Czar's friends, is fearful that the Czar intends to bombard the Sublime Porte, and has sent the Secretary of the German Legation to Constantinople to see if he can find out what is the Czar's story. It is not necessary to say that the story is false, and that the Czar's friends in Russia are not in the habit of shooting people in cold blood. The Czar is a man of great physical strength and courage, and is very quick-tempered, and is subject to violent outbursts of temper when the occasion arises, but he is not a man who is considerate of a subordinate who has given him cause for anger. He is not a man who is easily deceived, and he is not a man who is easily frightened. He is not a man who is easily deceived, and he is not a man who is easily frightened. He is not a man who is easily deceived, and he is not a man who is easily frightened

THE JOURNAL.

CHAS. J. STRANG.
CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

For 1889 we propose to put the JOURNAL as near as possible on the pay-in-advance plan, and to give every subscriber the worth of his money.

There is at this date 326 subscribers on our books who are in arrears, and the aggregate amount due is more than enough to discharge every obligation against the office, and pay the running expenses three months in advance. The amount due from each is not large,—in no case exceeding five dollars,—but the aggregate is a very important matter to the publisher who is compelled to satisfy bills for help and material.

As an encouragement to more prompt paying, we make the following offer of Reduced Prices for Cash in advance, to hold good until January 1, 1889:

One year	$1 25
Six months	65
Four months	45
Three months	35
Two months	25

After that date we shall begin to strike from our list all delinquents, and make an earnest effort to conduct the paper on a cash in-advance basis.

When you take a city paper you know that when the time is out it stops, without notice, and you cannot get it again until you pay. And there is no reason why the country paper should not be conducted pretty nearly on the same basis.

With an increase of current receipts we can meet all our bills more promptly, and make the paper in all respects brighter and newsier than ever.

Now is the time to begin.

DOM M. DICKINSON has had an offer to join a strong firm of lawyers in New York city. He has not yet accepted.

THE Detroit Evening News intimates that Congressman Ford of Grand Rapids, may move into some strong democratic district and be returned to congress at next election.

WHITELAW RIDD agrees with the politics of the Detroit Evening News or not, none can deny that it is a lively, newsy sheet, and one just suited to the needs of the bustling business man who has but little time to read, as well as the smaller tradesman, the mechanic, and the laborer, who want a good thing for a little money.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says the veteran editor, Aaron B. Turner, of the Grand Rapids Eagle, is going to have some sharp competition for public printer, although he is recognized there as having a good show for success. The latest candidate, John S. Clarkson, of Iowa, is regarded as the most dangerous competitor yet in the field. Mr. Clarkson is chairman of the republican national committee, and he wields almost unlimited influence. He has been freely mentioned for a cabinet place, but it is understood that the position of public printer will be more to his liking. Other candidates are E. W. Fox, of the Weekly National Republican; August Donath, of Washington, for some time connected with the Craftsman, and ex Congressman Ward, of Chester, Pa.

A New Style of Robbery.

As the proprietor of the New York egg and butter store was standing behind the counter a well dressed stranger came into the shop. The stranger said, "Sir, I noticed in the window a sign inscribed, 'Fresh eggs, 36 cents a dozen.' Now, I think those eggs are not fresh." The proprietor of the store, knowing the eggs to be perfectly fresh, so informed the stranger, who immediately offered to bet a $5 note that the eggs were not fresh. The bet was instantly covered by the proprietor, and he laid their $5 bills on the counter. The proprietor of the store went to the window, took one of the eggs, broke it and asked the stranger if she egg was not perfectly fresh. The stranger replied "Yes, but take another, and you will find that it will be rotten." The proprietor willingly complied and turned his back to the stranger, and while the storekeeper was reaching for the eggs the stranger reached for the $10 and departed, shaking the dust of the store from his heels very quietly and expeditiously. The storekeeper being behind the counter was slow in getting out, but when he did get out the stranger had disappeared.—Detroit Free Press.

Husband—He said that you were a handsome, but you were one of the most intelligent women he ever met.

Wife—Professor Wheat's-his-name has received his last invitation from me.—Time.

W. S. Crooks of Kalkaska is missing, and circumstances point to suicide by drowning.

The Lumberman says 150,000,000 feet of Georgian bay logs will be brought to Michigan mills next season.

The steam barge, H. S. Hubbell, was burned last week off Point Au Barque, by the bursting of an oil lamp. Crew all saved.

A rifle handled by Joseph Liberty, of Newberry, was accidentally discharged Friday, the ball killing his 14-year old daughter.

The St. Ignace telephone girl made $3 extra on election night by sending returns to one hotel. Then she "blew it all in" betting on Cleveland, and rung off.

The result of the presidential election of November, 1852, was not known at Manistique until some time in January, 1853. News traveled slowly in the good old days.

Manistique is soon to have a jail that it can be proud of and if half what some papers up that way say is true, it can soon have it full of citizens that no one is proud of.

They claim that the meanest man in Michigan has recently skipped out of Coloma. He stole potatoes from a poor man's garden, and then licked a cripple who told of his crime.

William Moore, a young man, was killed by a pair of big wheels running over him at the Smith lumber company's camp, three miles west of Kalkaska, last week. He was unmarried and lived at Elk Rapids.

Mayor W. W. Cummer of Cadillac was not a legal citizen until twelve days before the last election, although he and his friends supposed he was, until the question was raised during the canvass. Cadillac will have to hold a special election to fill the vacancy. It seems that the father, Jacob Cummer declared his intention to become a citizen while the son, W. W., was a minor, but did not get his final papers, and this led to the misunderstanding, and the belief that W. W. Cummer became a citizen on attaining his majority.

The Hancock Journal says: The little settlement of Oskar on the shore of Portage lake, about five miles north-west of Houghton, affords the student of ethnology a favorable opportunity to study the home life and habits of the Finlander without making a trip to the "land of the midnight sun." There are 60 or more families at the settlement and they live very much as they did in Finland. This writer Oscar Eliasson, the leading man of the place has a contract for cutting 20,000 cords of wood, which will keep the settlers busy.

The Railroad in China.

The young emperor of China amuses himself now and then by whisking through his palace grounds in Pekin on a miniature railroad, and enjoys a monopoly of the only railroad now running in his dominions. The French government has just made a very handsome present to Li Hung Chang in the shape of a complete railroad train, but if the Chinese statesman makes the present available he will have to grade a roadbed and buy some rails, and thus, as France slyly hopes, break the ice for the introduction of railroads.

The revered ancestors of these Orientals are a great obstacle in the way of railroads. The Chinese say railroads cannot dodge around all over the country to avoid the multitudinous graveyards, and so for having the western invention plow through the last resting places of their honored sires, that is entirely out of the question. But in spite of the dead past an era of railroad making will dawn in China one of these days.—Boston Budget.

Making the Eyes Bright.

It is no use asking me for the secrets of making the eyes bright. I know them, but they are dangerous, and as modesty in the use of any cosmetic is unknown to women who adopt such things, they had better remain secret. The only harmless things for the purpose are the drops of the herb euphrasy or eyebright dropped in the eye, or a spoonful of rose coloured coffee taken before bedtime. This brightens the eyes for an evening, and is useful to keep watchers while awake nights. But it must not be used often or it affects the head. Pure blood and thorough circulation, with unobstructed functions, will secure glowing eyes of a dark shade of their natural color, changing gooseberry eye to luminous dark gray. Walking a mile briskly against the wind is good exercise to darken and brighten the eyes, whose beauty all depend on a right circulation of the blood, which in turn depends on more things than can be mentioned here.—Shirley Dare's Letter.

All visitors to Boston have greatest interest in the old buildings of the city. It is rather a disappointment to them that the whole city does not present its former Puritan aspect, and the people from the newest western cities are the most arrogant in their demands for antiquities.—Boston Journal.

The Zinc Plate in Art.

The photo lithographers are looking toward zincography as a refuge and substitute for the Bavarian lithographic stone and the wood cut, and experiments are being made in America, Germany and England, where pictorial periodicals and newspapers are published to get the effects of the lithographic pen. The difference between the processes of lithography and zincography, however, is so great that judgment cannot be passed as yet. The great porousness sometimes reproduces colors drawn on it with a greasy pencil. The zinc can be etched with nitric or muriatic acid, and, with the aid of a powerful lens, photography called into aid with marvelous effect. The advantages of such a process may be summarized under two heads—economy and convenience—and for daily newspaper pictorial work, where rapidity must be combined with a certain amount of artistic excellence, there can be no doubt of the size plate superseding all other methods of reproducing pictures, and the wood cut is gradually fading away.

In the weeklies and monthlies, where the memo tint can be successfully printed, the wood cut may endured for some time, but even now some of the photographic pen and ink line drawing is immeasurably better than the blank and white brush work on wood. The process of biting a plate with acid is of course, older than Rembrandt, but it has until the last few years been an expensive and laborious art. The hurry of the age has manded its improvement, and soon it will be possible to reproduce great pictures in a few hours, and transfer may be made with great facility and preserved for future use at a trifling cost as compared with the cost of the plates and the necessary storage room.—Baltimore American.

A Dinner at Tehama.

There are tiny lambs roasted whole, salmon which has been brought packed in ice upon the heads of runners from a distance of a hundred miles, appetizing kabobs of lambs and venison, fowls and partridges (in silver bowls), stewed to rags and served with strange colored sauces of the richest kind, great heaps of boiled rice in steaming pyramids, white rice, green rice, colored by an artful admixture of herbs, rice boiled with saffron of a ruddy gold color, omelets and sweet dishes, innumerable little china cups of tooth some pickles, small china bowls containing various thick soups, but not a single dish to be seen. Everybody eats away as if he had never tasted food before. There are no forks, no spoons, no plates; but every man's hand appears to be dipping at once into the innumerable dishes.

Occasionally our host, with his mouth half full, grunts out an entreaty that we should taste some particular delicacy, and in twenty minutes all is over. Iced rosewater is poured upon the fingers of each guest from a silver ewer, and he wipes them upon a delicately embroidered napkin. About a tenth of what has been provided has been consumed by the party; the rest is removed and gobbled up with surprising celerity by the great tribe of hungry servants. Pipes are brought once more, but there is little or no conversation; the Yesseiga and that "to talk after a good meal is the act of an ill bred man or a fool." And then we get up and bid our hospitable friend good night. And as we leave we see that the mysterious covered tray is being taken to the banqueting room, and we know that our fellow guests and our host will drink, smoke and gamble until an unholy hour in the morning.—Good Words.

Two Months at Gravelotte.

The French artillery and mitrailleuses responded vigorously to the Prussians, and with deadly effect, but as far as we could see the German left continued its advance and staff officers came up frequently to report that all was going on well at points hidden from our view. These reports were always made to the king first, and the expression of the countenance of his staff during of the fight we clustered around to hear the news, Gen. von Moltke unfolding a map meanwhile and explaining the situation.

This done, the chief of the staff, while awaiting the next report, would either remain in a seat that had been made for him with some knapsacks, or would occupy the time walking about, kicking clods of dirt or small stones from his path, his hands clasped behind his back, his face pale and thoughtful. He was then nearly 70 years old, but because of his decorated figure, the deep wrinkles in his face, and crow's feet about his eyes, he looked even older, his appearance being suggestive of the practice of much unconscious cerebration of his well known ardent smooth, to the military profession.—Gen. Sherman in Scribner's Magazine.

Peculiarities of the Aleos.

Inasmuch as there are no family ties among them, village, tribal, or social rights to be respected, there is nothing approximating to father right, or mother right. Or perhaps it would be more exact to say that, inasmuch as women are recognized as chattels among throughout their whole lives, and as mothers as soon as they have reached the proper age, the personality of the whole family is sunk in that of the husband and father while he lives. When he dies he is at once and absolutely forgotten, and each surviving member of his family pursues an entirely separate course. In no way can certainly himself about the others. If a man dies and leaves a family of infant children, the care of them devolves upon the mother until the oldest son reaches the age of about 18; then he becomes the head of the family. Female inheritance is utterly unknown, as would be expected in a society wherein women have no rights at all. If a man is so unfortunate as to leave no true heir, or so careless as not to have adopted one, his property goes to his next younger brother, or his nearest male relative, if he have no brethren either by birth or adoption.—J. K. Goodrich in Popular Science Monthly.

THE PASSENGER TRAIN CONDUCTOR.

The Most Exacting Position in the Ranks of Railroad Employes.

The passenger train conductor has in many respects the most difficult position in the railroad ranks. He should be a first class freight conductor and a polished gentleman to boot. But in his long apprenticeship on a freight train he has very likely been learning how not to fulfill the additional requirements of a passenger conductorship. In that service he could be uncouth and even boorish and still fill his position tolerably well; now he feels the need of a life time of tuition in dealing with the diverse phases of human nature met with on a passenger train. He must now manage his train in a sort of diplomatic way, for he has his mind filled with the care of his passengers and the collection of tickets. He must be good at figures, keeping accounts, and handling money, though the freight train service has given him no experience in this line. Year by year the clerical work connected with the taking up of tickets and collecting of cash fares has been increased until now on many roads an expert bank clerk would be none too proficient for the duties imposed. The conductor who grumblingly averred that "it would take a Philadelphia lawyer with three heads" to fill his shoes was not far out of the way.

Every day, and perhaps a number of times a day, he must collect fares of fifty or a hundred persons in less time than he ought to have for ten. Of that large number a few will generally have a complaint to make or an objection to offer or an important question concerning a fault of the railroad company which the conductor cannot remedy and is not responsible for. A woman will object to paying half fare for a 10-year-old girl or to paying full rates for one of 15. A person whose income is ten times larger than he deserves will argue twenty minutes to avoid paying 10 cents more (in cash) than he would have been charged for a ticket. Passengers with legitimate questions to ask will couch them in vague and back handed terms, and those with useless ones will take hoppers-full of time to propound them. These are not occasional but every day experiences. The very best and most intelligent people in the community (excepting those who travel much) are among the three who oftenest leave their wife at home when they take a railroad trip.

All these people must be met in a conciliatory manner, but without varying the strict regulations in the least degree. The officers of the revenue department are inexorable masters, and passengers offended by alleged unofficial treatment are likely to make almost complaints at the superintendent's office. A conductor dreads an investigation of this sort, however unreasonable the passengers' complaints may be, because it may lead to show that he has lost in handling the cash. But after becoming habituated to the duties of his office he can still left the occasional disturbances which are sprung on him roughly one month in three. These are encounters with drunken and disorderly passengers. The conductor starting at the forward end of his train, finds, perhaps, in the first car one or two "roughs" who refuse payment of fare and are spoiling for a fight.

Care must be taken with this sort of character not to punish him or use the least bit of unnecessary severity, for he will, when sobered off, quite likely be indicted by a sharp lawyer to sue the railroad company for damages by assault. The conductor, however, if he be one who has had his freight train experience, deals with tramps is able to cope with his customer and condns him to the baggage car or put him off the train. But a tussle of this kind is, at best, far from a cure to the temper, and the very next car may contain the wife of a millionaire who will expect the most genteel treatment and will report the rough conductor if on the part of the conductor which is not fully up to the highest drawing room standard of politeness. What that is can be readily imagined, are exceedingly hard to hear the news, Gen. von Moltke unfolding a map meanwhile and explaining the situation.

This done, the chief of the staff, while awaiting the next report, would either remain in a seat that had been made for him with some knapsacks, or would occupy the time walking about, kicking clods of dirt or small stones from his path, his hands clasped behind his back, his face pale and thoughtful. He was then nearly 70 years old, but because of his decorated figure, the deep wrinkles in his face, and crow's feet about his eyes, he looked even older, his appearance being suggestive of the practice of much unconscious cerebration of his well known ardent smooth, to the military profession.—Gen. How Japanese Rooms Are Lighted.

Light is admitted into Japanese rooms, not by glass windows, but by a kind of wooden gratings, over which a white paper is pasted to shed double. This paper diffuses the sunlight about your room in a mellow way, but it is not proof against rain; rain is rather welcome, and the shutters have to be put up which are used to close the veranda and house in the night time, and which are the only doors in a Japanese house that it is thought necessary to furnish with a bolt. As the putting up and taking down of these shutters is a matter demanding some time, it is usual to have a security, but it is not them, which is called "the exchange door," to provide means of quick escape in case of emergency.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

Wednesday night the tug James H. Martin, of Charlevoix, bound for this port after the pile driver John Naylor, endeavored to dredge a channel across Graham's Shoals with the usual result—a badly damaged bottom. She now lies on her port side full of water. Diver John Dodd is repairing the damages, and as soon he completes the work, she will be listed on an even keel and pulled into deep water.—St. Ignace News.

During the last month or two the steamer Friant has carried a very large amount of freight into and out of Pine Lake. Thirty tons of merchandise each way, has not been an uncommon daily trip by any means. No boat of her size on the lakes, can show bigger net earnings every season since she first shoved her nose along side the Petoskey dock in 1884, just from Grand Haven ship yard.—Petoskey Record.

Capt. Vandecheof of the Friant is as rank a democrat as Cherrie the president of the Pine Lake Iron Co. is a republican. As the Friant went by the dock at Ironton every day, Vandecheof and Cherrie have had a hot during the campaign. Since the victory of the republican party, the big whistle at the furnace blows, and toots and screams derisively, every time the Friant goes by. The captain admits that it makes him tired.—Petoskey Record.

Snow, but not enough for sleighing.

Geo. Vance of Echo, was a guest of his brother on Monday last.

School is to begin in district No. 3 on Dec. 3d; Kate Wilson, teacher.

The new school house on the state road is now sided, and painted one coat. W. F. Barnes of East Jordan did the job.

Ab and Ed Nowland have returned from Horton's Bay where they have been working for two or three weeks.

Joseph Lewis, of Lapeer county, is visiting his parents here, also enjoying his annual deer hunt.

Elder Scofield preached to a large congregation on Sunday afternoon. His subject "The Baptists" is to be continued in two weeks.

Elder Grover has returned, and preached for "The Saints" at the school house Sunday evening. The house was well filled. Some people from Ironton and Rock Elm were present.

Married, Nov. 18th, by J. R. Vance, J. P., at the residence of the groom's mother, Mrs. Thos. Shepherd, Sr. Mr. William Holland and Miss Levina Delong, both of Wilson. (It was J. R.'s first effort and he did very well with the help of the M. E. church service.)

Evelyn.

The furnace shute down this week for the winter.

A large party of young people and school children met at the residence of Mr. Noyes last evening at the invitation of the teacher, Mr. Severance. A very enjoyable time.

Mrs. Almond Bird is reported dangerously ill.

Joe Tuttle has sold his ox team to Mr. Henshaw.

Mr. Parker has the lumber on the ground for a new barn on his farm opposite Ironton. Mr. Box furnishes the lumber. We understand that Mr. Parker intends building a house here in the spring.

A Serious Fire at Norwood.

At four o'clock Monday morning Guyles & Nash's barn at Norwood was totally destroyed by fire, together with all its contents.—four horses, two yoke of oxen, and 40 tons of hay belonging to the company, and a horse and buggy belonging to Arthur Meech. It is not known how the fire originated. The loss is estimated at not less than $2,500, with $1,000 insurance.

Thanksgiving next Thursday.

RAILROAD RUMORS.

The Contract Awarded for the Construction of the D., C. & E.

Information was received here last week that the contract for the construction of the D., C. & E. R. had been awarded to Mr. Warren, of New York, the gentleman who was here last summer and looked over the line with Mr. Frink. The papers need only the signature of W. H. Barnum, president of the company, to be ready for active operations. Mr. Barnum has been too ill to attend to the matter, but the latest report is that he is improving.

We have good reason to believe that work will begin very soon, and be pushed to completion as fast as possible.

The D. C. & E. via Lansing.

It is probable that Lansing may secure an important new railroad before the close of 1889. Our sister prising fellow townsman, J. H. Moores, returned this morning from Charlevoix, where he had a conference with Secretary Meech of the proposed Escanaba, Charlevoix & Detroit railroad. This line has already been surveyed to Harrison, in Clare county, and it is understood that the capitalists who are backing the enterprise are thinking seriously of making a preliminary survey to Lansing via Maple Rapids and St. Johns. A glance at the map will show that this is an entirely feasible route and traverses a rich and fertile section of the state, which is now without adequate railroad facilities. Mr. Moores is enthusiastic over the project, and says that there is no doubt of the construction of the road to Lansing if our business men can only give her assurance to the company that the necessary amount of subscriptions will be forthcoming when a call is made for the same.—Lansing Journal.

Historical Society.

The severe storm last Friday evening prevented a large attendance at the regular meeting of the society at the residence of O. D. Wood, and an adjournment was made to the same place on Friday evening of this week. The program will include a review of ancient history by Prof. H. M. Enos, which will undoubtedly be very interesting. 1

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites), this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of 10 cents by A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

THE OLD BROKEN BUCKET.

How sad to my heart are the memories of childhood,
When passing reflections present them to view,
The cause of raisin that, when I had been with wood,
Would be
Dancing on my back in a lively fashion.
The wide-spreading wood-pile, like an fret stood by it.
The torture those caused me no language can tell.
And, oh! how I pale as in fancy I spy it.
The bucket to wash day I bore to the well.
The paint-covered bucket, the hair-rope bound bucket,
The old broken bucket I bore to the well.

THE CAME AS A FRIEND.

A Story of the Wilderness Campaign.

BY LIEUTENANT WHYLAND.

IT was near midnight on the night of the sixth of May, 1864, that I sat brooding over my camp-fire after a day's hard fighting at the "Wilderness." It will be remembered that this was the second day of this memorable and bloody battle, and that from the dawn of the fifth until sunset of the sixth (according to history) fifteen thousand men were slaughtered in both armies; nor did the firing then entirely cease on the picket lines, for the occasional crack of a musket gave evidence that the pickets of both armies were on the alert, watching for an opportunity to do bodily harm to any one who exposed his person. That night I was detailed for picket duty and was stationed in front of our corps, not far from a point where the woods were said to be on fire; indeed, the smoked the burning had already reached us; but as we were informed that the dead and wounded had all been removed we gave the subject no thought, knowing that beyond a thoroughly smoking, perhaps, it could do us no harm.

I had gone back into the wood a short distance and built a little fire to cook coffee for my comrade and myself—having been fortunate enough to purchase a canteen of water from a passing soldier—and was rejoicing over the prospect of a "feast fit for a king—hard-tack and coffee." While waiting for the water to boil I had sat down, and, as I have stated, was brooding over my feeble fire, and being weary, it is just possible that I fell asleep.

Whether asleep or awake the following visions passed before my mind: I was up North among my friends and acquaintances and was warmly greeted. There was rejoicing on every hand, for the "cruel war was over," and the "flag of our Union" floated over the whole country; for honor no longer divided with another. Bonfires were burning, cannons were booming, and orators were shouting themselves hoarse, while bands were blowing "Hail Columbia" and "The Star-Spangled Banner" to tatters. In fact, the whole country had gone mad with joy. I was received everywhere as a hero, and proudly walked at the head of long processions in my thread-bare uniform, far prouder than a king in his robes of purple and gold.

Then the scene suddenly changed. The year was 1862; I stood before a humble cottage, a cottage covered with trailing vines and flowers, but the fairest flower of all stood in the doorway, and, extending her hand, greeted me warmly. This was homing could of fire on my head, for I had scarcely been true to her, still I was not unnerved a little wayward, that was all.

Then she talked of parting, as she had on a former occasion, and gave the young soldier excellent advice, cautioning him against all excess; "and, above all things, be true to your country, truer than you have been to me. Yonder are your guns; where you will know something of the restless of war, something of a soldier's life divested of tinsel and gold. Realities will meet you on every hand, cold as the steel of your sword, and as broad as the wound in our country's heart."

The moment her fine lip curled and her manner towards me changed, and in place of soothing words her last parting was disfigured by sour looks and upbraidings—in a dream, I suppose, I slept. This was a true picture of the parting which burned into my heart, and this was the mountain on lead that I had carried in my breast for many a day.

How long I slept I know not, but I was rudely awakened by the grinding step of a man on the pine needles and the rustling of dogwood bushes. On opening my eyes, I saw the head and shoulders of a man peering over the low bushes near me. Although he wore the blue uniform, I at once felt suspicious of him, covering him with my revolver, called out: "Halt!" "Who comes here, and why do you come?" I demanded with considerable energy, adding, "Why are you not with your comrades?" I at once ordered him to advance, and when he stepped into the feeble fire-light, I saw at a glance that his lower garments were gray, and at once jumped to the conclusion that my former suspicions were well grounded, for he was a Confederate, and an officer.

"Lend drop your weapon, stranger. Although not a friend, I come as a friend, and I put these things on" (pointing to his coat and cap) "in order that I might get through the lines and reach yer. I'm no traitor, nor ghost, nor goblin damned, nor about to be damned." Dropping all idiom, he said: "I heard you in your den; I have no fear; I am no fireling, nor am I a traitor to my country or her cause, and what is more, I am not a spy upon you or yours. I come in peace, if you will, but can defend myself if I must."

"You're a spy." I angrily exclaimed, "and I arrest you as such; and, furthermore, I will see that you are shot some time in the morning at sunrise."

A sarcastic smile curled his lips as I spoke, and he boldly answered: "To die for one's country is sweet; but there is one dying over yonder who is not of us, nor of 'you uns,' as the soldiers say. Put up your weapons, comrade, and hear me; after hearing my tale, you may shoot me if you will, I shall be resigned. I've been over yonder, amid the smoldering brush and needles and falling branches; have walked along the ragged edge of battle, where Death stalked boldly. I was searching for a comrade, who I found him not. The heathen Johnnies, as 'you uns' call us, removed them all to a place of safety, at least all that could be found and reached. But there was one left, and as I was passing a branch near a spring I was hailed by the dying man, who, in blue, lay half in, half out of his approaching fate. One beautiful white hand lay in the tiny stream, and the left hand, gloved, held a locket tightly clasped. I saw at a glance that he was sorely wounded, perhaps dying, but the closed eyes gave hope of life. I stooped, and, laying my hand on his heart, saw that he was not dead, only exhausted, perhaps from loss of blood, perhaps from overexertion in attempting to reach the stream. Why a soldier in the teeth of battle should wear gloves was a mystery, but this question I laid aside for future solution, resolving at present to do all in my power for the poor unfortunate at my feet.

"As I pressed my hand on his heart he opened his eyes, and such eyes—I have seen them only once in a lifetime—they were the eyes of a woman; the soft gazelle-like eyes of a mother or sister, borrowed to do battle for his country; for such eyes would wound more men than musket balls. When I hurriedly put my canteen to his lips he smiled; then I lifted him carefully and carried him out from the fire and laid him down as tenderly as though he were my sweetheart.

"As he felt the pressure of the earth he groaned, and almost immediately opened them. Then his gloved hands relaxed and the locket fell to earth, opening as it fell. I paid no attention to this at the time, as I was very anxious to bring him back to life and learn his name, his regiment and his corps, if possible. I was somewhat selfish in this, to be sure, because I would that, under his circumstances, the blue should treat the gray in the same manner.

"I administered such restoratives as I had on my person, and in a few moments was rewarded by seeing him slowly revive, but he was very feeble, for I saw that life with him was short, and if I would learn anything of his history I must be active as well as discreet.

"On becoming stronger his gloves had began groping, as for a lost treasure, and I will own that, by the light of my feeble torch, I watched him curiously. Presently his hand closed on the locket, and I saw the miniature. Let me whisper in your ear, my friend, that it was not the face of a woman that looked out upon me, but the well-known features of a soldier. The truth dawned upon me at once. She had followed some unworthy lover—for no man is, or ever can be, worthy such a woman—preferring death, even coming death, rather than to suffer the pangs of disappointment.

"Young man, I have little more to tell. What passed between us none will ever know. I have but another word for you, then I send a bullet through my heart if you can. The sun picture in the locket was the picture of a veteran, of a true soldier; the face was young. Twice one!

"So saying he plunged into the wood, and I, in desperation, followed, my mind harrowed the while with all sorts of misgivings and imaginings. A thought, like a ghost, flew into my mind, asking if this was not a plot, the plan being to work upon my feelings with this weird tale until I was so wrought upon that I would, like a bird, fly directly into the cage of the serpent and become an easy prey?

I could scarcely believe this of a soldier, even if he was a Confederate, and I felt that I would sooner question my sanity than question the honor of a true soldier. As I followed his rapidly retreating form, was a world of feeling surged through my heart. Little by little the solemn truth dawned upon me, but I was so obtuse that I refused to receive it, even when coming upon me with such terrible force. And still I confidingly followed.

Soon we came to a place where a torch was burning feebly, and there in its flickering light, clothed in her regal beauty, lay the "Pearl of Almont," wounded, even unto death. It is useless for me to attempt a description of my feelings; but I will say that the cloud of sorrow that swept over me was blacker than the ink with which I write and heavier than the woe of death. There are sorrows of earth too deep for human sympathy; then the soul springs with one gigantic bound to the Infinite. Irreligious as I was, I fervently exclaimed, "God pity me!" to which the Confederate gently responded, "Amen."

When I neared her she was walking swiftly and covering him with my revolver, called out: "Halt!" "Who comes here, and why do you come?" I demanded with considerable energy, adding, "Why are you not with your comrades?" I at once ordered him to advance, and when he stepped into the feeble fire-light, I saw at a glance that his lower garments were gray, and at once jumped to the conclusion that my former suspicions were well grounded, for he was a Confederate, and an officer.

FARM AND GARDEN

LESSONS FROM EVERYDAY LIFE IN THE COUNTRY.

A Rack for Feeding Sheep Hay, Roots and Grain, with an Arrangement That Prevents Seeds and Filth Dropping on the Sheep When Fed.

In response to the query of a correspondent of a recent good plan for a feeding rack for sheep—some arrangement that prevents seeds and filth from hay dropping on the wool while the animals are feeding—Country Gentleman replies by furnishing the following:

FIG. 1—SHEEP RACK.

The accompanying figure (Fig. 1) represents a feeding rack for the sheep as from the troughs on each side below. The light board prevents hay seed from falling into the wool. The troughs also allow feeding with roots and grain.

FIG. 2—SHEEP RACK.

Fig. 2 is a cross section. The feet A A hold the sheeting, B, durable plank, and notched at B B to receive the boards of the trough. If desired, the wide board may answer as a cover.

A Word About Fences.

In sections where rail timber is near at hand the chestnut fence is the old fashioned Virginia worm fence, except in cases where there is a market for the timber that makes it more valuable for other purposes. In this case the regulation board fence, with two posts to a sixteen foot length, and which is too well known to require a description, will be the cheapest and best. In localities where timber is scarce the wire fence is increasing all the time in favor. Farmer: who can buy to stock three hundred barbs are many of them making a combination fence of boards and wire.

For a hedge fence, the osage orange, all things considered, is the best for all sections where it is not liable to be winter killed. It grows from the seed more rapidly than the thorns, and in a few years makes an impenetrable fence. It is difficult to root out when once established, and for this reason should not be used for division fences unless they are expected to remain permanently. Hedges require attention and frequent pruning to keep them slightly and under subjection. While they are still well thought of by many, it is doubtful if the hedge fence is increasing in general popularity for farm purposes. In the older settled sections of the country fewer highway fences are being made every year. The opinion is constantly gaining ground that stock should be fenced in instead of being fenced out.

A California Shipping Coop.

The California Cackler describes the shipping coop here illustrated. The diagram is simply an illustration of the frame.

A SHIPPING COOP.

A coop built on this plan need not weigh over three and one-half to three and three-quarter pounds, and be large enough to carry a trio of games or fowls of medium size anywhere. The coop can be larger for Asiatics and not weigh over half a pound more.

Take two barrel hoops and six slats or pieces of lath; cross two of the pieces in the bottom hoop; fasten them together in the middle with a clout or wrought nail; fasten the other four to the top hoop with clouts; fasten the lower ends to the bottom hoop by driving two small nails through them into the hoop and into the ends of the crossed slats, and your frame is completed. Take a piece of coffee sack, or similar stuff, and cut it round and a little larger than the bottom hoop; lash or sew it to the bottom hoop and to the cross pieces. Take canvas, muslin, tick, ing or whatever you wish to cover it with, and draw it around and lash it to the bottom and top hoops; cut a piece of cloth round to cover the top; cut the top piece in two across the middle after it is put on; this will give an opening to put the fowls into the coop, after which the aperture can be laced or sewed together. If the fowls are to go any distance, feed will be necessary, of course. To provide for this, sew a pocket on the outside that will hold a pint or more; inside sew another pocket, with the bottom just even with the bottom of the outside pocket, the inside pocket to be but about two inches deep. Cut or punch a small hole through the side of the coop to connect the two pockets; put the feed into the outside pocket and it will run through easily as fast as the fowls eat it from the inside pocket. Make a locking cap to one of the upright slats and to the top hoop, so that it will project half out and half in the coop.

A coop 50 inches across and 22 inches high will weigh 35 pounds and be large enough for a trio of games. If the fowls are to go on a short journey do not put in the feed and drinking cup.

Waldo F. Brown is credited with saying: "I believe the best succulent food during the fall is pumpkins. I have fed them for many years, and have never been disappointed in the result. Wherever you can get your hogs to take one good square meal a day of pumpkins you may be sure they will eat and digest a large amount of corn, and gain rapidly."

AN INTERESTING POTATO CONTEST.

Potatoes Grown by the Trench System of Cultivation.

The editor of The Rural New Yorker last winter made the statement that if he could not raise at the rate of over 200 bushels of potatoes to the acre on a given plot in his experiment grounds for what is known as the Rural trench system of cultivation, let the season be favorable or unfavorable, he would forfeit $50; if any one would pay the same amount in case of his success—the money in either event to be donated to some charitable purpose. The challenge was accepted by Mr. Wilmer Atkinson, the editor of The Farm Journal. It was agreed that the result of the contest should be determined by the following judges: W. A. Cross, editor of Garden and Forest, New York; Dr. Peter Collier, director of the New York experimental station, Geneva, N. Y.; Thomas S. Barr, Plainfield, N. J.; Peter T. Quinn, Newark, N. J.; J. G. Webb, River Edge, N. J., and L. C. Benedict, agricultural editor of The New York World.

The contest potatoes were planted April 20, and cultivated according to the trench system approved by Mr. Carman, and on several years practiced with unvarying and satisfactory results. The crop was harvested, measured and duly decided upon Sept. 28 by the judges appointed, in the presence of some thirty guests, including Peter Henderson, the well known New York seedsman, C. V. Mapes, of the Mapes Formula and Peruvian Guano company; W. H. Bowker, of the Bowker Fertilizer company; Dr. F. M. Hexamer, editor of The American Agriculturist; J. C. Haviland, representing The Farm Journal, and E. Williams, the veteran horticulturist, of Montclair, N. J.

The contest plot contained five rows, each thirty-three feet long, three inches apart from center to center, on specially prepared ground on which potatoes had been grown for twelve successive years. During this entire period it received every fifty tons of horse manure per acre. The applications of fertilizers each year have been liberal, the average being probably not less than 1,200 pounds to that rate) per acre. The rows or trenches, as they are called, are distinguish them from the ordinary plantings, were dug eight inches deep and one foot wide. Mapes' potato manure was mixed with the soil in the bottom at the rate of 800 pounds to the acre. On this the seed, cut three strong eyes to the piece, was planted in hills one foot apart; then a light covering of soil on the seed and an additional amount of the fertilizer to make it equal to 1,700 pounds to the acre, when the trenches were filled to the surface with the earth taken out.

One of these trenches was planted with a potato known as the Rural New Yorker No. 2, two with Rural New Yorker No. 5 and two with Rural New Yorker No. 3. Unfortunately for the contest, the flea beetle which has done much damage to the potato crop this season in certain portions of New Jersey and elsewhere, attacked the foliage of No. 3, occupying two-fifths of the plot, and destroyed it before the earliest potatoes began to mature. Variety No. 4, also two fifths of the plot, was attacked in a similar manner later on and the foliage mostly killed some three or four weeks previous to the maturity of the tubers. The plants of Rural New Yorker No. 2 were less injured than either of the other varieties and the foliage was alive to the early part of September.

The production of the three varieties named in Rural N. N. Nos. 2, 3 and 4, grown in the five trenches and stated in bushels and tenths, was as follows: The two trenches of No. 4 yielded respectively at the rate of 603 and 605 bushels to the acre. The tubers were large and well shaped and were generally of merchantable quality. The two trenches of No. 3 yielded respectively at the rate of 662 and 695 bushels to the acre. The tubers were large and well shaped and were generally of merchantable size. The two trenches of No. 2 (the one most injured) followed with a comparatively small yield, at the rate of 376 and 356 bushels to the acre. The mammoth yield, which brought joy to Mr. Carman, although he was slaughtered on the entire plot, was made by No. 2, which weighed out at the rate of 1,076 bushels to the acre. The tubers were large, quite uniform in size and perfect in condition. One of the noticeable things about this number was the unusual absence of sunk, or numerehanable sizes.

The committee made a certificate for the whole plot at the rate of 861 bushels to the acre. This total, while falling below the yield specified in the challenge, is in point of fact a notable one in view of the attack of the unforeseen and unconquerable enemy which destroyed the No. 3 plants before the tubers were a quarter grown, considerably injured the No. 4 plants and those of No. 2 somewhat.

Mr. Carman favors the trench culture because it supplies a mellow and congenial medium for the growth of the roots, which may extend where they will without obstruction, and because manure is preserved by the increased porosity. Again, the tubers are less crowded and more shapely than when planted the old way, and in the level system the rain is not shed off from the hills, but goes down where it will do the most good.

Things Worth Knowing.

The bulletins issued from the Kentucky station will be mailed to any citizen of that state who sends his name and address for that purpose to "Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station," Lexington, Ky.

Illinois is the leading brown corn producing state.

Droves of dehorned steers are now appearing in the Chicago market.

Hemlock or spruce boughs are recommended as a good covering for the strawberry patch in the garden.

A little green food, a few apples, beets, potatoes or other roots given to the cow occasionally will help to keep her healthy and maintain the flow of milk.

Kindness to stock is a paying investment.

With a little meal the dairyman may grow and fatten a pig for each cow at a year, increase the fertility of his farm, and do away with so many months of unprofitable feeding just to support life.

The production of lambs for market, in any of the more thickly settled sections of the country, if conducted with intelligence, cannot fail to be profitable.

The reduction of postage on seeds, bulbs, plants, etc., from one cent per ounce to one cent for two ounces is now an accomplished fact.

A "juice bagging trust" attempted to force the cotton planters of the south to pay exorbitant prices for the jute bagging used as a covering for cotton bales. Experiments have been made with coarse cotton sheeting, which is much cheaper, and which is considered satisfactory by the New York Cotton Exchange and the Liverpool Cotton association. Thus far cheap sheeting will doubtless largely take the place of artificially dear jute bagging.

Ask for Ayer's

Sarsaparilla and be sure you get it, when you want the best blood purifier. With its forty years of unexampled success in the cure of Blood Diseases, you can make no mistake in preferring Ayer's to any other. The forearmers of modern blood medicines, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is still the most popular, being in greater demand than all others combined. It is highly concentrated—the only Sarsaparilla worth $5 a bottle.

Sarsaparilla

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far exceed those of any other, and it gives thorough satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickham, Pharmacist, Rockland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for some thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood purifier."—W. H. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staunch. There is nothing so good for the youthful blood as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Robt. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it to my customers, and they, I prescribe it over the counter, for the blood. Some of these cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' practice has been given up, are well."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Price $1; six, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF THE EVENTFUL HAPPENINGS OF A WEEK.

Political, Commercial, and Industrial News from All Over the Land—Fires, Accidents, and Crimes—The Gist of the News in a Few Lines.

OLD WORLD AFFAIRS.

The German and Austrian Press on the War Scare.

A London special says that the war scare in the German and Austrian press shows no signs of abating. The opposition journals, however, are somewhat skeptical of the genuineness of the fright manifested by the government organs in both empires, and hint that they are indebted to their courses by instructions emanating directly from their governments. The object, the opposition papers say, is to prepare the minds of the public for fresh demands which are to be made upon the Reichstag for artillery purposes. Rumors similar in tone are current on the Bourse. Another rumor which adds to the general feeling of alarm is that Russia decides that all the foreign military attaches now at her capital shall be recalled from St. Petersburg, and with that end in view intends to delude the port of military attaches at her own embassies abroad. This step will embrace the chief captains—Berlin, Vienna, Rome, London, and Constantinople.

POWDERLY INDORSED.

He Will Most Likely Remain at the Head of the K. of L.

At the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor, at Indianapolis, Ind., Mr. Powderly was further asked, on the 26th inst., to continue as the head of the order, the seven Canadian delegates having called upon him for that purpose. Mr. Powderly gave them to understand that he would accept the office again provided he could choose his own advisers. This really settles the question, as everything indicates that Mr. Powderly will have his wish, the only question being regarding the way it shall be done. It is reported that a proposition looking to an entirely new constitution has been presented to the assembly. As there is a strong feeling in favor of radical revision of the present constitution it will undoubtedly have many supporters.

KNIGHTS WILL BE TOLERATED.

Reply of the Roman Catholic Propaganda to Cardinal Gibbons.

The New York Catholic News has received from its Roman correspondent the text of the reply sent by Cardinal Simeoni, Prefect of the Propaganda, to his Eminence Cardinal Gibbons. It is as follows:

It is my duty to inform your Eminence that the fresh documents relative to the association known as the Knights of Labor, forwarded to this Sacred Congregation, were examined by it in the ordinary session of Monday of the present year. After having attentively studied the whole subject, the Sacred Congregation has thought fit to reply that so far as at present the order by certain bishops, she says, has caused her to take this step.

ED MCDONALD'S LUCK.

The Illinois Supreme Court Finds Fatal Errors in the Case of the People Against the Alleged "Boodlers."

In the Supreme Court at Ottawa, Ill., Judge Craig has filed a decision in the case of Ed McDonald, convicted with McGarigle of "boodling" in Cook County. McDonald was engineer of that County Hospital, and was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary for his connection with the "boodling" of the Board of Commissioners. The opinion is to the effect that the men did not get a fair trial; that some of the instructions of the Judge were errors; that the opening and closing statements of counsel for the people went beyond statutory bounds, especially the references to Mike McDonald, who was in no manner legally connected with the case; that even during the references were made to the Supreme Court, brought out by statements of the probability of an appeal by defendants to that body; that a proper bill of particulars was not furnished by the State's Attorney; that improper evidence was introduced and permitted to go to the jury; and that the Court's instructions were not impartial in their scope and purposes. As a result the decision of the lower courts was reversed, and the cause was remanded for a new trial.

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

Money in Ample Supply and Collections Maintain a Good Average.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s trade review for last week says:

The spring mercantile trade continued large, but important advances in transactions in anticipation of an improvement in prices were so large prior to the election that comparative dullness followed. What was desired was not upon hand for the storage of exports from Atlantic cities, and the Western demand was slow. The Pacific coast, notwithstanding portions was the export of 4,500,000 bushels of corn in five weeks, against 1,870,000 bushels last year, pointing to less foreign demand for wheat. Will the crop be sufficient? Cotton has been cheaper with speculation narrow and sales only 1,250,000 bushels for the week. Oats were very active and strong. Pork and lard were decidedly active and promising. Excessive production weakened the anthracite coal market, reduced demand for bituminous, and a decrease of 1,000,000 tons in the output was already already all past records. Money was easy at Nashville, firm at Kansas City, and in active demand at Memphis, but nearly all points had an ample supply. Scarcely any complaint was made of interference with business by strikes. The week exceeded receipts by only 8,000,000. The failures during the week numbered 237.

EXPENSES OF POSTAL SERVICE.

The Receipts Fall Short of the Expenses by Many Thousands of Dollars.

The annual report of the Third Assistant Postmaster General says:

The total cost of the postal service for the last fiscal year, including the amount earned by the estimated Pacific railroads for mail transportation, was $57,183,018. The postal service proper cost $56,000,000, leaving a deficiency of $1,183,018. This deficiency is, in reality, it is said, in the gist estimate, due to the free-delivery service and the increase of railway mail transportation. The total receipts from all sources, including the free-delivery service, were about $57,000,000, and of special-delivery matter 1,494,000. Statistics are given showing that in the cheapness of postage, the machinery of postal service, the extent of the postal service, postal revenue, postal expenditure, and number of letters and other pieces of mail matter transmitted the United States is now conspicuously ahead of every other nation. In the year ended June 30 there passed through the mails 1,700,000,000 letters, 87,000,000 postal cards, 1,063,000,000 newspapers and periodicals, and 2,000,000 pieces of third and fourth class matter.

MORMONS WANT TO GO TO CANADA.

The Dominion Government Declines to Countenance Polygamy.

The three Mormon elders, Messrs. Card, Taylor and Lyman, have had an interview with the Minister of Customs at Ottawa, Ont. They sought permission to take machinery from the States, either new or old, free of duty; also all their agricultural implements, horses, cattle, etc., not only when they went in as settlers, but at any future time when they desired it. Mr. Bowell pointed out to them that under the law no concession could be allowed to them which are not permitted to other settlers. They will be allowed, however, to take in their settlers' effects free.

FAILED FOR $400,000.

A North Carolina Bank Collapses, Many Large Firms Being Involved.

The Bank of Durham, N. C., has made an assignment. Several of the largest business establishments in Durham are involved. A list of the failures is as follows: The Bank of Durham, State bank, owned by W. S. Blackwell; liabilities estimated at $400,000; estimated assets upward of $800,000. F. J. Parrish, warehouseman and manufacturer of smoking tobacco; liabilities $190,000; estimated assets $300,000. J. W. Blackwell, real dealer, contractor, etc.; liabilities $110,000; and others to the amount of $41,000. It is stated that Blackwell will be able to pay all creditors in full.

HEAVY DAMAGES.

A Verdict for $9,000 Against a Railroad Company.

The jury in the suit of Frank E. Pooler against the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company to recover damages for injuries sustained in a collision at Clifton Station March 12 last, the day of the great blizzard, have returned a verdict in Philadelphia, Pa., for the plaintiff for $9,000. The defense of the company was that the accident was unavoidable and due to an act of God; that the engine of the train on which the plaintiff was a passenger was frozen up and could not proceed; and that the engineer of the colliding train was unable to see before him on account of the snow in the air.

AN EARTHQUAKE IN CALIFORNIA.

A Shock of Considerable Force Felt Throughout the State.

A shock of earthquake that was sharp enough to cause many people in hotels and private houses to run out into the street was felt at San Francisco, Cal. The direction was northwest to southeast and the duration ten seconds. Telegrams say the shock was felt through Central California. The University of California reports the shock to be the severest since 1872. In some places children were reported to have been rolled out of their cradles. The shock was followed by a rumbling sound which was distinctly audible.

LONDON SOCIALISTS ASSEMBLED.

Mrs. Parsons Makes a Speech Advocating the Use of Dynamite.

The socialists of London held an immense meeting in Victoria Park to commemorate the Trafalgar Square and Chicago riots. Speeches were made from three platforms. Mrs. Parsons, of Chicago, advocated the use of bombs. Mr. Graham, member of Parliament, denounced capitalists and landlords, and said that until workers organized to take land, capital, and machinery for their own benefit they would continue to be slaves, and the Trafalgar Square and Chicago scenes would be repeated.

REWARD FOR TASCOTT.

The $20,000 Offered for His Apprehension Remains Good.

The $20,000 reward offered for the apprehension of Willie Tascott, the supposed slayer of A. J. Sesh, of Chicago, which expired Nov. 17, has been renewed by Mrs. Henrietta Sesh, the widow of the murdered millionaire. When the reward was first offered Mrs. Sesh thought that a sixty-day limit would induce the guilty to get into their best efforts to locate the fugitive. Now she is satisfied that the reward has not been a very strong stimulant. The renewed offer holds good for sixty days more.

POLITICAL NEWS.

Posey Will Contest for a Seat in Congress Vote of Texas.

It is stated that Col. Frank B. Posey, the Republican candidate for Congress in the First District of Indiana, will contest the election of Judge Parrott, the Democratic candidate, who has a plurality of 129 over 4,000 votes. Posey claims frauds were committed in Perry County, where the Catholic monastery is located.

The official returns of the vote for President in Iowa give Harrison, 208,566; Cleveland, 178,778; Harrison's plurality, 30,361.

THE YELLOW SCOURGE.

Seventeen New Cases and Two Deaths from the Plague.

The new cases of yellow fever at Jacksonville, Fla., on the 19th, were 12, and the deaths 1; total number of cases to date, 2,651; total deaths, 298. Of the new cases four were white. The city proper is comparatively free from yellow fever. The suburbs develop most of the new cases. The week's report of the Board of Health in South Jacksonville, across St. Johns River, at Oakenwalde five new fever cases and one death occurred.

MURDER AT PITTSBURG.

An Aged Widow Killed in Her Home in the Heart of the City.

Mary Ingoldby, a widow aged 80 years, who lived alone in Pittsburg, Pa., was found dead in bed with her hands and feet securely tied. There were no marks of violence on her person, but it is supposed she was either killed or frighted to death by a tramp bent on robbery, as the room presented the appearance of having been ran-

COL. DUDLEY'S LETTER.

IT IS TO BE INVESTIGATED BY THE FEDERAL GRAND JURY.

Figuring on Election Majorities—Contests Probable—The Grand Army Invasion—Appoints His Aides—Other Interesting News.

[Indianapolis (Ind.) special.]

The Federal Grand Jury has virtually received instructions from Judge W. A. Woods, of the District Court, to return an indictment against Col. W. W. Dudley for "aiding, abetting, and counseling" an attempt to bribe voters. The Grand Jury is composed of an equality of Republicans and Democrats, but politics is not likely to cut any figure, as Judge Woods, a Republican, enjoined the jurors not to allow partisan considerations to interfere with their judgment. Coming as this does from a jurist who is Gen. Harrison's confidential friend, who was with him at Middle Bass Island this summer, and who is believed to be the choice of the President-elect for the first vacancy on the Supreme bench, the charge has more than ordinary weight, and its real significance is that the next President is going to enforce the election laws. In his charge Judge Woods did not mention names, but he might just as well have done so, as the indictment of Col. Dudley seems to be a foregone conclusion. Colonel Dudley's friends regret that the Kansas letter contained a warning to "floaters" should have made his indictment so easy possible, and they say he would be assassin's bullet missing him, if his friends, who, he claimed, were ordered to surround the Capitol at Tishomingo, when, if hyed and his friends do not surrender, a war of extermination will be begun.

Will Have to Give His Reasons.

President Seelye, of Amherst College, Mass., has notified Dudley that in his case, before Master in Chancery Charles E. Hildreth, refused to answer certain questions, for which he will be obliged to give his reasons before Judge Allen in the Supreme Court.

To Restrict Production.

For the purpose of restricting production the river coal operators propose to shut down all the mines along the Monongahela, which alone will throw 6,000 men out of employment. A meeting to consider the matter will be held at Pittsburg.

Anarchist Cheats the Gallows.

Fritz Auschlag, a German, committed suicide in jail at Los Angeles, Cal., by taking strychnine. He was to have been executed, for the murder of Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock at Glendale Grove a month last.

Denounced by a Priest.

At Dunmanway, Ireland, the other Sunday, the priest at each mass denounced the murderer of Lynch and urged the people to become detectives in order to capture the criminal.

To Advance Women.

The Association for the Advancement of Women, comprising famous women of America and Europe, held its sixteenth annual congress at Boston, with about 250 members of the society were present.

Chicago's Ex-Mayor.

Ex-Mayor Carter Harrison has returned to his home in Chicago after a trip around the world. He was welcomed and banqueted by many citizens of Chicago.

Burned in Bonds.

Thomas W. Moore, of Bloomington, Ill., engaged in the lumber business at Chattanooga, Tenn., was burned to death in a hotel fire.

Seven Paragraphs.

Weed & Co., Black River Falls, Wis., lost 3,000,000 feet of lumber by an incendiary fire. The loss is $10,000.

Part of E. N. Cook & Co.'s distillery at Buffalo, N. Y., with 400 barrels of whisky and valuable machinery, was burned at a loss of $50,000; fully insured.

At Rochester, N. Y., John Van Korff, engineer of the Steam Gauge and Lantern Works, by the burning of which over forty persons lost their lives, by mistake, rushed for setting fire to the building. Mysterious fires in several places where Van Korff had been employed led to the suspicion that he also burned the works above mentioned.

Four Italians, said to be the same who are wanted in Joseph Chamberlain, the English statesman, has been arrested for theft.

W. J. Durant, a stockman in Indian Territory, was murdered. His friends suspected two men named Jefferson and Davis, with whom Durant had quarreled, and left for parts unknown.

The steamer Maud M. Fish sank at Gould's Landing, twenty miles below New Orleans. She was valued at $10,000 and is insured in Cincinnati companies. Mate John Fox was lost.

LIFE IN THE PINERIES.

LOGGING AND RAFTING IN NORTH-WESTERN FORESTS.

color of their long hair, their beards, and their sun-cured raiment. Their faces show shades of bronze from the most pale yellow, for those are all-pervading yellow, for those are almost as deeply as any costly examples of French or Italian art found in the jewelers' windows. Such are the tion of timber has limited the available trees to regions pretty far from the main streams, yet the logs are transported to water that is "navigable" at times, without decidedness on winter's snow.

The log slide is a peculiar device. It is, laid end to end, horse-power is used to the extent of the force of a single log pushed long distances, until a stream is reached sufficiently large to supply transportation when spring freshets have quickened its pulses. The cylinders of a wing gauge, meanwhile, avoid the coming of the floods. When there is water sufficient the "driving" at a flood or freshet begins. The lumberman takes naturally to so designating inanimate wood. The "flock" is turned loose in the stream and the men toil from before daylight to after dark, the lignuous bundles by prying and hauling and guiding the clumsy logs.

It prevent a jammin of blockade of the logs on routes is a labor requiring experience, adjustment, and a deal of activity. But finally the flock is safely landed in the "boom," a water-inclosure, where the logs are formed into small rafts for floating to the larger wealth and prosperity of the Northwest to a marked degree.

A queer announcement is found at many of the country taverns patronized by raftsmen and loggers. It reads: "Chip your boots before entering this hotel." This is Greek to the stranger. It is simply a polite request to men whose feet are shod with inch spikes to impale chips upon the floor before entering the house. A chipped boot is merciful to floors and carpets—where this luxury is found—but boots unchipped are quick death to flooring boards and gallant knights are scarcely recognized in the shape of carpets. Hence the warning.

visible attributes of the raftsmen who stray from their haunts in the wilds of Northern Wisconsin or other parts of the Northwest to "size up the cities," as they express it.

They drift from the forests to the river towns, and up and down the, Mississippi, from St. Louis to St. Paul. They roam about at their own sweet will, unguided even by the hungry "bough" who preys upon the stranger, for these raftsmen are self-supporters. They are not burdened with wealth, their muscles are like whip-cords, and their frame like a lode-hammer; for good reasons these for their immunity from assaults.

Life is a lumbering camp and along the "log rivers," so called, is at all times picturesque and interesting to the stranger. A skillful artist while on a tour through Northern Wisconsin and Michigan, sketched a few scenes that exhibit many characteristic sketches of life with the raftsmen. Along the river banks, while the raftsmen are having a blissful time of it at the camps, the rafts are being taken charge of by purchasers. Lumber rafts are seldom built by one, and rarely by two men. Mostly fifteen these fleets of timber, the men who have charge of them are the rulers of the rivers, monarchs of the forest have crashed to the earth. During the summer and autumn months this commerce goes on along small streams tributary to the rivers of the great Northwest. The logs float down to the "place of the sawmill, it floats out of a lake or as an individual and is lost forever. It has been one of the "oldest" inhabitants, for it has lived an upright life. But this has availed nothing, and after the passage beneath that bridge the log has no place of its long habitation have parted forever. Though the steady companyripsaws in the raftsman's round of duties. A raft, plunging over a dam of ten-foot fall, is a spectacle which brings out the natives in force. To keep the bow car in position and so maintain control of the floating mass, is the chief consideration, and this is often a task rendered herculean by the mighty rushing of the water. But these exciting periods are alternated with quieter hours when the raft drifts peacefully down the swollen creek.

Two-man whose raft becomes uncontrollable and grounds hard below a dam, unscrews the bolts and rolls apart so as to battering rams for the ground one. Strong shoulders and skill are called into play by the duties of a raftsman. These rough looking men will perform marvelous deeds with the ponderous logs, riding them with the

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

MR. CHARLES P. WARNER the new editor of the Traverse Eagle, personally charges the republicans of that place with using bogus tickets at the election Nov. 6th, and the Herald and the republicans feel very much worried at the charge.

MR. SPRAGUE of the Traverse City Eagle has taken a partner in the newspaper business, Mr. Charles P. Warner, who will have editorial charge of the paper. Mr. Warner promises to make things interesting for Eagle readers the coming months. We wish the new firm abundant success.

THE Detroit Evening News charges Abram S. Hewitt of New York for the defeat of Grover Cleveland, because he insisted on being a candidate for mayor, and traded every other interest, especially that of Cleveland, for votes for himself. The figures given by the News substantiate the charge, and are interesting to study.

THE New York Herald's Washington special says: "A new republican daily paper, to support the administration of Harrison and Morton, will be started the first week in December. Mr. E. W. Fox will be the editor, assisted by his son, William C. Fox. The paper has secured quarters adjoining the house where President Lincoln died."

IT is a little remarkable, after all the pow wow the republicans made before election about the danger attendant upon tariff agitation and the injurious effect it had on business, that the leaders of the party should all be agitating the tariff to the top of their ability. Such is the fact. Sherman and Aiger and William Walter Phelps and all the rest of them are insisting that the tariff must be revised and the surplus reduced, and some of them are so anxious about it that they cannot wait for the regular session of congress but want a special one called as soon as Harrison is sworn in. And it does not seem to occur to any of them now that tariff agitation injures business. —Free Press.

THERE is every probability that there will be another sensational investigation of the soldier's home managers during the coming session of the legislature in Lansing. It is said in Grand Rapids that the institution seems to be running itself. There has not been a meeting of the full board in 21 months, and it is charged that the engineer, who has been drawing $125 per month, has been doing nothing all summer but engineer a peanut stand on the grounds. When it became necessary to start up the steam, steam fitters had to be engaged at an expense of $25 per day to do work which a competent engineer would have done though the summer. It is also charged that the engineer, whose only previous experience was as fireman on a Detroit river tug, has brutally used some of the inmates.—Lansing Journal.

THE ten-cent raise in wages at Sharon, Pa., seems to be a lonely instance of that kind of result from Harrison's election. We speak of it in that way because the papers which supported Mr. Harrison speak of it in that way and seem very proud of it. But having laid down the doctrine that this election is responsible, they must follow it to its legitimate conclusion. If Mr. Harrison's election caused the ten-cent raise at Sharon, it caused the reduction of from 15 to 20 per cent in the wages of the men employed in Hall's safe and lock company. Cincinnati. Singular as it may seem, these men are not as much pleased with the result as the Sharon men. Yet they helped to produce it. They were told if they wanted work and wages to vote for Harrison and they obeyed the injunction.—Free Press.

Where are the Large Families.

The Detroit Journal has instituted a novel search for the largest families and has sent out cards that are intended to be passed on until they reach and obtain the signatures of nine mothers with large families. The last one (the 9th) to sign the card is requested to return the card to the Detroit Journal. In order to make the scheme work and keep the card moving, the Detroit Journal offers $1 each to the nine mothers on any one card, the aggregate of whose children should prove to be the largest. This will have the effect of increasing the number of large families!

Boyne City.

BOYNE, Nov. 26.—The November term of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix commenced Tuesday, the 20th, being the first term held in the new court house. The first case on the calender was that of The People vs. James Harper, for murder, and of course there was a large audience present, of all classes of people, who gave the closest attention to the proceedings. The murder seems to have been committed under the following circumstances. One Marsh Byers, a gambler of Grand Rapids employed James Turner, the murdered man, and James Harper, the murderer, to go to East Jordan at the time of holding the county fair, Sept. 26, for the purpose of working a gambling scheme, but failing to get a local license and on account of rain all three took themselves to a poker den over James Shear's saloon where with other kindred spirits they engaged in playing poker. After a few games Harper claimed that Turner had cheated him, and becoming angry left the room. He then went to a hardware store and bought a revolver and cartridges, loaded it, and went back to the saloon. Returning to the poker room he demanded his money of Turner, covering him with the revolver he repeated his demand, every one sprang to his feet, as they did so Harper fired shooting Turner through the head. The defense claimed the shooting to have been an accident and asked for a verdict of manslaughter, but as Harper had expressed himself previous to buying the revolver, his determination 'to do Turner up' if he did not refund the money, the jury after being out ten hours, a verdict of murder in the first degree was brought in. F. E. Fogg assisted H. L. Corbett in the prosecution, while M. M. Burnham and W. A. Norton being appointed by the court, defended.

In the case of the People vs. Duncan Furgeson, et. al. for resisting an officer, a motion to quash was granted.

The case of the People vs. Reuben Brown, the defendant failing to appear, the bondsmen were held liable.

In the case of the People vs. Alvin Barkley for mayhem, a motion to quash was granted.

In the case of the People vs. Alex. McTavish, for violation of liquor law, the jury brought in a verdict of guilty, and a fine of $75 or ninety days in jail was imposed by the court.

Divorces were granted in the following cases: Wellington R. from Hannah C. Bailey; cause, adultery. Susan from Thompson Crimble; cause, extreme cruelty. Caroline H. from Dennis Smith; cause, failure to support. The other cases were deferred to a special term of court to commence Dec. 18.

Mrs. F. M. Chase, who has been on the sick list since her return home from the south part of the state, is somewhat recovered.

Judge Ramsdell expresses himself as well pleased with the superior convenience of the new court house over the old one, or any in the county in which he has held court.

Orlando Blair, county treasurer and register of deeds elect, has moved his family from East Jordan into the house of D. Halliday, on Spruce street.

Fred Helfrich has removed his stock of groceries to the corner store recently occupied by J. L. Handy.

Dr. Hay of Boyne Falls is about to remove with his family to this place for the practice of medicine.

Rev. J. Burdge is assisting Rev. Dorrance in a series of meetings being held at Ironton.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Stilt, Druggist, Pippon, Ind., testifies: I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Shew, druggist, Rushville, Ohio, affirms "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony to that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters conquer all diseases of the stomach, liver, kidneys or Blood. Only a half a dollar a bottle at F. A SOUDANESE THREAT.

The Africans Propose to Turn the Nile from Its Course.

The warlike Soudanese, who have so stoutly resisted the introduction of civilization into their land, are now found, according to Sir Samuel Baker, to be masters of the situation to a degree for which even the fall of Khartoum does not prepare the civilized world. They hold the key of the Nile, and prudent and thoughtful men who know the geography of the Soudan and the resources and recklessness of the natives believe that they are capable of turning that great river out of its present course and bringing irretrievable ruin upon Egypt. It appears that in the inaccessible fastnesses of the desert, where the bayonets of Europe cannot reach, there is a spot where even savage African engineering will suffice to bind the Nile a short cut to the sea, and they have already threatened their enemies with this disaster.

If the work is done a fertile land nearly equal in extent to the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan will be changed into a desert and a population of millions will be blotted out of a country that is the oldest in history. No such gigantic menace has ever before been held out in the annals of the world, and never before has it been so possible that a grave threat would be fatally carried out.

It is a figure of speech when we talk about the nations changing the map of Europe; the wild spearsmen of the Soudan have it in the hollow of their hands to alter in fact and deed the map of Africa. They can, if they please, we are told, spread the Sahara like a great yellow pall fully across the continent from sea to sea. They can build a rampart of sand against progress that progress can not cross. Such tremendous power, such a mischievous possibility, grows in interest to the Egyptian problem that brings it home to every city of plain grain still that first and a half times as much as it did, say a year ago.

To understand the new process one must first know what the old one was. It was wasteful enough. A log seven feet long or less and of almost any diameter above seven inches, exclusive of sap, had its bark chipped off with an adze, and was then steamed over night in a tank made for the purpose. In the morning it was ready to be fastened into a big lathe and a knife blade as long as the longest log used—as ten feet—was kept pressed against the log so as to cut off a shaving or ribbon about one-thirtieth of an inch thick as the log revolved toward it. Two men rolled up the ribbon and carried it away as it was turned out. Of course the knife had to be set parallel with the axis of the log or the wood would not all be cut up, and so if the grain of the wood were straight, the ribbon would be a ribbon that looked well enough; even had the long, straight knife cut the grain at an angle the product would have had now "the over the plain grain, but it was in consideration of the possibilities of cutting at an angle that the new process was hit upon.

The inventor noticed that the growth of no two different years in a tree had ribbon cut out have a similar appearance

ONE OCTOBER MORNING.

A Story of Old Quebec.

BY WM. H. S. ATKINSON.

IN the Province of Old Quebec, nestled in the recesses of Canadian pines, lies the prim little out-of-the-world village of Jacques Cartier, with its tiny church, its weather-worn wooden crucifixes, and its short-petticoated housewives. At Jacques Cartier I resided for many years, although it was a very poor place for a doctor, and I gves to really love the sleepy old place, together with the simple, genial French people and half-breeds who lived there. Very little variation entered into the monotonous life of those quaint folks in the St. Emilie valley, and yet I believe I was able, while among them, to study a good many phases of human nature and many of the strange workings of human passions.

Marie Gambier soon learned to love him.

Detached from the rest of the village, there used to be, and is now, for aught I know to the contrary, a long, low, vine-covered house, not much larger than a cottage. An old-fashioned garden, full of the sweet flowers somewhat despised by modern horticulturists, lies all around it, divided from the orchard at the back by a straggling fence and a merry little stream of clear water. The whole place gives one impression of sweetness and freshness, though hardly of trimness.

They would require, this garden and orchard, the constant care of two strong men to render them as neat as the lawns and flower-beds of city lots, whereas the sole attention they receive, when I knew them, was the very unmethodical care of Pierre Marie Gambier. Well, Marie had ample important work to do than gardening. She kept house for her father, and for the girl that meant cooking, cleaning, for the girl that meant cooking, cleaning, sewing, and sometimes even milking.

Old Pierre Gambier was the last of a long line of descendants of an ancient French Gambier, who had settled in Canada with the first of the French colonists, and although only imperfectly educated he prided himself on the fact that he was a gentleman and who had never been obliged to work. It did not occur to him that, because he chose to exist upon a pitiful three or four hundred dollars a year, a frail and slender wife had been harrowed to her long rest; nor did he pause to consider that his daughter Marie, instead of being at a convent school and enjoying herself as young girls should, was growing up to succeed her mother as a household drudge, and in total ignorance of all the social philosophers usually so dear to young ladies, even in the back townships of the olve French province.

Marie was very simple and very ignorant, but she possessed pleasant traits of character. All the dogs, cats, cows and horses in the village knew Marie Gambier, and in their several ways showed their appreciation of her kindly notice of them. Besides, Marie was very pretty, and in the manner of her kind a strapping young Frenchman who was as ignorant of literature and the fine arts as Marie herself—a man who never had seen a theatre, a man who never had seen a theatre, a man who never had seen a picture, a man who had never so much as beheld a fashion-plate dame. But he loved Marie—nay, in his quiet, unassuming way he worshiped the girl. Yes, as he was about as good-looking as any of the boys within a horseback ride of Jacques Cartier, and as he drove a fairly good team and owned land, Marie had promised to marry Jean Coutellier, while the hobnipped gossips of the St. Emelie Valley decided that it was a fitting match.

Yes, Marie was very pretty—and so thought a stranger who approached Jacques Cartier from the mountain-side one summer afternoon.

The girl was standing under one of the old gnarled apple-trees in the orchard. Such a lovely reminded form—even though it was only covered by an oft-washed cotton dress—with the sunlight playing in gleams and flashes upon the bright brown hair and fair young face. As the stranger drew near he fully imbibed and thoroughly appreciated the beauties of the picture, for he was somewhat of an artist and keenly alive to all things beautiful. But he was so much engrossed in the pleasant center-piece of the picture that he did not see when a breeze from off the mountain strick the valley and lifted Marie's large, sunbrunned straw hat from the ground, blowing it right under the nose of his horse; nor was he prepared for the frightened plunge of the animal, who reared so suddenly as to instantly throw the equestrian prone. It was not much of a fall, but the stranger's leg was fractured, and Pierre Gambier and his daughter carried the young man into their house, where they attended him in my professional capacity.

The stranger's name was Walter Penrith, a New York man, who had been traveling through the woods and valleys of Quebec in search of health and pleasure. He was wealthy, and was to be discovered that he could not be moved from his couch for several weeks, he ordered luxuries of all kinds from the great metropolis, until the cottage house was piled to overflowing with rare books, wines, fruits, etc., while none but the finest cigars came for Monsieur Gambier's especial use.

Before long costly presents began to arrive for Marie, and—well, it was only an oft-told tale. Not only were the presents brought to her upon Marie, but Penrith himself, who was, without doubt, one of the most fascinating men I ever met, brought his powerful personal magnetism into play, and Marie Gambier soon learned to love him. Yes, it was no dream or fancy on the girl's part; she loved Walter Penrith, and loved him truly. Indeed, she loved him so well, and for himself alone, that after she had known Penrith a month she would have scorned the man just as much had he never given her another present—had he suddenly become poorer than simple Jean Coutellier, now threat so far into the background of Marie's thoughts and affections.

As for Penrith, he was a man of the world; but he unfoldedly grew to care considerably more than he should care for his pretty nurse. I say "more than he should," because it was a foregone conclusion with Walter Penrith that he would never marry any girl—no matter how good or how beautiful—who was not a lady by birth and education. Certainly a French-Canadian peasant girl, who could speak neither his language nor her own correctly, could hardly hope to become Mrs. Penrith. So he toyed and amused himself with Marie, while the girl threw her whole being into her love for him. How much he promised will never be known, but when the time came for Penrith to leave Jacques Cartier he certainly did promise Marie to return soon.

And all this time honest Jean Coutellier had never uttered one word of complaint of the girl's treatment of him. Each Sunday he drove over to the old cottage just the same as ever, only his visits were short, and most of the time was spent in discussing a pipe and local affairs with Marie's pompous old father.

Of course Jean could see how Marie was entirely engrossed in the handsome stranger from the city, and although he said very little, he watched him very closely—so closely that when, two months after the accident, the stranger took his departure, Jean met him outside the village.

"You will come back, Monsieur?"

"Yes," replied Penrith, very shortly and coolly—that is, in a few weeks.

"You will marry Marie?"

At first Walter Penrith was disposed to resent what, although asked as a question, almost sounded like a command. But as he raised his eyes to those of the stern-looking Frenchman before him he was compelled to say:

"Yes, I shall marry Marie."

"You—I pass my your honor, Monsieur," persisted Coutellier.

"My word is good, sir," replied Penrith, rather haughtily.

"Only your honor is good now, Monsieur, because it is Marie," said Coutellier, with all the stubbornness of his nature. "See, Monsieur Penrith: I, too, love petite Marie, and she was my affiance. You cause rire, and she was my affiance. You cause me to suffer, yes, yes, deliberately. I would say, stole from me her confidence, her trust, her love. For that I have nothing to say. You may have Marie; but rendered extraordinary so evident, to throw her husband over the precipice. It was no mistake or slip. It was I and Marie—I and the woman that I love—who were the victims of the struggle for several moments.

She had perceived that for one or both of the men certain death was close at hand. By interfering, she knew that she could save one of them a terrible fate; so she chose the man she loved, and that man was not her husband. As she had once given up father, home, honor, and peace of mind for the fellow Penrith, she had shown no appreciation of her sacrifice, so for his sake she became a murderess, when she, without a word, urged his horse and rode quickly away.

Not morning a woman, wary, fortune, heartbroken and almost dead, was found lying in the apple-orchard at the back of the cottage belonging to Jacques Cartier. Some of the neighbors picked her up and carried her into a cottage near by, where I attended her and tried to bring her back to life.

But, old as I am at the profession of healing, I have no cure for broken hearts, and in a week we buried poor Marie in a grass-covered grave under one of the large apple trees.

Even in her last moments the dying girl's thoughts were all of Penrith, for it was from her own lips that I learned the story of Jean Coutellier's death—told solely with the object of shielding Penrith from a scandal and a possible lawsuit.

The strength of her love was Marie Gambier's greatest weakness.

Alligators.

The alligator is a strange, unsightly object. Many of us have seen in the marshes of the warmer parts of America only, for it is not known in other countries, although it resembles the crocodile, which is found in many tropical climes. The alligator, like the crocodile, lives in swamps and marshes, and often lies in the water with its head like that the crocodile's element is the water. The back of the alligator is covered with bony plates, which are called a coat of mail, for the thick, bony covering looks very much like the coat of mail worn by jousting knights. On the under part of the body, however, it is not armed, but is covered with leather-books, slippers, and many useful articles are made.

There are a great many insects from them, which burrs well in lamps, and the flesh has been used by Indians for food.

Although they are classed with the family of crocodiles, they differ from them in the formation of their heads, which are much smaller and flatter. They live chiefly on fish, but also eat animal food, and at times are fierce, for they have been known to chase and attack men while swimming and bathing.

The alligator lays her eggs, twenty and more, over that remains in the mud, and leaves them for the heat of the sun to hatch, but keeps constant watch over them to prevent them from harm and keep them from being destroyed. The creature vary in size from three to sixteen or eighteen feet in length, and the tails are nearly if not as long as the bodies. There is great strength in the tails, and it is with them and the partly webbed feet that they propel themselves through the water, and with the tail they easily overturn a canoe or small boat.

Many are found in Florida and other parts of the South, and as they lie on the bank of a river, hidden partly by the thick moss and foliage, they look like a log or trunk of a fallen tree, so motionless are they at times.

In the colder weather they are torpid, and appear so lifeless that it seems as if they must be dead, yet when warmed by the sun they very soon regain their animation. They are very curious creatures, and their general aspect not by any means prepossessing, but on examination there is beauty in the peculiar markings of the bony armor which they wear.—Vick's Magazine.

Religion of the Roumanians.

The religion of the Roumanians is a mass of superstitions, which under the name of the Christian religion covers the entire existence. Indeed, one author says, speaking of the life of a Wallachian, "The whole life of a Wallachian is seen in devising talismans against the devil. A Roumanian uncovers his head on passing a wayside cross, but he makes an equally deep salutation to the cross than to the place to church on Sunday, but it is doubtful whether he does not regard Friday, which is dedicated to Venus, as the holier of the two. The orthodox Roumanian regards any one who burns a corpse without placing a coin in the hand as a pagan. The Roumanian churches, in contrast with the cold, bare-looking churches of the Saxons, present a most attractive appearance, for they are covered with artistic decorations, and are a mass of soft, warm coloring.

"Not a corner," says Mrs. Gerard, "but from which starts up some grinning devil, not a nook but reveals some choice-looking saint, till we feel ourselves to be surrounded by a whole pageant of celestial and diabolical beings, only distinguishable from one another by the respective fashions of their headgear, horns or halo, as the case may be. These horned devils play a very important part in every Roumanian church, where usually a large portion of the walls is given up to representations of the place of eternal punishment. The poor Roumanian peasant seems to live often as a martyr and struggling as hardly to deserve that name, seems to derive consolation from contemplating a anticipation of the day when the tables are to be turned and the hitherto despised poor shall receive an eternal crown."—New York Sun.

SACRED DANCE SEEN IN JAPAN.

Young Priestesses Conduct the Ceremony—Old, Historic Dress.

(From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.)

From Kanagawa and the upper avenue of lanterns leads the way to the Washaiya shrine, dedicated to the two gods of the Shinto religion. Here the old custom of the sacred dance is kept up, and a group of young priestesses are in waiting to repeat the measures of a dance of immemorial age. Ito gedea' eave in prehistoric times. The little priestesses are all between the ages of 9 and 17, and their gentle and harmless little thumps as the dead of apparent life. They were delighted in by the scholars, especially by the larger boys and girls, some of whom were nearly or quite grown.

Frequently, when the weather was fine, parents and neighbors would come to the school-house on these Friday evenings to witness the ceremonies. When such visits were expected, the girls would dress a little more smartly than usual, and the boys would fix themselves up at the spring, washing, combing and giving the ornamental a brilliant, popularly called a "touch," to their hair; and the conversation, of necessity, would be more elegance, was extremely amusing.—Exchange.

Paper Pencils.

London Invention states that paper pencils are the subject of a patent which promises to lead to a large industry, as it understands that the price at which the pencil is to be marketed is exceedingly low. Ordinary cedar-wood pencils are made from cedar logs sawed lengthwise, after having placed in them lead made in one of them a prepared slip of paper, with the marking material.

At first sight it seems so simple, there are a great many operations to be performed in the making of the pencil, from the large wood into strips of the right size, making the slot or groove in which the lead is to be inserted, preparing the leads of the required size, fitting the lead into the slot, then placing them by hand in the slots of the wood strips, gluing these strips together, and after the glue is set, the two pieces of glued wood have to be rounded off and polished, etc.

The idea of using paper instead of wood for pencils is not new, but an objection to pencils thus formed was the difficulty of sharpening, paper being so much softer than cedar, and without knife, the prying from the paper to the lead would be difficult, and trying to wind again the paper having to be folded round is proximity formed and hardness, and consequently the pencil is more expensive labor. These difficulties are overcome by Mr. Green's process.

The paper is first made into tubes of a size to suit the pencil, these are placed in a frame forming the lower end of a cylinder, and the cylinder is made to be used as a marking material being put in a plastic state into the body of the cylinder, by pressure is forced into the hollow centers of the paper tubes. The marking material is then in the form of a number of such tube, is hardened by gradual drying during six days at increasing temperature.

Up to this point, the paper tubes are simply filled with lead, but to transform them into meited paraffine wax, the paper becomes of such a nature that it can be cut as easily as the best cedar-wood.

Taking the Train in Europe.

In the Europe a man who is late arrive at a station five or ten minutes before the hour announced for the departure of a train you are in many cases, but the case is different in Europe. There is usually trouble and delay in getting seats, and nearly always confusion. There are here the ticket-office and the baggage-room, there is a smoking carriage to such class, furthermore, only ladies are allowed in some carriages. The guards of each train have baggage checked, that if it the line furnisher the Cantain's line. Passengers are in there it is rejected in the ordinary warm or hot form, it had better be tried in a nearly frozen as may be taken. In many favors this would be a decided advantage. Milk may be administered in a frozen state, often with positive advantage. The Sanitary Era adds, that instantaneous freezing of ice cream seems admirably some conditions where hardly any other method is practicable.

If the Sufferers from Consumption,

Scrofula, and General Debility will try Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, they will find immediate relief and a permanent cure. Dr. H. V. Mott, Brentwood, Cal., writes: "I have used Scott's Emulsion with great satisfaction in cases of Phthisis, Scrofula, and Wasting Diseases. It is very palatable."

DR. JASTROW, of the University of Wisconsin, proves that the ear is the dominant sense in the mind in many persons, and the eye in others. People are therefore one or the other of auditory or visual. Dogs are usually nose-minded.

AN AWKWARD GUEST.

The Story of the Captain Who Couldn't Keep Quiet.

Toward the end of the period of his active service, a certain captain of the marine corps of the Czar's crack French cavalry regiment was overjoyed by finding himself created an officer of the Legion of Honor. To celebrate this very happy and crowning episode in his career, he resolved to give a grand dinner, to which he invited the authorities and principal civilians of the city, as well as the whole of the considerable resident staff officers, for the colonel was not in a state of gaits unmixed enjoyment, as he found himself in somewhat of a dilemma.

There was a certain Captain Morel in the town who had formerly belonged to his regiment, and who had retired on half pay some three years before, but who apparently could not live without the regiment to which he had been formerly attached, for he always turned up whenever it happened to be stationed. This old soldier was a unique specimen, now happily extinct, of a grognard (grumbler, literally translated), and as ill-bred and ill-mannered as he was warm-hearted and well-meaning, the only excuse made for him being that he had been a brave fellow in his time. The soldiers used say of him: "That mad Mr. Captain Morel, appears to be never happy except when he is in a dance or a rage."

Now, as the colonel had intended to invite the leading ladies of the neighborhood in his invitation, he determined, after some considerable cogitation, to send for Morel to come and speak with him.

"Captain," said he, "I am to dine on Monday."

"I know it, Colonel."

"And, as I hold you in much esteem, I have sent you an invitation, but I beg of you to keep quiet."

"May I ask, Colonel, without indiscretion, why you offer me such an affront as this?"

"Mon Dieu, Captain, there is no affront in the matter, simply that refusal will come from you; but considerations which you will understand."

"All I understand is that I am not considered in the least."

"Well, then, I must explain myself more clearly. I am afraid that your very military style of conversation will clash and affront the ladies whom I expect to meet."

"A thousand thunders! May the devil's cancan double strangle me if I understand!"

"You will go on that way at table. I know that the city dames are a little

"Stiff and starch, precise and prim; better won't matter repeating the same thing, and the priests can wait on the ladies accompanied by a bore. To so the dance is simply a convenience and picturesque custom, but one should see the faces of the devout old pilgrims, who have loaded up their money for months and years for the trip, to know something of what it means to them. It is really pathetic to see their faces glowing and their eyes almost filled with tears at their satisfaction with the fine-spun idea that is so rare an event in their lives, and which crowns their summer pilgrimage to the old shrines of their faith.

FRESH FROM THE BURRS.

THE storm-king, strange to say, never holds the reins when he is driving.—Time.

JERKEN writes to his girl in the apartment house as he sends her heart.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

"I give you my word of honor," said Penrith, but there was no genuine manly ring in his words. He was conscious of the innocent of the world's worst forms of wickedness, and he knew that he was not a man of his word. As she had once given up father, home, honor, and peace of mind for the fellow Penrith, she had shown no appreciation of her sacrifice, so for his sake she became a murderess, when she, without a word, urged his horse and rode quickly away.

Not morning a woman, wary, fortune, heartbroken and almost dead, was found lying in the apple-orchard at the back of the cottage belonging to Jacques Cartier. Some of the neighbors picked her up and carried her into a cottage near by, where I attended her and tried to bring her back to life.

But, old as I am at the profession of healing, I have no cure for broken hearts, and in a week we buried poor Marie in a grass-covered grave under one of the large apple trees.

Even in her last moments the dying girl's thoughts were all of Penrith, for it was from her own lips that I learned the story of Jean Coutellier's death—told solely with the object of shielding Penrith from a scandal and a possible lawsuit.

The strength of her love was Marie Gambier's greatest weakness.

Alligators.

The alligator is a strange, unsightly object. Many of us have seen in the marshes of the warmer parts of America only, for it is not known in other countries, although it resembles the crocodile, which is found in many tropical climes. The alligator, like the crocodile, lives in swamps and marshes, and often lies in the water with its head like that the crocodile's element is the water. The back of the alligator is covered with bony plates, which are called a coat of mail, for the thick, bony covering looks very much like the coat of mail worn by jousting knights. On the under part of the body, however, it is not armed, but is covered with leather-books, slippers, and many useful articles are made.

There are a great many insects from them, which burrs well in lamps, and the flesh has been used by Indians for food.

Although they are classed with the family of crocodiles, they differ from them in the formation of their heads, which are much smaller and flatter. They live chiefly on fish, but also eat animal food, and at times are fierce, for they have been known to chase and attack men while swimming and bathing.

The alligator lays her eggs, twenty and more, over that remains in the mud, and leaves them for the heat of the sun to hatch, but keeps constant watch over them to prevent them from harm and keep them from being destroyed. The creature vary in size from three to sixteen or eighteen feet in length, and the tails are nearly if not as long as the bodies. There is great strength in the tails, and it is with them and the partly webbed feet that they propel themselves through the water, and with the tail they easily overturn a canoe or small boat.

Many are found in Florida and other parts of the South, and as they lie on the bank of a river, hidden partly by the thick moss and foliage, they look like a log or trunk of a fallen tree, so motionless are they at times.

In the colder weather they are torpid, and appear so lifeless that it seems as if they must be dead, yet when warmed by the sun they very soon regain their animation. They are very curious creatures, and their general aspect not by any means prepossessing, but on examination there is beauty in the peculiar markings of the bony armor which they wear.—Vick's Magazine.

Religion of the Roumanians.

The religion of the Roumanians is a mass of superstitions, which under the name of the Christian religion covers the entire existence. Indeed, one author says, speaking of the life of a Wallachian, "The whole life of a Wallachian is seen in devising talismans against the devil. A Roumanian uncovers his head on passing a wayside cross, but he makes an equally deep salutation to the cross than to the place to church on Sunday, but it is doubtful whether he does not regard Friday, which is dedicated to Venus, as the holier of the two. The orthodox Roumanian regards any one who burns a corpse without placing a coin in the hand as a pagan. The Roumanian churches, in contrast with the cold, bare-looking churches of the Saxons, present a most attractive appearance, for they are covered with artistic decorations, and are a mass of soft, warm coloring.

"Not a corner," says Mrs. Gerard, "but from which starts up some grinning devil, not a nook but reveals some choice-looking saint, till we feel ourselves to be surrounded by a whole pageant of celestial and diabolical beings, only distinguishable from one another by the respective fashions of their headgear, horns or halo, as the case may be. These horned devils play a very important part in every Roumanian church, where usually a large portion of the walls is given up to representations of the place of eternal punishment. The poor Roumanian peasant seems to live often as a martyr and struggling as hardly to deserve that name, seems to derive consolation from contemplating a anticipation of the day when the tables are to be turned and the hitherto despised poor shall receive an eternal crown."—New York Sun.

Coaking a Husband.

"In selecting your husband you should not be guided by a silvery appearance, as in buying mackerel, nor by the glitter in his eye, as you would salmon. Be sure and select him yourself, as tastes differ. Do not go to the market for him; the best are always brought to your door; and even then it is far better to have none unless you patiently learn how to cook him. A preserving kettle of finest potcelain is best; but if you have nothing but an earthenware piphan it will do, with care. See that the linen you wear him is nicely washed and mended, with the required number of buttons and strings nicely sewed on. The him in the kitchen by a strong silk cord called 'comfort,' as the one called duty is apt to be too weak. They are apt to fly out of the kitchen and be very crusty on the edges, since, like crabs and lobsters, you must boil them while alive. Make a clear, steady fire out of love, neatness and cheerfulness. Set him a neat table seasoned with smiles of him. If he sputters and fizzes do not be anxious; some husbands do this until they are quite done. Add a little sugar, in the form of what confectioners call kisses, but no vinegar or pepper on any account. A little spice improves them. Do not must be used with judgment. Do not stick any sharp instruments into him to see if he is tender enough. Stir him gently. You cannot fail to know when he is done, if thus treated-you will find him very digestible, agreeing nicely with you and the children, and he will keep as long as you want, unless you become careless, or set him in too cold a place. As the cook is responsible for the kind of meals we have, so I believe that the wife is responsible for the kind of a husband she has to spend her days with. If one should be a woman's heaven in this world, and if she by her continued scolding, fault-finding and gossiping husband, and secrets to the outside world, turns her heaven into a hell, who is responsible, she or the husband and mother?"—Mrs. C., in National Stockman.

Coincided with Papa.

It is related of a clergyman, who was the father of a lovely young and beautiful daughter, that one day, while preaching his Sunday sermon, he suddenly called away from his desk on a mission of mercy. So imperative was the summons that he left unfinished this sentence:

"I never see a young man of splendid physique and the promise of a glorious manhood almost realized but my heart is filled with rapture and delight."

His daughter, happening in the study, saw the sermon and read the words. Sitting down, she wrote underneath:

"Them's my sentiments, pa, exactly."—St. Paul Globe.

TRUSTWORTHY INFORMATION CONCERNING SUBJECTS OF INTEREST

Model Sides of Bacon, as Rated by the Most Important English Markets—The Best Quality of Pigs for Bacon Curing Purposes.

In a recent issue of American Cultivator attention is called to the information here reproduced, a glance at which gives an idea of those parts of the pig which are of the highest value on the English bacon markets. It also gives a clear idea of the best quality of pigs for bacon curing purposes for the British trade.

MODEL SIDES OF BACON.

The following are the current prices per pound in England for the parts as numbered in the illustration. To reduce the figures to American currency let each penny be called the equivalent of 2 cents:

1. Streaky quarter	11d.
2. Rib quarter	11d.
3. Middle quarter	6½d.
4. Ham quarter	8½d.
5. End of neck	7½d.
6. Middle of neck	8½d.
7. Thick back and sides	10d.
8. Prime back and ribs	11d.
9. Loin	10d.
10. Fillet	10d.
11. Shoulder	6d.
12. Prime streaky	11d.
13. Thin streaky	8½d.
14. Middle of gammon	8½d.
15. Knuckle of gammon	7d.
16. Fore end	6d.

An English writer, in explaining the illustration, says:

For brevity's sake we will take the left hand side of bacon, this being divided into five parts, and it will be observed that the most valuable parts are the streaky and the rib quarters, numbered 1 and 2, and that the middle quarter and ham quarters, Nos. 3 and 4, are of less value, while No. 17, the shoulder or fore end, is worth only six pence per pound, or only little more than half the value of the second part of the pig, and only a little more than two-thirds of the value of the third portion, the loin and ham, or, as the latter is called in the trade, the gammon. If to this be added the fact that the heads of the pigs are valued at from one pence to two pence per pound, one can understand why the bacon curer asks for pigs with heads weighing as little as possible, also light in the shoulders, long and deep in the flitch, wide in the loin and thick in the flank, with hams square and deep, and not strung in the hock, but possessing a good coat of hair. Given such a pig properly fattened, our bacon curers can produce at a profit sides of which bacon will defy competition with the whole world.

Norton's Virginia Grape.

Numbered with wine grapes, is Norton's Virginia, introduced to cultivation by Dr. D. N. Norton, of Richmond, Va. For several years but little attention was paid to this grape, Catawba being the leading variety for wine making. It was not until some Missouri wine growers had discovered its real value as a wine grape that the Norton was planted extensively in nearly all the wine growing sections of this country where the season is long enough for its thorough ripening.

The Cythiana, which has been called the twin sister of the Norton, closely resemble the latter, although a marked difference exists between them in some points. Mr. E. Dubois, a Florida horticulturist, in Florida Fruit Grower, says: The juice of the Norton, when fermented on the husk, makes here a dark red wine of much body and color and of pleasant bouquet, without that caffeine flavor existing in the Norton when from Ohio and Missouri. The Cythiana makes a dark darker wine with at least as much body. The Cythiana wine properly fermented compares favorably with fine imported Burgundy, and if turned into port wine of the European grapes cultivated in California and used for that purpose can compare with it. The Norton and Cythiana grapes fermented together make a first class claret.

NORTON'S VIRGINIA.

The Norton wine, owing to its high percentage of tannin, possesses great medicinal properties and is particularly valuable for dysentery and diseases of the bowels. Both grapes are now recognized by all experienced grape growers as the most trustworthy and the best wine grapes in America, and will add that they are the most valuable grapes for Florida. They will thrive in almost any kind of soil, and while in a hot house proof they will bear immense crops, on a hillside, not so steep, the yield will be lighter, but the quality of the fruit much superior, imparting its superiority to the wine.

The president of the Ontario Fruit Growers' association believes that the only secret in storing apples is to have a cellar that is sufficiently dry and cool. Some growers of late years affirm that apples keep best in a cold but moist cellar.

IMPORTANT FACTS ABOUT SOILS.

Information That Will Guide to the Selection of a Farm.

The soil is a compound substance of mineral vegetable and animal particles that form the upper stratum of the earth's surface. In selecting the site for a farm there are many things to be considered in addition to the character of the soil. Among these is the important one of location with regard to market facilities, health, good neighborhood and prospective rise in value. Soils admit of many classifications, arising from their different constituents. Rocks are the original basis of soils, having by the long continued agency of the forces of nature, by air, moisture, frost and heat, been resolved into minute particles, taking on the form of earth. Soils are called stony, gravelly, clayey, peaty, etc., according as the substances named constitute a leading feature in the compound. A loam is a soil chiefly composed of silicious sand, clay and other mineral substances along with a large percentage of decayed vegetable and animal matter, to which it principally owes its fertility. The pulverulent known substance formed by the action of air on solid animal or vegetable matter, is called humus, and is a valuable constituent of soils. It renders stiff soils friable, absorbs and retains moisture, and in a large degree supplies the mineral elements of decayed matter in soluble forms for plant growth.

The capacity of a sandy loam for retaining moisture depends on the amount of decayed vegetable matter which it contains and without which it will be infertile. Sandy and clay soils require different treatment. Each will be benefited by an admixture with the other, but the tables of pure sand and clay alone will be sterile unless supplied with decomposed vegetable matter. Under draining is highly beneficial to clay soils. A sandy loam is easily worked and is among the most desirable of all the soils.

Ivy Poisoning.

A correspondent in jennings in Rural Culture made the following communication:

For the benefit of all who may come in contact with poison ivy, poison sumac, rattlesnakes and other poisonous reptiles and insects, I wish to inform them that lobelia infiata has been in my practice (botanic or physio-medical) a successful remedy. I think I have saved very many lives with it. My brother, A. Tyrrell, M. D., and I, who have been in the practice of medicine over fifty years, were poisoned very badly every summer when we were young at work on the farm. We suffered torments for what we thought was nettles. When scratching and rubbing was insufferable we rubbed on fast and lags with many kinds of herbs in trying to stop the itching and burning, but with very little relief until we used green lobelia herbs, which relieved our sufferings every time after when we got poisoned. I thought then that the knowledge we had gained of lobelia was worth $50 to us as antidote for ivy poison.

A Substantial Smoke House.

In the annexed cut is represented a substantial smoke house advised and described by Ohio Farmer as well suited for a large farm.

A SMOKE HOUSE.

The house is 6 by 7 feet square. The bottom is excavated the size of the building, 3 feet deep, filled in with small stones, and on this a brick floor, well cemented, is laid. This insures dryness. The walls are of brick, 8 inches thick and 7 feet high, with a small door on one side, lined on the inside with sheet iron or zinc. Hooks should be firmly attached to the joists, on which to hang the hams and shoulders. This style of smoke house is not very expensive, is safe from fire, and when not in use for smoking meat is an excellent receptacle for ashes, which ought never to be kept in contact with wood, on account of the danger from spontaneous combustion.

Personified Plants.

Plants are thus personified by The Western Christian Advocate: The pepper and mustard represent a class known as "sharp" people; the spice trees, others, and tobacco and barley, saloonkeepers. The violet and lily are the preachers of humility, purity and righteousness. The tea plant and catnip are the old ladies of the village, without whom society would be incomplete. The beet and sugar cane are confectioners; roses and pinks, perfumers; wheat and corn, provision dealers; and the cocoanut palm furnishes as many articles as the country store. The little wayside plants by stagnant pools are scavengers. Some plants prefer water and others the Baptists; some run all over—they are the Methodists; some stand up straight and orderly—they are the Presbyterians; others cling to ancient walls and churches—they are the Episcopalians and Catholics. There are plants that live alone, like hermits; others lead a nomadic life, wandering all over everything.

Stories That Are Told.

Trees planted around a house at a distance of twenty feet or more are now talked of as better lightning protectors than rods.

Whoever would attempt to keep a permanent meadow by top dressing should select other grasses than timothy for his meadow, unless he scatters seed freely with the manure applied, says A. W. Cheever.

It is a mistake, says F. D. Curtis, to mix chilled milk with fresh, as the latter will be injured by the former.

An experienced poultry man maintains that fowls live, thrive and pay about as well in confinement (when properly managed and cared for) as when running at large. But they will never bear crowding.

Readers having silk cocoons of the crop of 1888 for sale should apply to the "commissioner of agriculture, Washington, D. C., and obtain a circular relating to terms of purchase.

Recent reports are to the effect that there will be barely half a crop of apples in England and Scotland.

Reports from the northwest show an average yield of eighteen bushels of wheat to the acre in northern Minnesota and fifteen bushels to the acre in Dakota.

Rich and Poor,

Prince and Pauper, the Millionaire and Day Laborer, in their common use of this remedy, attest the world-wide reputation of Ayer's Pills. Leading physicians recommend these pills for Stomach and Liver Troubles, Costiveness, Biliousness, and Sick Headache; also, for Rheumatism, Jaundice, and Neuralgia. They are sugar-coated; contain no calomel; are prompt, but mild, in operation; and, therefore, the very best medicine for Family Use, as well as for Travelers and Tourists.

"I have derived great relief from Ayer's Pills. Five years ago I was taken so ill with that I was unable to do any work. I took Ayer's Pills, and in a few days felt much cured. Since that time I am never without a box of these pills."—Peter Christensen, Sherwood, Oregon.

"Ayer's Pills have been in use in my family upwards of twenty years and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of spleen, from which I suffered many years, they afforded greater relief than any other medicine I ever tried."—T. Fleming Stone, Springs, Texas.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for a number of years, and have never found anything so much to the purpose for giving me an appetite and imparting a healthy tone to the digestive organs as they do. They are the best medicine I know of."—R. D. Jackson, Wilmington, Del.

"Two boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me of severe from which I was long a sufferer."—Emma Keyes, Hubbardston, Mass.

Headache,

"Whenever I am troubled with constipation, or suffer from loss of appetite, Ayer's Pills set me right again."—A. J. Kiser, Lancaster, Ky.

"Ayer's Pills are in general demand among our customers. Our sales of them exceed those of all other pills combined. We have never known them fail to give entire satisfaction."—Wright & Hannelly, San Diego, Texas.

BURIED TO DEATH.

Two Persons Instantly Killed and Others Injured by a Railroad Accident.

A fatal accident occurred on the Denver & Rio Grande track at a little station named Rusted, fifteen miles north of Colorado Springs, Col., by which two men were killed and several fatally injured. The Salt Lake express was thundering down the "divide" at a terrific speed, when, on turning a curve one mile south of Rusted, the engineer was horrified to see the Rock Island express dashing toward him less than three hundred feet away. The engineers and firemen of both trains jumped, and a moment afterward the engines came together with a thundering crash, telescoping the cars of both trains and rendering them a mass of broken timber and iron. The upsetting of the stove in the Rio Grande baggage-car set fire to the train, and before the flames could be extinguished three cars were consumed. Fortunately no one was imprisoned in them, and but two men, both belonging to the crew, were killed. W. H. Phillipps, express messenger, and J. H. Flinn, both of the Rock Island, were killed. Martin Nunez, engineer of the Rio Grande, had his skull fractured, and will die. Joseph Barry, engineer of the Rock Island, was badly hurt, and Harry Smith, fireman on the Rio Grande, was fatally injured. Several others were injured, but not seriously.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Estimate of Cost for 1890 as Submitted by the Postmaster General.

The Postmaster General has submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury his estimates for appropriations for the postal service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890. They aggregate $66,812,075, as against $60,233, the appropriation for the present fiscal year. In the item of mail-bags and mail-bag catchers, the estimates are $50,000 less than the appropriation for the present year, and the sum for locks and keys is $10,000 less than for the present year. These reductions, it is said, are occasioned by the systematic repair of all defective pouches and bags and by the bringing into use of locks which have accumulated in the various postoffices throughout the country. The revenues of the department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, are estimated at $62,508,088, which is an increase of $9,813,862 over the revenues for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, and an increase of $4,544,724 over the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889. This will leave an apparent deficiency for the year ending June 30, 1890, of $4,603,414.

COLLISION ON THE ROCK ISLAND.

The Denver West-Bound Express Runs into a Freight Train.

A head-end collision that will cost the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company from $80,000 to $100,000 occurred thirty miles east of Davenport, Iowa, between the towns of Atkinson and Annawan. The Denver Vestibuled Express going west, and a freight train, the latter running out of its time, came together. The engineers of the two locomotives saw each other's headlights in time to jump and save themselves, after reducing speed. The locomotives were demolished. A tramp who was stealing a ride on the front end of an express car was killed. One lady was knocked senseless by being hit by the water cooler, and several others were badly shaken but not injured. Two cars of the freight train, loaded with hogs, were wrecked, and some sixty of the animals killed.

DOUBLE MURDER AND SUICIDE.

A Mother Kills Her Two Children, and Then Cuts Her Own Throat.

A terrible triple tragedy occurred in the family of William Truitt, who lives in Taney County, Missouri, about sixteen miles north of Ozark. Truitt and his son left home the other day to assist a house-raising in the neighborhood. When they returned in the evening they discovered the bodies of two children, Ellen, aged 13, and Maggie, aged 11, lying blood and wounded on the floor. A hatchet was beside them. Maggie was dead and the other was mortally wounded. A trail of blood led from the house into the woods, where a quarter of a mile away the mother was found dead with her throat cut. Insanity is ascribed as the cause of the work.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH CHINA.

Probability That the Pending Treaty Will Be Ratified.

A Washington dispatch says: "There is high official authority for the statement that the restriction treaty between this country and China, which was pending at the time the exclusion bill was passed, may yet be ratified. This at least is what the Chinese foreign Office is endeavoring to accomplish through the slow medium of diplomatic correspondence."

He Violated the Law.

J. Tallman Rudd, manager of Wilkinson & Wolfe's elevators at Buffalo, N. Y., was fined $250 for violating the new law against charging more than ⅞ of a cent for elevating grain.

Returns from Florida.

The official vote of Florida is as follows: Cleveland, 39,561; Harrison, 36,659; Fisk, 403. Cleveland's plurality, 2,902.

Lord Salisbury's Future.

Henry Labouchere, who is in London, cables to the New York World that it is rumored that Lord Salisbury has decided to send Lord Sackville to Vienna as a successor to Sir Augustus Paget, whose term of office expires next January. Mr. Labouchere, however, doubts whether this will be done.

Striking Switchmen.

Three-fourths of the switchmen at Indianapolis, Ind., struck the other night, the superintendents having refused to concede their demands. Three engineers on the belt line were compelled to draw the fires from their engines, and a fourth man who refused, was beaten and seriously wounded.

DESTITUTION AND DEATH.

Without the Necessaries of Life Several Members of a Family Die.

Five weeks ago the family of Hans Holter went to Spokane Falls, Wash. Ter., from Lincoln County, Minn., and moved into a small building in Shadtown. The family was poor, and Mr. Holter went to Hope, Idaho, where he hoped to secure work to provide means for the support of his wife and seven children. Soon after his departure the mother and nearly all the children were taken down with pneumonia, brought on by exposure and lack of the necessaries of life. The Relief Committee found the mother and her seven children in a single room, 12x14 feet in size, with just enough necessities to keep body and soul together. The mother and all the children were sick, and had it not been for the kindness of the neighbors, almost as needy as themselves, must have perished from want of care. Word came at once began the work of rendering the condition of the sufferers as comfortable as possible. But the ravages of disease and want had partly performed the terrible work of death, and Hilda, a baby girl 2 months of age; Louise, a girl of 8 years; Christian, a 10-year-old boy; and Inga, a 2-year-old girl, died. The mother and surviving children were removed to the hospital. Several other families in the same neighborhood are as much in need of the assistance as the one mentioned.

FOURTEEN, IS A WINNER.

He Is Re-elected General Master Workman of the Knights.

An Indianapolis (Ind.) special says that the election of officers of the Knights of Labor resulted as follows:

Terence V. Powderly, of Scranton, Pa., nominated T. V. Powderly for re-election as General Master Workman. Nominated by Jas. R. Sovereign, of Iowa, nominated Max Hayes, of New Jersey, and as an despite named Birdi, of Ohio. The vote resulted as follows: Powderly 110, Hayes, 47, Birdi, 1. For General Worthy Foreman, nominated by Jas. R. Sovereign, of Iowa, nominated Thos. D. Lynch, of New Jersey, nomination for General Secretary, Chas. Litchman for General Secretary, Chas. Litchman for General Secretary, Chas. Litchman

☞ A full assortment of clocks received this week at C. R. Bellinger's. Don't go out of town for jewelry or silverware, without first examining my stock and making your wants known. Gold and silver watches and chains, silverware, rings, pins, charms, etc., for everybody. Don't fail to examine.

The Pontiac Bill Poster of a recent date has the following concerning the death of Mrs. Sarah Hilton, mother of O. D. Hilton of Inwood: The funeral of Mrs. Sarah H. Hilton occurred on Wednesday, October 31st, 1888, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. M. F. Leroy, of this city. She died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. R. Brown of Ypsilanti, Mich. Oct. 29. Had she lived until the eleventh of November, she would have been 88 years of age. She was the last of a family of eleven children, there being ten daughters and one son. Her father, A. Morrill, was a member of of the legislature of Vermont for over twenty-one years; she was also a cousin of the present Senator Morrill. In the spring of 1836, she was married to Samuel Hilton. In the same year they moved to Michigan, settling in Oakland township, where they lived ten years. From here they moved to Avon township, where they lived at the time of her husband's death, which occurred in 1869. Since which she has spent the time with her children, having made the journey to Mrs. Brown's five years ago, accompanied by a daughter, a grand daughter, and a great grand daughter. She leaves two daughters, and two sons, Mrs. M. F. LeRoy, of Pontiac, Mrs. L. R. Brown of Ypsilanti, O. D. Hilton, of Charlevoix, and J. O. Hilton, of St. Louis, and 11 grand children, 2 great grand children, all of this state. She united with the Baptist church at Oakland when she first came to Michigan, and was always an earnest active christian."

The Charlevoix Savings Bank.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of this institution last Friday the following officers were elected:

President—E. H. Green.
Vice president—A. Buttars.
Cashier—F. A. Smith.
Directors—E. H. Green, A. Buttars, A. Fox, F. W. Mayne, L. Lewis, J. L. Hurd, and F. A. Smith.

The stockholders are Henry Bennett Estate, Abbie T. Bennett, Amos Fox, A. Buttars, J. L. Hurd, F. W. Mayne, Harry Nicholls, F. E. Lewis, F. A. Smith, E. H. Green, and Dr. L. Lewis of Charlevoix; John Staveland of Milwaukee; Geo. A. Gage of Chicago; and Geo. H. Hill of Cincinnati.

It will be noticed that O. D. Wood, M. H. Wood, and John Nichols are not included, their stock having been taken by others. It is expected to increase the paid-up capital to $50,000 in the near future, a large portion of the additional capital being already pledged.

They are about to occupy a new office adjoining the postoffice, which when completed, will be the finest office in Charlevoix. The building is 20 feet front on Bridge street, and the business office will be 20x30, with directors' room in rear. The front of the building is of plate and colored glass, and the inside finish will be of ash. Bankers journal for one year. In spring the offices will be supplied with a complete outfit of new bank furniture, to be made by one of the best furniture houses in Grand Rapids. A new safe has been purchased of the Chicago Safe and Lock Co., weight 8,700 pounds with a latest improved double time lock, and warranted fire and burglar proof.

The bank will go into the business of the new year with excellent prospects.

Take Notice.

The mill known as the John A. Cooper mill is being overhauled and is going to run all winter. Parties wishing sawing done, or lumber for building purposes, will find it to their advantage to call upon us.

A MIDNIGHT PROWLER.

Bloody Struggle at A. T. Washburn & Co's Store.—The Assailant at Large.

From the Sentinel.

Shortly after midnight Saturday night, Clinton Whitmoyer, in the employ of A. T. Washburn & Co.'s dry goods and carpet store, of this place, and asleep on the first floor was awakened by strange sounds, which continued until he was convinced that some one was in the store. His first thought was "they are after the silver holiday novelties in the front windows or the jewelry," of which they have an enormous stock. He at once looked for a weapon of defense. Not finding an iron bootjack which was his first choice, he thought of a hatchet near the stove which he found. With this weapon, prepared to defend his life and his trust, he saw a dark object in the room, emerging from behind the Indian basket storage, and sent the hatchet with all his strength, hoping to break his assailant's legs.

He was sure, for with a groan the object disappeared among the baskets and could be heard creeping through under them until he reached the hol and took refuge underneath.

Being in the dark Clinton could do nothing until daylight. Thus he stood guard over his prisoner until, hearing the watchman outside, he went to the front to call him, and while there the prisoner escaped through the lower back door. Of course Clinton was suitably rewarded for his work by the firm, who are still on the lookout for the miscreant.

By the looks of the blood on the floor and counters the bankers, it will not be a hard matter to find him.

The Railroad Brakeman's Slang.

The brakeman gives the preliminaries to the "society" of dispatchers' lobbies and other lounging places which he frequents. He originates whatever slang may be deemed necessary to give spice to the talk of the caboose and round house. He calls a gravel train a "dust express," refers to the pump for compressing air for the power brakes as a "wind jammer." The fireman's precise labors are lightened by being poetically mentioned as the handling of black diamonds, and the mortification of being called into the superintendent's office to explain some dereliction of duty is disguised by referring to the episode as "dancing on the carpet."—B. B. Adams, Jr., in Scribner's Magazine.

Another new house in town; it is being built by Hamen Cramer and is a credit to the owner.

Mrs. Chas. Campbell started for Indiana Monday, where she will visit a few weeks.

Rev. A. VanAuken has been with us a few weeks looking after the interests of the new church, and has made many warm friends who will regret to have him leave us.

While Hiram Power was standing in the sawmill the other day, a piece flew from the saw and cut a gash on one side of his head.

F. H. Skow will start for Europe next week to visit his relatives.

Jeff. Bears has come home to spend the winter.

Mr. Fulton has moved his family into Mr. Skow's house that he may be nearer his work.

Chas. S. Campbell after spending two summers here has decided that this is just the place for him to locate and he has purchased the property known as the Orr lot (160 acres), also some from the railroad company. He will spend the winter here. [That's business; its the kind of talk we like to hear.—ED. JOURNAL.]

Tricks of Female Smugglers.

"Yes," the inspector said, "I do know something of smugglers' tricks—especially female smugglers, who, I must say, carry on their nefarious business with the most charming effrontery. Of course, there are smugglers of both sexes, but for cunning, boldness and determination the women cannot be approached. Do you know that women are born cheats? Oh, well, I mean in this direction. A woman's dress affords her more facilities for hiding small but costly articles, and it is far less easy to detect them than men, and, as the elder Weller would say, almost impossible to 'circumvent.' It takes an experienced searcher to say whether a woman has got anything concealed about her person, and, as we cannot search everybody, some of the clever ones manage to get through without detection."—Brooklyn Eagle.

How Guinea Indians Count.

The Indians of Guiana have a curious system of numeration. They count by the hand and its four fingers, thus, when they reach five, instead of saying so, they call it a hand, six is therefore "a hand and first finger," seven "a hand and second finger," ten is "two hands," but twenty, instead of being "four hands," is a "man." Forty is "two men," and thus they go on by twenties.

MASTER AND MAN.

BY CHARLES A. PRATT.

Within a stately mansion on the Hudson's bank
Stood two men in earnest counsel—men of two
Was'ter, proof, and worth, with a lofty claim
The other poor and humble—a mortal's nothing
Here is a man, a man of wealth, a man of
Here is a man, a man of wealth, a man of
Here is a man, a man of wealth, a man of

FARM AND GARDEN.

TIMELY TOPICS CONSIDERED IN A PLAIN, PRACTICAL MANNER.

Profitable Varieties of Turkeys—A Few Hints in Regard to Putting the National Bird into a Plump and Juicy Condition for the Holiday Dinner.

Turkeys have the name of being delicate and hard to rear, and in consequence are often not kept when it might be to advantage. Undoubtedly there is something in the objection urged, and turkeys cannot be grown satisfactorily on damp soil but with proper surroundings they are raised with marked profit and satisfaction.

NARRAGANSETT TURKEYS.

Just now turkeys are important birds; attention is naturally drawn to them, and many who have never kept them begin to consider the question of doing so.

Varieties are the first point to be thought of. Among those the Narragansetts, represented in the cut, are classed as the most domestic. Favor is claimed for them as strong and hardy stock, the young turkeys being mostly reared and not subject to as large a percentage of loss in the early stages of raising as many breeds. They are commonly described as gray in color.

The Bronze are also a favorite kind, being said to grow more rapidly, fatten more quickly and weigh more than any others.

Turkeys are fully grown at from three to four years, but the young birds begin to lay earlier in the season and lay more eggs than the old ones, besides being less savage.

As the time is drawing near when our national bird will be in demand for purposes of family festivities and thanksgiving, it will soon be in order for farmers to put the fowls to be used or sold for this purpose into a proper condition. No matter whether at present fat or lean, turkeys ought to be confined for a few days previous to killing in limited quarters and receive plenty of good, wholesome food and pure water, and not be left to forage for themselves on whatever they can find, whether clean or unclean.

The effect of such a change of diet for a few days, or weeks if a longer time is required to put on the right amount of flesh and fat, will be juicy and well flavored birds fit for such a feast. To be of the best the fowls must be young, for no amount of care or feeding will make tough old specimens suitable for such an occasion. A mixture of meal and oats, with boiled potatoes, in which should be put a little powdered charcoal, if allerated with corn and scraps from the table will form a good ration and produce the best quality of meat. The greater the variety of food the better, so long as it is clean and wholesome and relished by the birds.

Important Facts About Chrysanthemums.

It is a fact not generally known that twice as many chrysanthemums are being grown this year as last. According to American Gardener not less than a million of plants were sold by the florists of America last spring; and as to varieties, such superb kinds are added each year and in such numbers that it seems impossible to find room for more, yet improvement goes on, and as long as it does, why then there is room. The new varieties which have been on probation and are to be sent this season for the first time will astonish even enthusiasts. There are new forms, new colors, better growers, earlier and later flowering varieties.

NEW CHRYSANTHEMUM, MME. DREXEL.

Among specimens represented in the journal already referred to is the very handsome one, Mme. Drexel, which is shown in the cut.

In reference to the chrysanthemum of the future, a correspondent of The Garden says that those who are growing seedlings and selecting varieties to introduce, should also especially aim at (1) Brilliancy of color; delicate shadings of color being quite desirable if clear and well defined. (2) Full and regular flowers, well imbricated. Odd and grotesque forms are pleasing as novelties; but, unless possessing other elements of decided beauty, we soon tire of them, and the market is now well supplied. (3) Have no regard for the limit of size. (4) Very late and early varieties. Especially late ones are called for. Perhaps we cannot get very early varieties that will be healthy and bloom well. (5) Hardiness. Among our fine new varieties there are some which can be wintered in the open ground with little or no protection and others are pretty sure to winter kill. The flowers of some stand much more cold than others. We want those that will not only survive our ordinary winters, but such as will hold their flowers intact after light frosts at least, and florists should, in describing them, state if hardy or tender.

Examining a School Report.

Sold Pushaw as bad was very clever, but enormously silent. One day as M. de Lemays was fishing with this pedant he said to him: "Since you take an interest in my son, here are his reports. I don't look at them. I did not know how to read at 40, and I even read very badly now. But I look at the last column, which marks his weight in the previous week and in the current one, with the difference. If it is greater, I have him promoted; if less, I have him arrested."—The Spectator.

FALL PLOWING.

Cases Where It Is Advantageous—Methods Practiced by Progressive Farmers.

Every season the old question concerning the advisability of free plowing is agitated. Some argue that there is little to be gained by the practice, the argument being that a growing crop like grass or clover protects the surface from loss of fertility by wind and rain in winter and spring, and that unless the land is again plowed in spring, involving additional labor, and it turning up of sods which should be in pit that, the land is in too heavy condition after being beaten down by winter rain and melting snows for the best results to the growing crop.

The more rational method, says Massachusetts Plowman, seems to be to plow sod land in spring, using a plow that will turn the sod flat. Then by the use of the disk harrow to cut up the surface to the depth of three or four inches, then to spread the manure or fertilizer with one of the patent manure spreaders, or by hand, and to work it into the land by a smoothing harrow that will not tear up the sod nor gather the manure into bunches. The land may then be planted either to potatoes or corn and the use of the smoothing harrow continued every five or six days until the crop is eight or ten inches high, after which a few good horse hoeings will keep the crop quite clean without the use of the hand hoe.

There are cases, however, continues the authority quoted, when fall plowing is advantageous. Where land is to be put in order for a crop of early cabbage or for onions it is not an easy matter to work in enough manure in spring and to get it incorporated with the soil thoroughly enough to grow a first class early crop. In fact there are many other early vegetable crops that need similar management, and for this reason it is the custom of our best market gardeners to plow and work under all the manure they can easily handle in the fall. The fall is the time for free use of manure, for the nitrogenous matter from the manure into the subsoil is probably considerable, but it is tolerated by the more perfect diffusion of the portion that is not washed, and land is thus put in prime order for any early garden crops.

Simple Contrivance for Apple Packers.

Attention is called in Country Gentleman to a simple contrivance in use among packers for housing up apples, which is shown in the cut.

CONTRIVANCE FOR BARRELING APPLES.

This contrivance consists of a plank, a, on which the barrel stands, into one end of which is dovetailed an upright piece of plank, b, a little higher than the top of the barrel. A slot, c, is cut in its upper end, and a pin runs across to receive the end of the lever, d, which may be six or eight feet long. A round board is used as a follower, to be placed upon the head, and across this board is placed a cylindrical piece of wood about three inches in diameter (and flat on the lower side), on which the lever is placed. A moderate pressure at the end of the lever, and a little practice in its use, will enable the operator to bring the head to its position with great ease, precision and accuracy.

Condition of Leading Crops.

An official report from the department at Washington shows that the condition of the present corn crop has been equaled only three times in ten years. The present average condition is 92. There has been a little reduction from frost in northern New England, New York and Michigan. There has been no decline in the northwest, and the states of the great corn surplus states remains as on the 1st of September. Bad weather in the south has had a slight effect in reducing condition. The indications favor a result ranging about twenty-six bushels to the acre, making a full average. The condition of buckwheat has declined heavily from 93.7 last month to 79.1, mainly from the effects of frosts. In New York the decline was from 92 to 75, Pennsylvania from 66 to 62, Michigan from 85 to 77. The average condition of the potato crop is about 87, a decline of less than 4 points. Tobacco has fully maintained the condition of last month, averaging for all kinds 88.3. The general average for winter wheat is twelve bushels an acre, and for spring wheat slightly over ten bushels.

How to Keep Cider Sweet.

The best method of preventing fermentation in early made cider, says Popular Gardening, is by heating to 175 degs. Fahrenheit and placing in an air tight package and sealing up while hot, following the usual method of canning fruit. Cider put up by this process I have kept through the second summer as sweet as when it ran from the press. The objection to this method is that it changes to some extent the flavor of the cider, and when opened for use it ferments just as does canned fruit. A friend of preserving late made cider is to add some antiseptic advertised in the journals, which has as its active ingredient either sulphur or salicylic acid. The latter being the most used, one ounce of the acid to thirty-two gallons of cider being the rule.

Agricultural Notes.

The bean crop has been materially injured in many sections by unseasonable weather.

Puyallup Valley, the center of the hop industry of Washington Territory, has recently completed the harvesting of an enormous hop crop. The climate and soil of this territory is admirably adapted to hop culture, being exempt from the pests and diseases that usually appear elsewhere.

The Texas fall crop of wool, according to the Texas Live Stock Journal, is unusually light, and although free from dirt is filled with burrs which causes a depreciation in price.

The Texas cotton crop, according to The Florida Dispatch, will be about 150,000 bales.

American exports of apples are in excess of those of last year.

Nero as an Orator.

Nero, the Roman emperor, is, perhaps, known by his unfortunate performance on the lyre during the burning of his capital, although this legendary episode is not mentioned by such historians as Tacitus. M. Holleaux, formerly of the French school of Athens, who is making excavations "in Delphiennes" in Boeotia for the French government has found a stone in the sanctuary of Apollo Ptoios, or the "Apollo of the Infernal Regions," which presents the Roman tyrant in another light.

The stone has engraved upon it what M. Holleaux calls "a genuine speech of Nero's," that is to say, one which was not composed for him, but uttered probably on tempore when giving liberty to the Greeks. Nero plumed himself, of course, on his versatility, and believed that he was an "all round" genius, able to compose, to make speeches, to act and to sing. The discovery of M. Holleaux may, perhaps, prove that the tyrant was a real artist in words at least, for, according to the learned excavator, the fragments of oratory found on the stone were naturally graceful and rhythmical, and phaleic Greek.—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this simple discovery has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. A 20-page treatise on these diseases (it makes useless this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet containing this new treatment sent free by receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 19eow

Disruption of Vital Energy.

Truly did Emerson denominate disruption as the greatest evil in life. He did not mean disruption in the narrow and common sense of excess of drinking. He meant disruption of all sorts—the dissipation of vital energy in the pursuit of trivial objects, social dissipation, waste of time, waste of money, waste in general. Social dissipation is one of the most harmful forms of disruption, because it is so insidious, apparently so innocent. We are commanded to love our neighbors, but we are not commanded to call on them two or three times a week. The amount of time consumed in superfluous and purposeless social intercourse in this world is something positively appalling.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Epoch.

The transition from long lingering and painful sickness to robust health marks an epoch in the life of the individual. Such a remarkable event is treasured in the memory and the sufferer whose long lost health has been at last gratefully blessed. Hence it is that so much is said in praise of Electric Bitters. In many feet they save their restoration to health, to the use of the great alterative and tonic. If you are troubled with any disease of kidneys, liver or stomach, colic or short standing, you will surely find relief by use of Electric Bitters. Sold at 50c. and $1 per bottle at F. G. Hinsch & Co.'s drug store. 3

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at F. G. Hinsch and Co.'s drug store as their driving away so many of the cares of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it free at any time by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted. 3

Writing with a Quill.

Nearly everybody in England writes with a quill. You find them put for public use in courts, in banks, in telegraph offices and postoffices—in fact, everywhere where people must write. If a man prefers to use a pen or a pencil he must carry it with him.—The Argonaut.

Best of All

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No other preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that settled on me like cold or was exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hopkins, Inspector of Public Roads, Farmer Torre Bombe, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will remove the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"For years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until I was well and strong. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in the chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first use of this medicine, and after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

Uncovering the head as a mark of respect dates from the time of the unarmored knights when gentlemen wore their with helmet down and raised the visor when among ladies. In many of the European countries a gentleman salutes every lady he meets without respect to acquaintance—ship while with us a lady is not considered to feel insulted if a stranger bows. We confess that we like the European plan. It is anything but pleasant to meet a lady just passed, and, being uncertain as to who it may be, bow to a stranger or omit bowing to an acquaintance. The first may bring you reputation as a cold-hearted masher, the second may cause you to be thought wanting in the manners of a gentleman. Besides as it is simply a universal token of respect to womankind why is not a stranger as much entitled to it as an acquaintance? In truth the fact of acquaintance" for not materially elevate the young lady in the estimation of any one but yourself.—Antrim County Journal.

Idaho Streams That Vanish.

One of the peculiar features of Idaho scenery is the frequent occurrence of dark rocky chasms and channels of dry beds which streams and rivers plunge and are apparently forever lost. These fissures are supposed to be old lava beds. The outside of the molten mass cooled and formed a roof, the fiery stream below became calmer and flowing an empty channel. A break in this roof having occurred, an opening was formed into which the river or stream now disappears, to reappear in a mysterious lake, basin or gorge on some distant mountain or plain. On the bank of the Snake river one of these streams reappears, gushing from a high cliff in a volume of the waters below.—Scientific American.

The D. C. & E. R. R.

Although the building of the D. C. & E. Railroad is about as certain as anything can be which has not already taken place, still there are a class of people who are credulous about anything they do not actually see with their own eyes. But those persons who best know what is being done, and who best understand the necessary delays, and the vast preliminary work to be done before a newly organized railroad company can arrive at a point where the actual work of construction can begin, have no hesitation in their emphatic declarations that the road will be built within a few months. There have been numerous causes, out of the ordinary line, for delay, which were unavoidable. It has come to be an axiom that it takes money to build railroads. The most the D., C. & E. company ever expected to do was to make the necessary surveys and secure the right of way. The next and only remaining thing to be done was to find some company that would build and operate the road. This has now been accomplished. There is no question but grading would have been commenced before this time, had not the attention of Mr. Barnum, president of the road, been taken up with election matters, the harrassing committee work of the election having been followed by a serious illness of several weeks. Mr. Barnum has now recovered his health, and will be in Chicago within a few days, where the directors of the road expect to meet him. Mr. Cherrie, vice president of the road, in a private letter to a resident of Kalkaska, this week, stated that it was understood that work would commence soon.—Kalkaskian.

OPENING OF CONGRESS.

Reading of the President's Message Consumes the Day—No Death Sentence Announced—Broad Offerings.

The second session of the Fifteenth Congress convened on Monday, Dec. 3. About thirty Senators and 200 Representatives were present. The usual committees were appointed by each house to inform the other branch that it was ready to proceed to business and to inform the President that Congress was ready to receive any communication he may desire to make, after which both houses took a recess. At the conclusion of the recess the President's message was received and read in the Senate, and duly delivered in the house and twenty thousand copies ordered to be printed, of which direct mention was made in previous issues, Congress, failing to adopt the West method were listened to with very close attention and apparent interest, at the house the portion of the message in which the President alluded to the Mormon question was listened to attentively by members on both sides of the House. Now and then a smile, bearing a tinge than of derision, would appear upon the face of some enthusiastic Democrat, but it would vanish as quickly as it had darted, and in a moment more the portion of the message which the battle is waged is comprised within lines clearly and dignantly defined. It should never be compromised. It is the people's cause. Their feelings and broke into a round of applause, which was taken up by the galleries and some said thought, was in bad taste. The reading of the message in either house being finished was, on motion, properly referred and ordered printed. The usual committees of both halls of Congress were announced, the Senate adjourned until Monday, and the House adjourned to be seen upon the floor of members who had been wounded in the late election. The maid of Orleans, in his prayer, thanked God that since the last session not a single Democrat had been valued from his seat, "and I would add, women valued from my view the faces of some of the Democrats who have been unjustly ousted by their constituents. The galleries were well filled by prominent ladies, Mrs. Cleveland occupying a conspicuous seat, as did wives of members of the Cabinet.

THE TREASURY REPORT.

The Secretary Makes His Estimate of Appropriations Required.

The Secretary of the Treasury has transmitted to Congress estimates of appropriations required for the Government service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890. They aggregate $.723,467,488, which is $9,032,265 less than estimates for 1889, and $3,530,511 more than the appropriations for the current fiscal year. The estimates are as follows: Legislative establishment, $3,381,963; executive, $6,355,081; judicial, $836,000; foreign intercourse, $1,947,565; military, $25,203,272; naval, $23,162,028; Indian affairs, $5,479,419; pensions, $81,708,700; public works, $21,264,909; postal service, $4,303,414; miscellaneous, $26,856,395; permanent annual appropriations, $109,691,055. The estimates include $100,000 for the improvement of the Calumet River; $267,000 for Illinois River; $172,000 for Chicago harbor; $43,000 for Calumet harbor, and $39,000 for Waukegan.

FRANCE AND THE POPE.

Less Secretly Advised to Leave Italy if the Powers Become Hostile.

The London Standard's correspondent at Rome says: "The French Government has secretly advised the Pope to leave Italy in the event of a rupture between France and Italy, and has offered all possible assistance in the event of his deciding to go to France. The Tribune hears that the Pope has charged Mgr. Galimberti to visit the Duke of Lichtenstein and thank him for his generous offers. He says his Holiness has no present intention of leaving Rome, but if Italy became involved in a war he would willingly take refuge at Vaduz."

Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., was asked by a New York reporter to verify the report that she was about to adopt the stage as a means of earning a living for herself and child, pending her suit against the elder Blaine for $100,000 damages, she said: "since you press the subject, and since you are frat to ask—yes. I am going on the stage; circumstances force me to."

Political Pointers.

A Charleston (W. Va.) special says: The recount in Kanawha County complete shows that Alderson (Dem.), candidate for Congress in the Third District, gained 25 votes in Charleston, which cleets him by 12. Fleming (Dem.), for Governor, gained 30 votes. This will, it is believed, give the Democrats the Governor also.

The official vote of Delaware gives Harrison, 12,973 votes; Cleveland, 16,414; Fisk, 400. Cleveland's plurality, 3,441.

He Plotted to Murder Francis Joseph.

An irredentist has been arrested at Venice, while on his way from Rome to Trieste, on suspicion of having designs upon the life of Emperor Francis Joseph. It is believed that the man intended to carry out his plans during the stay of his majesty at the castle of Miramar, on the Adriatic, where he passed the fortieth anniversary of his accent to the throne.

Phil Daly Assaulted.

At New York Phil Daly, a well-known sporting man, was decoyed by a letter to visit the home of Miss Abbie Stanton, a dressmaker. While there two men sprang from an inner room, demanded Daly's money, and in the struggle the latter was shot and slightly wounded. His assailants then escaped. Daly had on his person $3,000 in money and $20,000 in bonds.

Judge Warden Dead.

Judge Robert G. Warden, a well known lawyer, died in the Providence Hospital, at Washington.

Murdered by Her Youthful Brother.

Mrs. Emma Jackson, aged 22, was shot dead at Glasgow, Mo., by her brother, Harland Jackson, aged 14. Mrs. Jackson asked Harvey to get a bucket of water, and when he refused threatened to whip him and went after the water herself. As she was entering the door on her return her brother shoved the muzzle of a shotgun at her face and fired, tearing her left jaw and neck to pieces. The young murderer fled after the shooting, but returned and gave himself up. He says that a musket fell down and was discharged and that the ball was shot by accident. His 6-year-old cousin, who saw the shooting, says the boy murdered his sister as described above.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION.

A Hung Jury in a Murder Trial Equivalent to a Discharge.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has rendered a remarkable decision relative to the trial of persons charged with murder. It was decided the disagreement of the jury in murder trials is equivalent to an acquittal, and that the accused person cannot be again arraigned for trial after one jury has failed to agree. The ground for the decision is the Constitution, which says that a man cannot more than once be put in jeopardy of "life and limb." The Supreme Court in its decision declares that the Constitution is clear on the point raised, and the fact makes it remarkable that the point was ever raised before. Many men have been tried for murder a second time, convicted and hanged, and it would be interesting to know how many have been unconstitutionally hanged in Pennsylvania. The decision will have the effect of releasing several men who are now awaiting trial after juries in their first trial had disagreed. Hereafter it will be much more difficult to convict a man of murder in Pennsylvania, since the lawyers need only work for a disagreement in order to save their clients.

POWDERLY MAKES HIS SELECTIONS.

The Philadelphia Office to Be Investigated Place of Next Meeting Uncertain.

The Knights of Labor General Assembly, in session at Indianapolis, Ind., adjourned after selecting a place for the next meeting, the question being referred to the General Executive Board. It will be either Atlanta, New Orleans, or Albany. The Philadelphia bill and a recommendation to establish parlor boards were indorsed. A resolution severely denouncing the Provincial Committee was referred back to a committee on Resolutions without action. Mr. Powderly was given the privilege of appointing the committee to investigate the Philadelphia office, and he named Delegates Mclice, Boston, and Gannon.

THE CHIGUITOS TASCOTT.

He Is Again Captured After Being Wounded in the Mountains of Kentucky.

A man supposed to be Tascott, the murderer of Millionaire Snell, of Chicago, has been captured in Menifee County, Kentucky, by a posse under the leadership of Deputy Marshal John Day. The supposed Tascott for some weeks past has been staying about Owingsville, Bath County. He gave the name of Dickerson. He borrowed a fine shotgun at Owingsville, saying he was going to the mountains to prospect for mineral. Suspicion attached to Dickerson because he answers the description of the murderer most minutely. He was followed to the mountains, and after a fight in which he was wounded he was captured and lodged in Frenchburg jail. He had in his possession a large sum of money and refused to say where he got it.

DUN'S REVIEW OF TRADE.

Lower Prices Obtain in Nearly All Branches.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s review of trade for last week says:

The origin of gold and the situation in special to markets caused lower prices in almost all branches of trade, some decided reductions in reports of the action taken by the leaders between railroad managers. At Kansas City trade was conspicuously quiet, and at Detroit, Detroit and Milwaukee improvement was noted, with more active demand. Some trade in the western States, from Minnesota to the South, has been hindered by the cold and stormy weather. The Jewelers' circular says: "Prices of other goods seem to be affected by the general tendency to lower prices. The cost of goods market was more healthy as to cotton, and with print cloths strongly at 3½c. Prices of other goods seem to be affected. No advance in prices of goods and shoes is yet reported, but it is thought it will be. Iron is steady and firm, and Bessemer pig is a little, (3) changed little, coffee was marked up half a cent, while pork was 25 cents per barrel lower, and lard 17 cents and hogs 10 cents lower. Cattle are 10 cents higher, and flour is from 10 cents to 25 cents lower. The iron age going into blast, every furnace in the Pittsburg district is in operation, and the output larger than ever. Buyers look for lower prices. Wheat has fluctuated from 1 cent to 2 cents, and Chicago has proposed to work only three furnaces and Minneapolis mills cease Dec. 1, putting 4,000 persons out of work. The coke production is the largest on record, and the Connellsville production for November was substantially the same in November as in October, and the average for the month of 11 per cent. in August. The failures falling off in number for the week 20, as compared with a year ago, have been 20 in Canada, and 187 in the west province. For the corresponding week in 1887 the figures were 225.

A WILD WOMAN CAPTURED.

The Weird Story of an Indiana Female, Who Lived Alone in the Woods.

The following is a recapitulation of the public debt statement issued by the Treasury Department at Washington for the month of November:

A Harrison's dispatch from Bloomington, Ind., of a demented woman, whose history and surroundings are a mystery, has been found in the woods near Bloomington, through the swamps and woods in an almost nude condition and wild as a deer. She ran and dart away like a frightened deer at the approach of a human being. A party started out for her capture, and she was pursued to her hiding place in the woods, where she found herself surrounded, she attempted to dash through the crowd, but was caught and securely bound. She could not talk, but uttered a sort of moaning wail continuously. She seems to be a woman about 30 years of age, but her face and body had been dreadfully lacerated with brambles and bushes. In her temporary hiding place were found a quantity of nuts and berries, and a piece of an old brown earthenware pitcher.

ELECTION RETURNS.

The Official Figures from Several States.

The official returns from the election in Wisconsin give these results: Total vote for President, 354,666; Harrison's plurality, 21,271; Hoard's plurality, 20,205. The prohibition vote for President was 14,377, and the total vote for Governor, 354,

The official returns of the vote of Oregon give these results: Harrison, 35,293; Cleveland, 35,241; Fisk, 1,077; Streeter, 1,036; Sawtelle, 1,036; Pennoyer's plurality, 6,799. Blaine's plurality in 1884 was 2,256 on a total vote of 31,534.

The electoral vote of California as announced by the Secretary of State is: Harrison, 156,039; Cleveland, 117,729; Fisk, 5,761; Curtis, 1,591.

The official vote of Kentucky is: Cleveland, 183,800; Harrison, 155,232; Fisk, 5,261; Lucas, 1,631; Beverly, 1,000; Cleveland's plurality, 28,605.

THE POPE AND IRELAND.

A Secret Papal Rescript Sent to the Bishops of Ireland.

A Dublin telegram says: "The report that the second Papal rescript had been sent to the Irish Bishops is confirmed. It was intended that the rescript of the document should not be made known, but that the bishops should proceed to enforce the decisions contained in the first rescript without alluding to the existence of the second one. But this plan was spoiled through the indiscretion of a servant of the Bishop of Limerick, who divulged part of the contents of the rescript. It is probable that the publication of the document will force the Pope to reaffirm publicly his wishes regarding Ireland.

DEATH OF CORPORAL CHAMBERS.

A Well-Known Irish Character Passes Away in Boston.

Thomas Chambers, well known to Irishmen throughout the world as Corporal Chambers, died in the Carney Hospital in Boston. He was Twenty-two and a half years ago, in the city of Dublin, he was sentenced by Judge Christian Chambers, James Jarragh, and John Boyle O'Reilly to imprisonment for life in Australia. The sentence was commuted in all cases, and Chambers was sentenced to imprisonment for life. O'Reilly, who was a political prisoner, was sentenced to imprisonment for twenty years. Jarragh died in prison, Chambers died in Boston, and O'Reilly escaped from confinement and another year in the dreadful penal colony of Australia, and escaped from there to Portland Prison, and after fourteen years of imprisonment he was released.

A CALIFORNIA HANGING.

J. H. Meyer Has to Be Carried to the Scaffold.

John Henry Meyer was hanged at Placerville, Cal., for murdering John Lowell, a ranchman, last March. Meyer was so weak that the officers were compelled to almost drag him to the scaffold, and to support him erect until the trap was sprung.

Meyer, Wittenberg and Henry Claus went to Lowell's ranch last March and claimed employment. Meyer had a quarrel with the three men, after throwing the body into the well, and then left. Lowell's horses and a wild steer. These men were convicted of murder and sentenced to hanging. The Supreme Court of the State sustained the Supreme Court, where the case is now pending.

A TREASURER'S DISGRACE.

Trusted Officer Embezzles Thousands with County Funds.

C. O. Winchell, Treasurer of Spink County, Dakota, is said to have embezzled the entire rent of $10,000. The first intimation of the matter was received through a letter written by Winchell while in the East to his deputy. Winchell was highly respected in Spink County, and was considered perfectly honest. He sent his family to Chicago some time ago. The curious feature of the case is that Winchell left $5,000 in his office safe and $20,000 in the bank. His bondsmen are reliable and will make good the deficiency.

IN A BURNING MINE.

Several Lives Lost by an Incendiary Fire.

Fire broke out in the eighth level of shaft No. 3 of the Calumet and Hecla mine, near Calumet, Mich., while over one hundred men were at work, all of whom escaped except eight, who are supposed to be dead. The names of the men imprisoned in the burning mine are: John Vanderbilt, Antony Kabal, Joe Monsoegide, Joe Rowe, John Flick, Andrew Hansen, Gustave Dana, and Antony Lasguin. The fire is supposed to have been incendiary origin.

A BOY COURT'S DEATH.

Fourteen-year-old Orner Avery Throws Himself Before a Train.

Orner Avery, a boy 14 years of age, threw himself in front of a Vandanlia train, at Logansport, Ind., and would have met a horrible death had it not been for bystanders who rescued him. He gave as a reason for his rash act that his parents are fond of him.

An Iowa Tragedy.

Near Le Mars, Iowa, a couple age three farm hands, Amos Andrews, Frank Gaynor, and George Rogers, took part together in a drunken carousal which ended in a quarrel. The next morning Andrews was very sick and soon died. It was at supposed from heart disease, and Rogers had an ugly wound in the leg, which he said resulted from a fall on a mower knife. Believing death imminent from blood poisoning, he has deposed that Andrews had cut him with a knife and that Gaynor had killed Andrews by a blow on the head with a sledge-hammer. Andrews' body was exhumed and a fracture of the skull discovered.

Official Vote of Indiana.

The official canvass of the Indiana vote gives this result on electors, the vote of the leading candidates on each ticket: being given: Republican, 263,361; Democrat, 263,013; Prohibition, 8,881; Union, 2,401. Harrison's plurality, 2,348. The plurality of the lowest Republican elector over the lowest Democratic elector is 2,434. The total vote for Governor was only 139 less than for President. Gen. Fairbanks's plurality is 2,191. The largest plurality received by any candidate on the State ticket was 3,361, received by LaFollette, candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Convicts Pardoned by Gov. Ames.

Crawford County's two jail birds, Charles Witham have been pardoned by Gov. Ames. Fessenden and Witham were sent up three years, after throwing the body into the well, where it was found a few days after. Witham was convicted of murder and sentenced to hanging. The Supreme Court, where the case is now pending.

The Yellow Fever.

The Board of Health of Jacksonville, Fla. reported for the twenty-four hours ended at 6 p. m. Tuesday, Nov. 27th, no new cases and no deaths. There were not more than twenty cases in the city and all were out of danger. Restrictions on travel will be removed as soon as disinfection shall have been completed, which will be as early as possible.

Failed to Agree.

The State Canvassers of Tennessee, to whom all returns are certified, failed to agree upon a form of certificate to be tendered to Congress from the Third District, Governor Taylor indorsing the claim of H. C. Evans, Republican, and Secretary of State Allison, the other member, holding that Bates, Democrat, was legally elected.

Probably Foundered.

The Reading Company's steam collier, Allentown, with a crew of nineteen men, and laden with 1,500 tons of coal, is reported to have foundered off Cohasset, Mass. Life preservers and wreckage marked with the name of the vessel went ashore.

Rescued from Hanging.

ARMY AND POSTOFFICES

REPORTS OF SECRETARIES ENDICOTT AND DICKINSON.

The Administration of the War Department—Estimates and Expenditures for Military Protection—The Postal Service Fully Considered.

The Secretary of War has made a report of the War Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888. The total expenditures were $41,175,107; the appropriations for the current fiscal year amount to $39,879,934, and the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, aggregate $44,652,507, as follows: Salaries and contingent expenses, $1,888,890; military establishment, support of the army, and military academy, $25,293,878; public works, including river and harbor improvements, $13,885,254; miscellaneous objects, $3,575,485.

The Secretary gives a brief review of the trouble with the Chiricahua Apache Indians, who are now confined at Mount Vernon Barracks, Alabama, and discusses plans for their disposition. The Secretary says it is very desirable to secure some place where the climate is suitable or opportunity may be had to instruct and employ them in agriculture.

Desertions from the army continue in large numbers, as in previous years, but from investigations recently made it appears that 90 per cent of the deserters from the service of the Union Pacific Railroad, and 75 per cent of the deserters from the service of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, are not carried on the rolls of the companies. Now if this is a gown of blue brocade, the unusual feature of which is an abundant lack of gore, it is to be noted that the similar modifications of the Empire gown, and sometimes such heavy fabrics as plush and velvet are combined with the most flimsy muslins. Maidens with more of time than cash are suspected of using up portions of old ball dresses for these concections, and that is feasible, owing to the prevailing fad for days of yore, which permits a variety of incongruous fabrics. Taste and ingenuity, combined with economy and industry, will produce a beautiful and striking ten gown out of the remnants of last year's finery. In the way of brand-new fabrics, there are the new colored Bedfords in almost endless variety. The medieval tea gowns with corset waist and full skirt of six or seven breadths

DAYTIME VISITORS.

the richest and most gorgeous colors are represented. Embroidery appears everywhere, even at the neck for a change. Mrs. Cleveland's last bonnet, upon bonnets, hats, wraps, and dresses, is a little jacket of silk and sleeves entirely of passementerie. Patterns in ladies' cloths come in all the fashionable colors, some with five rows of narrow fur-trimming for the front of the dress, and the same fur of the narrow with six yards of plain goods as well. Braided dress patterns are in all colors, and cashmeres with matched trimmings also come, and in all the most exquisite of shades, with five yards of each. Many beautiful models in ladies' cloaks are to be seen, and come in every color. One particular fashion is of bronze and black, embroidered with twice the quantity of narrow braid as of broad, to go with each pattern. To return to the bonnet mentioned robe, as illustrated, the extensive predilection for tinsel and surprise those readers who suppose that the bustle is to be discarded. This much-debated article refuses to disclose its intentions. It is what reporters call "a strong bustle," yet it ought to be. The fact seems to be that fashionable women are experimenting or reducing the tournure according to their individual tastes, and the requirements of particular dresses, and other figures shown in this article are only very moderately distended, and that may be accepted as the general new usage; but if a toilet seems to require it, and especially if the skirt is long enough to drag behind, the bustle worn with it is as large as ever. Especially is this so when the style of the toilet is as beautifully made of bengaline, or of soft brocades in pale blue, old rose, olive, and brown, with a large, well-puffed sleeve of white lace, and show a petticoat of white lace where the skirt is lifted on the left side. Among the natty fashions for stylish young women are charming dressing jackets in rich cashmere of various handsome shades. These gowns are made with bodices that open over pleated shirt-waists, feather-stitched with silk the color of the cashmere bodice. The charming toilets which are worn exclusively in the morning have a further restriction as to place and occasion, and the prices of them are appropriate only for the private parlor. They appear to great advantage, and should be in the present code of fashion can scarcely be too elaborately garnished with lace and ribbons.

READY FOR A MORNING CALLER.

Daytime callers are mostly ladies, and, as feminine eyes are famously trained in the inspection of toilets, it is the more important that the costumes in which to make or receive daytime visits shall be in the best taste and keeping. The young ladies who might use been photographed as they stood in the parlor of a friend, they look off their wraps, but retained their hats, and exposed to view the bonne dresses. They are self-explanatory. Attention is called to the two-piece dress of the gowns. In that respect they are like ninety-nine out of every hundred.

"Oh, I am glad to meet you," said a friend to her very near-sighted chum in one of a bevy of girls. "I think I was so afraid to your sister a few minutes ago."

"It was to me that you were introduced," said the girl. "That observing no doubt, she explained: "You were in the lace sleeves and the side of one of the sleeves, and the side of the gown." And she turned around to show him how big the puffed sleeves or hat leaves was her dress.

The fashion plates suggest those trick costumes that the double-voiced conjurers will pull out of a hat or box. With a dark heavy side to turn to the observer when she sang in a deep contralto, and a light side to turn to the world by her high soprano warbling, she might charm the ear, but the observer of to-day might keep two wooers simultaneously at her sides, and neither would after marriage be able to confound her to the other by a description of her apparel. Even if it were evening, her hands were gloved, one chap might have worn a light glove, and the other had was rusk, while the other might be covered with the hand he had squeezed was dark. It is a fine time for darling and eccentric girls to misuse their gloves in that manner, making each hand harmonize in hue with the own side of the toilet.

In contrast with such bad taste is the dignifiedly beautiful toilet of the young matron, who is the most decorous of high evening and long sleeves, with simple beauty and richness in

PLAQUES of white or blue enamel, set with lozenges of diamonds, appear in bed, where, whenever he was wakeful, he turned to read and study, and to write in a few weeks of his death he always drank three or four glasses of old-fashioned black port after his dinner. He never smoked nor snuffed, but he handed until he was over ninety; he had a marvelous digestion; his sight, aided by spectacles, was good until the last, and he was sufficiently clear-headed to make a little joke to one of his great-grandchildren a week or two or two of his end. This kind of pleasant extreme old age is, I am afraid, very unusual. I should aid that my old friend in his early days had an appointment in India, and I have letter from me as I write a copy of "Horace" (Tonson's edition of 1715) which he gave me, and which bears in his handwriting on the fly-leaf his name and the date, "Calcutta, 16 March, 1779." He gave it to me about eighty-eight years later.

How the Tiger Eats.

A Rimdoo expert on tigers has recently read before the Bombay National History Society a paper discussing the manner in which that animal seizes and eat his prey. Mr. Inverarity, the expert in question, had never been eaten by a tiger himself, but he had seen a good many other men and animals devoured, and seems to be a competent critic of the table etiquette of the tiger. It may please persons who may contemplate being eaten by a tiger to know that the process is not a lonely one. The tiger, Mr. Inverarity says, always seizes his prey by the throat and kills it, probably by pressure on the windpipe. It is only by accident, or when a great hurry, that the tiger, who is killing, covers any important vein or artery and so bleeds to death, or faints from the wounds. The tiger always drags his prey into the bushes, and then eats has way along toward the head. The stomach and accompanying organs are removed at the commencement, and leaves arranged in a neat pile.

An average-sized tiger and tigress will finish a cow or such animal at one sitting, having only the head. The tiger sits down at the carcass and eats downward. When their heads come to the middle of the animal they know there is no more left, and quit eating. Before eating, the tiger drags its prey a short distance, and the meal the tiger sometimes lies down and sleeps, but it there are hills in the neighborhood it will probably go to the top of the highest one to sleep. If anything has been left, the tiger will return the next night to eat it, but it never goes to the same place or the same spot as the first, always dragging the body a short distance away.

The tiger can eat half a bullock in two hours. Once Mr. Inverarity sat in a tree two hours and forty-five minutes while a tiger was lunching off a cow beneath him. It was a small tiger, too. Tigers will also eat each other if it is a convenient time to hunt up other provisions. They are supposed to kill only once in five or six days, and, in fact, do probably eat no food for several days after they have gorged themselves, but they will kill whenever they get a chance, and it is on record that one tiger killed five twenty-three consecutive nights. They will wander immense distances at night, always taking the easiest paths and frequently traveled roads on that account. They are not about little in daytime, because the hot ground burns their feet.

Tigers can climb trees. Mr. Inverarity tells of one in Salsette that climbed after a certain man named Pandoo, who had taken refuge in a tree. Pandoo waited awhile, and then came down and climbed another tree on the way the tiger came up with him and killed him. The native jury at the inquest reported "that Pandoo died of the tiger eating him." There was no other cause of death. Nothing was left except some fingers, which probably belonged to the right or left hand."—New York Sun.

Old-Time Scotch Horrors.

In the reign of James I. of Scotland there was born in East Lothia, a village a few miles from Edinburgh, a man named Bean, the son of poor but hard-working people. Evincing from boyhood a hatred of all labor, and displaying ever y kind of vicious quality, he was early in life abandoned his home and fled to Galloway. He was accompanied by a fit companion for his crimes in the person of a young woman, a native of the same village. The home of the pair was situated about half a mile in length and of considerable breadth, the mouth of which was washed by the sea, the tide sometimes flowing into the cave a distance of 300 yards. The entrance was high and so over of sight as to their way from comfortable to cave, or in the case of belated travelers across the country, were usually attacked in daylight. The same soul-sickening mutilation was inflicted in each case; the abdomen was cut open and the entrails dragged out and the body carried to the cave. To prevent detection they murdered every traveler they robbed, and for years they continued their horrible calling. In this manner, the chronicle calling, they lived until they had eight sons and six daughters, eighteen grandsons and fourteen grandaughters—all the offspring of incest. After a long career of murder the gang were captured by the long immunity of the criminal from detection, headed a body of troops and succeeded with bloodhounds in unearthing from the cave the whole tribe, to whom was meted out a death agreeable to the life they led. The men, says the historian, had their entrails thrown into the fire, the hands and legs were severed from their trunks and they were permitted to bleed to death. The mother of the children, after being spectators of the death of the men, were cast into three grandfires and consumed to ashes.—Pall Mall Gazette.

An Austin clergyman, whose name is not mentioned, was preaching a sermon calling, was absorbed in thought a few Sundays ago, just before divine service began, when he was approached by one of his congregation, who asked, referring to the opening hymn

"What shall I play?"

"What kind of a hand have you got?" responded the absent-minded clergyman.—Texas Siftings.

TAKE A RECEIPT.

Whenever a payment is made on subscription in wood or produce, we want every person so paying to call at the office and get a receipt for the same, so that proper credit may be given on the books. Unless this is done, mistakes and misunderstandings are almost sure to follow. Please remember it.

THE money in circulation in the United States, June 30, 1888, is estimated to be $2,093,562,072. This is a great deal of money, and would ensure the prosperity of the people, were it not that it is in the hands of the money sharks and monopolists, while among the people money was never so scarce nor hard to get as now. However, as the people insist upon keeping up a condition of hopeless, helpless poverty, notwithstanding the undeveloped resources of the country we have nothing to say.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Postmaster Patrick Calligan of Alpena, was in Bay City a few days ago, and to a Press reporter he said: "You folks down here will probably never know all the reasons for Fisher's defeat. I never before saw such high handed robbery as was practiced in Alpena and Montmorency counties. However, it was the Democrats who defeated him. Of nine foremen in that vicinity, seven were Democrats. They pledged themselves to the Democratic county committee, but only one, possibly two, fooled the Democratic ticket, the Wheeler money doing the business." You can't imagine what an amount of money was spent up there for Wheeler. Men just over from Canada voted just the same as American citizens and we were powerless to stop it."

A Profitable Business.

Those who take an agency for a reliable enterprising house, learn their business and stick to it, "get on" in the world. People who have any idea of engaging in any canvassing business will do well to write Owen, Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine,—the great art and general publishers. They offer the most exceptional advantages to those who are sufficiently enterprising to be willing to make a push in order to better their condition. It costs nothing to try. HOMES OF THE JAPANESE.

No Windows Nor Regular Doors—Walls and Floors—The "Go Down."

Japanese houses consist often of only one story, and very seldom of more than two. They do not, of course, resemble one another exactly, any more than English houses do; but it may be said of them generally that they have no windows in our sense of the word, and sometimes no regular doors, but they are always provided with a veranda before the lower story, and, when they have a second story, with a balcony.

As to solidity, it is a fact that the Japanese do not even aim at making their houses substantial, as English houses are, or as, even when constructed by a "jerry builder," they profess to be. The outer walls of an English houses are always intended to be fixtures, and so far durable that when once put up they cannot be pulled down without sending for workmen; but among the Japanese two or more of the sides are not permanent walls, but are closed with sliding screens, which can be set up and taken down at the pleasure of the inmates. On a hot day, or when thorough ventilation is required, the whole side of a room can be opened to the outer air.

Of course, people who are not particular about having a permanent wall between their rooms and the outside world, do not care to have immovable partitions between one part of the house and another. Although in England rooms are occasionally parted from one another by a certain, or by folding doors, yet, as a general rule, they are separated by walls, which, however flimsy their construction may be, are fixtures, and cannot be taken away and replaced at will. But in Japan one room is commonly parted from the next merely by a screen—a framework of wood covered with paper, which runs in a shallow groove on the floor and a deeper groove on the ceiling, a plan which gives the inhabitants the power of adding to or decreasing the number of their apartments at their pleasure. Baron Nordenskjold, the famous Arctic traveler, has recorded the surprise with which he woke up one morning at a Japanese inn in quite a small room, having gone to bed over night in a very large one.

It has been suggested that the reason why the Japanese do not build their houses more solidly is that, in a land like theirs of continual earthquakes, it is not worth while spending a long time on rearing up a building which may be tumbled down again at any moment. But it is doubtful whether this explanation is a true one, for earthquakes violent enough to destroy a really strong building do not happen very often at any one place, and, besides, the Japanese do erect durable houses, which the English call "go downs," for the protection of their property from loss or accident. The most common method is by fire, to which the inflammable Japanese houses fall an easy prey, and by which large parts of the towns are continually being burnt down. On the approach of a conflagration the prudent Japanese, as far as possible, pulls his house down and takes away not only its contents, but large parts of itself, to the "go down," which is a building thickly coated with fire proof clay, very strong and substantial, but very seldom used as a house.

The floors of Japanese rooms are invariably carpeted with rush mats of very careful construction, some two or three inches thick and about six feet long by three broad. As these mats are all of one pattern, the size of a room can be determined by the number of mats it contains, and it is described as a six mat or twelve mat room, as the case may be. Since the commonest rooms are either of six or of eight mats, and never an eight mat mat room is only a mat twelve feet by twelve in extent, it will be seen that the rooms of a Japanese house, like the Japanese house itself, are generally small. The Japanese fireplace is usually a portable brazier, made of bronze, porcelain or wood, lined with clay, in which not coal, but charcoal cakes are burned. Properly, however, there is a clay lined hole in the floor, containing a fire of the same kind.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

The Real Secret of the unparalleled success of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS may be found in two distinguishing characteristics, which more than anything else have contributed to its remarkable growth.

FIRST—It is a Daily Paper for Busy People. The people of this busy West are too busy to be possessed of an intelligent knowledge of the world's daily doings, but they are too busy to waste valuable time in searching through a cumbrous "blanket-sheet" news paper for the real news of set, thoughtful, readable, pithy, and to the point, and-one-things which make up modern civilization. They want news—all the news—but they don't want it concealed in an overwhelming mass of chaff and inconsequential. It is because THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is "all of a piece" and "to the point" that its circulation is over "a million a week."

SECOND—It is an Independent, Truth-telling Newspaper. The people demand a fearless, partial, independent newspaper, which gives all the news, and gives it free from fear of partisan bias. With no more political ambition to gratify, no "axe to grind," the impartial, independent newspaper may truly be a guide, philosopher and friend. It is based on these two cardinal political fields; and this is why THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS has to-day a circulation of over "a million a week."

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS now adds to these two cardinal features elements of paper lucky, a third, in its unparalleled reduction of price to ONE CENT A DAY.

It is always large enough,—never too large.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is for sale by all newsdealers at One Cent per copy, or will be mailed, postage paid, for $2.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. The farmer and mechanic can now afford, as well as the merchant and professional man, to have the metropolitan daily.

It is not possible for a little country newspaper up here in the woods to out-bid the great city papers in the offer of prizes and premiums to subscribers and agents. Life is too short and too valuable to try to make the largest paper in the country; but we propose to keep the JOURNAL as it has been in the past, the best local newspaper in the county. We can do it with the aid of our correspondents we can and will give you what money will not buy with your great city papers,—all the news about home. If quantity is wanted, give us $2.00 for the JOURNAL and New York Weekly World one year. The World is now a 12-page, 84-column paper, and gives a complete novel by a popular author in every issue. We will give a three-months' trial subscription to the World free to every subscriber who will give us $1.50 in cash before January 1st for a year's subscription to the JOURNAL. Give it a trial at once.

The many people, young and old, who have visited the store of A. T. Washburne & Co., our enterprising city goods merchants, this week, have been impressed with the fact of their ability and enterprise. Always something new in stock, as well as their show windows, which, without doubt, show the handsomest exhibits weekly all the year round of any store north of Grand Rapids. They are not copies of other merchants' ideas but altogether original. This week their windows are a genuine treat for they are in reality works of art which should be placed entirely to the credit of Al. They are intended as an holiday exhibit, so everyone for miles around should not miss seeing them as well as the elegant line of holiday goods displayed inside. This firm are gaining a reputation second to none in the state for square dealing and honest goods at living prices. If our readers could only step in their two stores—Cadillac and Charlevoix—and see the goods come and go, it would not need words to describe their methods or amount of business done in twelve months.—Adv.

CONGRESS IN SESSION

President Cleveland Submits His Final Message.

A Voluminous Document Upon Matters of Public Interest.

Duties of Patriotic Citizens—The Current of the Country Diverted from Its Legitimate Channels—Crowded Condition of the Supreme Court Calendar—Rights of American Fishermen—The Sackville-West Affair—Abuse of Immigration Laws—Various Other Topics Handled.

(Washington (D. C.) special.)

The second session of the Fifty-third Congress convened at noon, December 3, the greater portion of the day being consumed in the reading of President Cleveland's message, of which the following is a comprehensive digest:

To the Congress of the United States:

As you assemble for the discharge of the duties and responsibilities of the representatives of a free and generous people, your meeting is attended with no ordinary anxiety and interest. With the exception of the present session of the Congress the first session of the constitutional existence of a nation will be completed. When the sup rimest of our government assembled to lay the chart adopted for our guidance upon the constitution. Departure from the lines then laid down has ever since been by a steady adherence to the direction they indicate and by restraint within the limitations they have fixed, our country has risen to the world of the fitness of the American system of government. Its success has resulted from adhesion of which we hold as the underlying principle of our government should ever be used to the relations of our citizens to each other. The Government itself, in its care for the American people, has in the exercise of its functions and powers, it will deal with the full measure of its responsibility for the best, the most liberal, and fair, and absolutely just. It has agreed that American citizenship is to be the central necessary to justice and the condition of equality before the law and the enjoyment of the blessings of free institutions in the government of the people by their Government. The edition of our Republic in its early days rightly insisted upon full content and with the letter of this bond, and any violation of it was the subject of keen feel for the rights of the citizen. He stinge to the support of his Government when challenged by the exigency of national existence, and he was secure in the enjoyment of the remaining responsibilities of his daily life. The ability of his people to rely upon their government and was enforced by the fact that their lives, liberties and estates of the citizens, individuals, more opulent and aggregations of capital were allowed or sternly regulated and we as had the power and place of governments free from the influence of the people. Our country has grown in the intervening years, and the relative weight of the people, in the solution of the problem of free government and for the a discussion of the grand destiny of the land which God has given them. A century has passed. Our country has grown in extent and in population. Our manufactures have grown full fortunes dreamed of by the fathers of the Republic, our business men are seeking the trade in far seas for riches, and from the aggregations of capital outstrip the imagination the magnitude of their undertakings.

We view with pride and satisfaction this bright picture of our country's growth and prosperity, while only a closer scrutiny developes a sinister shadow. Upon more careful inspection we find the wealth and luxury of our country distributed in such a way as to produce and surround the few with all the comforts and constantly increasing urban population and consequently increasing number of those who are discontent with agricultural pursuits. The farmer, who is still the mainstay of the nation, the simple and laborious life, joins the cause of the other toilers of the country, who discover that the fortunes realized by our manufacturers are no longer solely the reward of early industry and intelligence conceived in that they result from the discriminating favor of government, and that the favor of government is exercised in the direction of the power that was the gift between a aristocracy and the employed in the business of the country, and the farming, one comprising the very rich and poor, and the other comprises are found this poor. As we view the achievement of aggregated capital, we discover that the growth of trusts, combinations, and monopolies, seem to have outstripped foresight, but have not escaped the observation of the Government, and are largely upon the undue exaction from the masses of our people. The evil is not in aggregate, but in the abuse it constantly widens, and classes are rapidly forming, one approaching the very rich and poor, while in another are found the toiling masses, who, in the struggle for the necessary support of their families, are forced to the support of trusts, combinations, and monopolies. While the citizen is struggling for his share, he is tempted to death beneath an iron heel, corporations, and trusts, and the wrongs and accumulated grievances of the last and the sufferers of the people, are fast becoming the people's market, will not contemplating conscious upon the wealth and prosperity of our country, and consequently contributing to the general discontent. Instead of the Government, in its care for the people, is

FARM AND GARDEN.

THINGS TALKED ABOUT IN MANY SECTIONS OF THE COUNTRY.

An Early Autumn Variety of Apple Which Experience Has Proven Worthy of Cultivation and Which Marketmen and Dealers Find Profitable.

Sops of Wine is an early autumn variety which has been long cultivated in New England. As shown in the cut, it is reduced one-third from the natural size, which is medium. It is of roundish shape, yellow and red in color, splashed with deep red; the flesh is white and often stained.

FIG. 1—SOPS OF WINE APPLE.

Sops of Wine is ranked with Red Astrachan and Fameuse in hardiness, but Dr. T. H. Hoskins, a prominent horticulturist of Vermont, states in Rural New Yorker that it is not quite iron clad and therefore not very profitable, even when top grafted, in his locality. In spite of a lack of juiciness, the remarkably pleasant, spicy sub-acid flavor of this apple gives it much favor among those who are acquainted with it.

FIG. 2—HALF SECTION OF SOPS OF WINE.

The rich coloring and symmetrical shape of Sops of Wine apple make it a valuable market fruit and a favorite for table use. According to Dr. Hoskins there is no better apple for stocks standard or dwarf on the same, and it is a very good shipper.

Road Dust as a Fertilizer.

Sometimes the dust on much traveled roads is so filled and saturated with solid and liquid droppings of passing animals that it becomes a fairly good manure. The best effect is produced, says American Cultivator, when it is scattered over grass land, the dust serving as a mulch to keep the surface light and rains washing its better part down to the grass roots. Sometimes farmers hacking phosphate have drilled in road dust with seed grain, and have claimed good results from its use. The farmers who do this try hard to believe that the inexpensive fertilizer is as good as any, and sometimes they succeed. But it will always pay to put up a few barrels of road dust in or near the hen house to mix with the droppings of fowls. It serves as a disinfectant, absorbs whatever ammonia the manure would otherwise lose. Besides spreading it becomes a really good fertilizer, whether it may have been at the beginning. Farmers who live near cities can usually get the street sweepings, which are mainly horse manure and very rich in plant food, for the labor of drawing away. Except for their liability to contain weed seeds they are an excellent and cheap manure for those near enough to use it freely.

Hydraulic Rams.

Southern Cultivator has the following to say about hydraulic rams:

The general rule to ascertain the quantity of water that can be lifted to a given height by a hydraulic ram is as follows: Multiply the quantity supplied by the stream in gallons per minute by 65 and divide the product by 100. Multiply the result above obtained by the "head" or number of feet of available fall, and then divide by the perpendicular height in feet to which the water is to be raised. The result will be the number of gallons of water that can be raised per minute to the desired height. The first thing, then, is to find the quantity of water that the branch runs in gallons per minute, the amount of fall that can be secured by a dam, and the perpendicular height from the foot of the fall to the top of the tank or reservoir to be supplied. You will then have all the data necessary to enable you to determine the size of the ram and of the drive and discharge pipes. These known you can then ascertain what the cost will be.

Root Grafting.

Root grafting is simply grafting on a portion of the root instead of the stock, and may be performed by any of the methods that will bring the inner bark of the cions and stocks in perfect contact and hold them so until they have effected a union. Sharp knives and smooth clean cuts are necessary. Take seedling stocks from 1 to 2 years old, cut the stem off squarely at the collar of the root, cut an even slanting cut about inch long on both root and scion, then reverse the knife and make a slit in the center of the cut and interlock the two in such a way that the inner bark shall come in contact at least on one side, tie and wax, or bind with a narrow strip of waxed cloth warm enough to adhere and hold the parts in place

Playing Marbles in England.

Marbles, which once boasted as many games as there are days in the year, are now falling upon evil times. Knuckling down is clean forgotten—if the art continues it is called by another name; the alley-tor is confounded with his brother of the rank and file; there are no longer six the finer varieties in stone and glass or in colored and streaky marble, nor do boys, like sportsmen, yearly for a full bag; nor do they study any longer the intricacies, the possibilities and the subtleties by which their bag may be filled. The game is now only played by little boys—their bag is small; their game is simple, and whenever they can raise a penny the marbles become a vehicle for gambling.—Saturday Review.

The cranberry crop has been damaged and decreased by early frosts.

MANURES IN THE VINEYARD

Lime Ashes and Bones for Grape Vines. When to Apply Them.

The fall and early winter is the best time to apply any coarse manures to a vineyard or orchard, but manures may be applied later in proportion to their solubility. Ashes has long been esteem as one of the best manures for grape vines, because ashes contain lime and potash, both of which abound in the ash of the vine. Ashes should not be applied until about the time the vine starts into growth in the early spring, and they may be scattered on the surface and gradually worked in during the cultivation of the crop. But lime is not especially important unless the soil is known to be unusually deficient in this element, as most clay soils or fresh soils of any character contain an abundance. Moreover ashes contain even more lime than potash. If the ashes are unleached and dry, fifty bushels would be a liberal application per acre broadcasted. It would be improper to apply the strong, unleached ashes immediately around the vines. Leached ashes may be safely applied in almost any quantity.

To insure that the vines will grow off speedily, prepare the ground by deep plowing, or spading, turning under a good coating of well rotted stable manure. Secure well rooted vines of one or two years old; cut off the long and all bruised roots; dig holes large enough and deep enough to take in the entire root system, fill in at the bottom with rich top soil and rotted manure; cut the vines back to two eyes, which should be just at the surface of the ground when planted; press the soil around the stem. When the two eyes have put forth canes and the latter have grown several inches, rub off the weaker and train the remaining one to a stake. Cultivate the surface frequently and mulch at the beginning of hot weather. Bones may be broken into coarse pieces and a peck scattered around each vine and forked in. They will become slowly available and last many years. Fine bone dust may be used if more immediate results are desired, sprinkling the same over the surface at the rate of two or three pounds to each vine and in a circle of three feet in diameter.—Southern Cultivator.

Diet for a Run Down Horse.

In reply to the question, "What is the best feed to give a horse that is run down in strength and flesh?" Massachusetts Plowman says: If you cannot get pasturage, feed your horse fresh cut grass or clover hay, with a few oats, say four to six quarts daily, and give him gentle work or exercise so as to keep his appetite and digestion good. As he gains strength you can substitute corn meal mixed with cut hay for one or two rations daily using not over four quarts a day.

Corn meal alone is not so safe a grain for horses as oats; most cases of colic, we believe, are to be traced to injudicious use of corn meal; but horses fatten rapidly on it and it is cheaper than oats; to make it a safe article of diet we would advise mixing it with the same bulk of wheat bran or feeding in connection with oats and some root, say one half peck of carrots daily.

Barn Yard Notes.

The heavy driving rains often carry away from the barn yard a deep stream of valuable fertilizing material, which is irretrievably lost. This may be prevented by keeping the yard well scraped up and the contents carried out promptly to the field and spread. There they are safe from leaching and waste, and there they will do the most good. Neglect of this liability to wash out the best part of the contents of the barn yard is often one of the great leaks of the farm, and yet it is one which may be easily prevented.

Period of Gestation of Cows.

The period of gestation of cows ranges between 13 extremes of 220 and 320 days, the average being 282 days, or nine months and ten days. The time varies in different cows, the above being the average in a great number of cows. It is often the case that a cow that has had one or more calves will give very little or no indication of pregnancy or approaching maternity until a few days before calving.—Southern Cultivator.

Contrivance for Measuring Land.

An easily made contrivance for measuring land may be counted among valuable farm conveniences which come in very handily in many instances.

DEVICE FOR MEASURING LAND.

The cut shows a device for this purpose suggested by a Kansas correspondent of Rural New Yorker, who describes it as made of pieces one inch square, neatly fitted together, with the lower ends just five and a half feet apart, so that three steps with it measure just one rod. With a little practice one can, by resting the hand on the top of the little frame, measure as rapidly as he can walk.

Here and There.

Dr. William S. Devoe, of New York, has succeeded Professor James Law, who resigned his position as chief inspector of the state of New York of the Animal Bureau of industry in order to resume his duties at Cornell university.

According to the census report of 1880 the value of the forest crop of the United States for that year exceeded $700,000,000, or was equal to one-third of that of all the farm products whatever sold, consumed or on hand in the year 1879.

The California Fruit Grower says: "It is no use trying to disguise the fact that the grape crop of California this year is much below the average in size and quality of fruit."

The honey season has not been a successful one in either the United States or Canada.

Results of experiments in the cultivation of corn on the grounds of the New York experiment station make it appear that root mutilation is injurious, and that the more the soil is worked without mutilating the roots the more favorable will be the effect upon the plants. Acting on this assumption, the ideal method would be to cultivate the soil very shallow wherever it contains roots, and deeply where it contains no roots, in order to favor root growth to the utmost.

The Teacher

Who advised her pupils to strengthen their minds by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, appreciated the truth that bodily health is essential to mental vigor. For persons of delicate and feeble constitution, whether young or old, this medicine is remarkably beneficial. Be sure you get Ayer's—the only $1 Sarsaparilla worth $1 a bottle.

"Every spring and fall I take a number of bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and am greatly benefited."—Mrs. Jas. H. Eastman, Somerham, Mass.

"I have taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great benefit to my general health."—Miss Thirza L. Crozier, Palmyra, Mo.

"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year from General Debility.

A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet H. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now ten years old, and my father and I cannot say too much for your excellent medicine."—F. A. Pinkham, South Montowese, Mass.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

Nervous Prostration,

with severe headache and backache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 80 years of age, and am satisfied that my present health and progress of age are due to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Lucy Moffitt, Killingly, Conn.

"Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 70 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a mortgage, by which the power of sale thereon has become operative, given by Hattie Green, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Albert W. Hutchins, and dated the 3rd day of April, A. D. 1888, recorded in the office of the register of deeds, for Charlevoix county, Michigan, June 14th, 1888, at ten o'clock p. m., in liber "M" of mortgages, on page 1 on. There is now due on the mortgage, at the date of this notice, the sum of Twenty-five hundred and twenty-five dollars and no cents, and no proceeding at law has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Notice is hereby given that said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described, to wit: The south quarter of the northeast quarter of section ten (10), in township thirty-four (34) north, of range five (5) west, Michigan, village lot, number four, block one, of the village of East Jordan, Michigan, according to the recorded plat thereof, at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the court house, in Boyne City, that being the place of holding the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, on the 8th day of February, at 11 o'clock in the afternoon of said day, subject to the right of an attorney for defendant to redeem.

Dated Nov. 8th, 1888.

ALBERT W. HUTCHINS, Mortgagee.

A. D. CRUICKSHANK, Attorney for Mortgagee.

LOCAL NOTES AND NEWS.

W. Ripley's baby is very sick.

Will Cooper is home again, after an absence of a year.

Hi. Wood and family returned from Traverse City Saturday.

Miss Ella Trimble closed her fall term of school at Dwight last week.

No school in the high school room Tuesday afternoon on account of smoke.

Mrs. A. G. Aldrich goes to Cadillac this week to visit her son Henry over the holidays.

A very appropriate gift to an absent friend would be a copy of the JOURNAL for the coming year.

Boyne City has rejuvenated her band, and will furnish the people music in the near future.

Charlevoix gets $10,000 recommendation for the channel at the entrance to Pine Lake.

Editor Chas. F. Dixon of the Enterprise has been elected president of the village of East Jordan.

The Traverse Eagle issued a 16-page edition last week, well filled with holiday advertising.

John Munro has taken a contract to drive 1,250 spiles at Charlevoix.—So says the St. Ignace Democrat.

If you want a Christmas present, be sure that your friends look over our advertising columns this week.

The editor will be at home to-morrow to receive wood on subscription. Cash will be accepted if you prefer.

James Hemmings, painter, has headquarters at the Ferguson house. All wanting work in his line are requested to call.

Capt. H. S. Stevens, formerly of the tug J. H. Martin, arrived Saturday, and will spend the holidays with friends in Charlevoix.

The farmer who leaves his farming tools and implements without shelter this winter will be howling "hard times" as usual next year.

Young man, ere you decide that the majority of feminine acquaintances have small feet, remember that it's only the small ones you get to see.

The phonograph shows that a man's voice has not the same sound to himself that it has to others, thinks an exchange, when people persist in singing.

The gospel ship, "Glad Tidings" which has visited our port many times, has been sold and Capt. Hardy will purchase an 88,000 steamer so as to visit more ports.

Six different subscribers promised to come in Saturday and pay $1.50 for the JOURNAL, but they didn't come—and we couldn't keep our promises made on the strength of them.

A Chicago tobacconist says that color has nothing to do with strength of a cigar, and that it is a mistake to suppose that cabbage leaves are ever used in their manufacture.

J. E. Chew expects to start next Monday for Hagerman, Ohio, to visit the home of his childhood. He expects to remain all winter if he secures a promised business position.

Three years ago the custom of making New Year calls was quite popular in Charlevoix, and many are reminded of that time by pleasant recollections. How shall it be this year?

The St. Ignace Watchman says that Antoine Paquin has lost his schooner Berdie. He rented her to some parties from Charlevoix this summer, and has not heard from her since.

The store windows now make the young folks wild with enthusiasm, and even some of the older folks are bad cutters when speculating as to the probability of getting some of the beautiful presents in the show windows.

M. M. Sanford, late treasurer of Maple River township, Emmet county, who "borrowed" more of the township funds than he could replace when called upon, has been convicted of embezzlement, and sentenced to the Ionia prison for two years.

If you are a farmer, and a slick, slick man comes along and wants your order for a corn-binder, let him come on and bind him and roll him into the nearest pond. He's a bad, bad man and will beat you out of your back teeth if you deal with him.

Nearly all colds are slight, at first, but their tendency is so lower the system that the sufferer becomes a ready victim to any prevalent disease. The use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, in the beginning of a cold, would guard against this danger.

No remedy for blood disorders can equal Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Though concentrated and powerful, this medicine is perfectly safe, and may be taken by children as well as adults. Physicians recommend it in preference to any other. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

L. S. Beardslee, champion bicycle rider of Grand Rapids, gave a display of fancy roller skating and bicycle riding at the Park rink on Saturday evening. The skating was good and the bicycle feats were splended, calling forth rounds of applause from the audience—Enterprise.

Geo. Pathrick of Des Moines, Iowa, and Miss Abbie Rose of Petoskey, were married last Thursday evening at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Rose, by Rev. C. T. Stout, of the Episcopal church. They immediately departed for their future home in Des Moines.

Last week's issue of the Charlevoix Journal contained the full report of the Supervisors' proceedings at the October session, which together with the county treasurer's report, made over a page of matter. Bro. Strang and his helpers made a hard and creditable week's work for in addition to the above, they had at least a page of holiday advts. to set.—Enterprise.

Wm. Scrougie and John Shapton, of Charlevoix, have bought the Commercial House livery barn, and have brought in several new horses and rigs, with more to follow. This firm drives the Charlevoix daily mail, which leaves there at 7 a. m., arriving here at 10 and returning at 2.30, reaching Charlevoix at 5.30. Parcels carried both ways.—Enterprise.

The Elk Rapids Progress is getting very anxious about a railroad, and we will be observed by the following: "Elk Rapids can get together as much cash as Charlevoix for a railroad and she ought to use it. We'll organize! We'll organize"....The D. C. & E. railroad from Kalkaska will open Elk Rapids' back door and it will make things look decidedly like if Elk Rapids don't 'git up and git.'"

The following from the Ogemaw Herald will bear repeating: "It is an unfortunate affliction for any community to have one or more women who go about from house to house slandering their neighbors. Such persons are usually—we by nature that without the least cause they will invent the most debasing yarns that their foul natures can imagine and then tell them for truth. Young and innocent girls are often thus almost ruined in character by these poisonous snakes in human form. A public whipping would benefit all such persons."

The Leap Year privilege is said to be six hundred and sixty years old, having been established 1228, by an act of the Scottish parliament in these words: "During the reign of her blessed majesty Margaret, every maiden lady of both high and low degree shall have liberty to speak to the man she likes. If he refuses to take her to be his wife, he shall be mulct to the sum of one hundred pounds or less, as his estate may be, except and always if he can make it appear that he is betrothed to another woman, then he shall be free." Leap Year '88 is slaping, a little over a week remains, and maidens fling away your modest fears and pop the question while you may. 'Tis your only chance till 1892. So before December is gone, and the man you wouldcheer their hearts and love them too. Oh, he tender wives and true. Bid the benedictine filling crow—all adieu.

The Peddler Nuisance.

The Michigan Tradesman says: Its a little significant that the first effect of the newly-organized East Jordan B. M. A. is the arrest and prosecution of a peddler. Fortified by the masterly opinion of Judge Cooley on the Coldwater peddling case, which was acquiesced in by all the other members of the supreme court, it is difficult to see wherein it is possible to secure convictions in any court, in case the ordinance under which the prosecution is brought is regular.

Referring to the attempt of the business men of East Jordan to curtail this evil, the Enterprise very appropriately remarks:

"The question of the peddler is at the present moment of particular interest to this community, and if people were only aware of the tricks of that fraternity, the peddler would soon be starved out, instead of enriched. First of all, the peddler has no locus standi—no position—and no particular field of labor in which he has a reputation at stake. He can swindle a district to his heart's content, and then seek fresh fields for further depredations. He has no fear of the vengeance of his victims, for they cannot find him, and he won't find them. With a pack full of gaudy trash, gifted to catch the eye of the unsuspecting victim of his designs, his designs, his oily tongue will foist off brass for gold, shoddy for wool, cotton for linen, mohair for silk, sham for real, all the way through, and at prices far above the genuine articles. The peddler has no opposition in his vicinity. There is no other pack or store on the same street, where the buyer can step in and find another man's quotations for the same article. He has no occasion to cut prices, for there is no one to cut against. He has it all his own way, and when he has gone and the neighbors step in and criticise the things he has left behind him, their remarks are not always conducive to the peace of mind of the buyer. The peddler pays no rent, no taxes, and owns not a cent's worth of property in the town. He has no interest in any improvement, no matter how good it is, if the whole place burned up in a night. When a poor man's horse dies, or the man himself meets with a sad accident, or a family is forced to be without food, does the peddler put his name down on the subscription list? Does he "pony up" for Fourth of July celebrations and other fetes? Never! But the resident merchant is there every time. He is the man who supports freely all these things, with the contents of his pocket-book, and his energy, and his influence. He is he who improves your town, makes business for the place, and causes the money to fly about where you can catch some of it—and he is the man to receive your support in return. All he makes is made honestly, and is spent again in the town. If a merchant makes enough to build him a residence or a store, that money is circulated again among the workers in wages and dealers, and when the building's up he pays his share of taxes on it, and thus every one receives benefit. Look at the bridge, the town hall, the graded streets, the sidewalks and the waterworks—who pays for all these? Why, the heavily taxed store-keeper, not the peddler. Is it wise to pay a "Wandering Jew" $7 for a wringer, when for $5 your own merchants can sell you a better one?"

NATIONAL LAW MAKERS.

Discussion of the Tariff Continued—Bills Introduced in the House.

The Senate resumed consideration of the tariff bill, on the 15th inst., the pending business being on Mr. Harris' amendment to reduce the duty on beans, grapes, fruit, nuts, sugar, etc., and all educational shapes of tin to stand from one and one-tenth cents per pound to one cent per pound. Several amendments were offered, all of which were voted down. Among the bills following by the House and vote red were the following: By Lawler (Ill.)—Creating a pension of $12 a month for all soldiers and sailors and widows who are 70 years of age. By Morse (Mass.)—To repeal the interstate commerce law. By Macdonald—For a constitutional convention in the Territory of North Dakota. By Chipman—To provide for the compilation of telegraph, cable and signal statistics. Also—For a ship and Superior, and authorizing the construction of a railway bridge across the Detroit River. By Clardy (Mo.)—Appropriating $15,000 for the improvement of the St. Louis harbor. By Cockrelle (Ohio)—Making Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery. By Cockrelle (Ohio)—For the admission of the state of Idaho. By McAdoo (N. J.)—Proposing a constitutional amendment providing for uniformity as to the day for electing President and Vice President, and providing that no other officer save Representatives in Congress shall be chosen. A resolution was introduced referred looking to an investigation and a repealing of certain election frauds and contributing money for campaign purposes.

ANOTHER CHICAGO TRAGEDY.

A Young Engineer Kills the Object of His Affections, Then Suicides.

J. J. Martin, a young engineer employed in Chicago, became infatuated with Mrs. Mary Ill, with whom he was boarding, and though repulsed by the woman, who was living pleasantly with her husband, seemed to become more madly in love with her. He entered Mrs. Merrill's house after being ordered out, and finding her standing at her household duties in company with a chambermaid, Hattie Birk, drew a revolver, and fired two shots at the latter, neither of which took effect. He then turned the weapon upon Mrs. Merrill with fatal effect, one ball crashing through her head, causing death in a minute. Martin then placed the smoking revolver to his temple, pulled the trigger, and fell dead.

DYNAMITE FOR A DISTILLERY.

Unknown Parties Fail in Their Efforts to Blow Up a Chicago Still House.

An act of murderous incendiarism, which had it succeeded, would have eclipsed the havoc of the Haymarket bomb, was attempted in Chicago. Sheffield's distillery was the scene of the attempted outrage. The distillery proper comprises a block of irregular buildings, lying between Lincoln street and the river. On the east side of the building runs a three-storied structure, used as a warehouse, store-rooms, and spirit-rooms. In this section are stored nearly 20,000 gallons of whisky and high proof spirits. Walls three to four feet thick divide this portion of the building into sections. The entire place is left under the charge of United States Government officials. A terrific explosion, sounding like thunder, took place a dozen men were at work in the building. The fuse to the bombs, except in one instance, went out, thus averting a terrible catastrophe. The bombs were placed on top of the building directly over the high proof liquors, and the one that exploded tore a large hole in the roof, but fortunately did not ignite the liquors. The work was by unknown parties.

BLOWN TO ATOMS.

The Chicago Oat Meal Factory of David Oliver Destroyed, with Many Lives.

A terrible explosion occurred on the West Side, Chicago, completely demolishing the oatmeal mills of David Oliver, on North Halsted street, and wrecking adjacent buildings. The scene about the explosion was one of the wildest description. Sensational rumors were current that the explosion was caused by dynamite, and the more conservative believe it occurred in the engine-room. Fifty persons are reported to have perished in the fire that followed the explosion. The financial loss will exceed $100,000.

Condition of the Wheat Crop.

The following appeared in the last issue of the Farmers' Review, of Chicago. The summarized reports from correspondents in four principal wheat-growing states indicate a considerable reduction in the area seeded this fall to winter wheat. The present condition of winter wheat is reported as good in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Kentucky, fair in Wisconsin, and fair to good in Michigan, Missouri, and Kansas.

A Terrible Confession.

Henrich Schanz is reported to have made confession of that in 1844 he and a man named Schultz burned the village of Colverte in Prussia, a member of persons perishing in the flames. Schanz fled to America, but, he says, Schultz remained and is now a wealthy merchant at Colverte. The German consul at Cincinnati has been notified of the confession.

New Free-Delivery Postoffices.

The Postmaster General has ordered the establishment of the free-delivery system at the following named postoffices: Chippewa Falls, Wis.; Crawfordsville, Ind.; Elyria, Ohio; Fremont, Ohio; Muncie, Ind.; Nebraska City, Neb.; Pine Bluffs, Ark.; Red Wing, Minn.; Spokane Falls, W. T.; Walla Walla, W. T.; and Warren, Ohio.

THE WHITECHAPEL MURDERER.

A Notorious Adventurer Suspicioned of the Crime, Believed to Be in Chicago.

Dr. Tumblety, who has become notorious through his detention in London under suspicion of being the Whitechapel murderer, is thought to be somewhere in Chicago. He is 5 ft. 5 in. and has a to be have friends there. He was in terror of his life in New York because of the bitter feeling against him among the English residents of that city. Dr. Tumblety was a well-known figure in Brooklyn, N. Y., between 1860 and 1868. At that time he was a man of 40 years, of fair and great dark eyes, with long, soft, silky hair. He was a fine-looking man, with an imposing manner. He posed as an Indian doctor, and was a constant sufferer from asthma. It was also understood that he had been troubled much by a Chinese, from whose tells he had been endeavoring to extricate himself for some time.

A FRIGHTFUL DEATH.

Terrible Suffering from the Explosion of Molten Metal.

An explosion of a ladle of molten metal at Carnegie's works, at Homestead, Pa., fatally burned John Swetzer, a workman aged 28 years. John Werley, a fellow-old boy, and seriously injured Michael Work, John Simson, and A. L. Stokes, three Polish workmen, the last three being engaged in moving a ladle containing five tons of hot metal, and was unexpectedly upset, scattering the molten iron over the men. Swetzer's body was burned to a crisp. Young Werley was badly burned about the head, breast, and legs. The injuries of the others were painful, but they will recover.

ELECTION RETURNS.

The Official Figures from Several States.

The official canvass of the vote of Washington Territory gives J. R. Allen (Rep.), for Congress, 26,291; Charles S. Voorhees (Dem.), 18,929; E. S. Greene (Pro.), 1,137. The Legislature will be almost solidly Republican.

The Nebraska State Convention of the Woman's Suffrage Association elected the officers for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. C. B. Colby; of Beatrice; Secretary, Miss Isabel Bond, of Lincoln; Treasurer, Mrs. M. E. Lozier, of Lincoln.

The official plurality for Harrison in Maine is 32,235. Harrison's plurality in Illinois is 22,202, and Fifer's plurality is 12,547.

GERMANS BEGIN FIGHTING.

Coast Villages Destroyed by Hostile Ships of War.

A dispatch from Zanzibar says:

A French steamer has arrived to arrive here in connection with the blockade. Coast villages belonging to Germany have been burned by the Germans. It is reported that the Germans have lost 200 killed and wounded. The Germans have also been engaged with French traders, and having two guns, opened fire on the French steamer, killing 30 yards from the German company's fortified station. The French fired back, killing the German man-of-war then boarded the French steamer, stripping her of her colors, houses. A decisive engagement is imminent.

WENT TO BED TO SHOOT HIMSELF.

An Ohio Farmer Postpones a Pleasure Trip to Commit Suicide.

Joseph McCullough, aged 50, a well-to-do farmer residing in Poland Township, near Youngstown, Ohio, ordered his buggy to be ready at the station, expressing an intention of visiting a friend in Youngstown. He then went to his room, and, locking the door, shot himself in the head twice with his revolver, inflicting fatal wounds. He had been drinking for several days, which is made the cause of his temporary insanity' theory. He left a family.

INSTANTLY KILLED.

Two Philadelphians Were on the Wrong Side of the Bridge.

William Elkins, a well-known carpenter and builder, and William H. Polk, also a carpenter and builder, both of Philadelphia, Pa., were crushed and instantly killed by the Washington express on the Pennsylvania Railroad, near Newtown, Pa., while attempted to cross the track on which they had been walking to Newtown Junction, and have been coming in an opposite direction at a high rate of speed, struck them and hurled them high into the air, causing almost instant death.

CHARGED WITH THE BRIGADE.

A Survivor of the Famous Six Hundred Dies at Indianapolis.

There lies in the city hospital of Indianapolis, Ind., suffering with fever, an aged man, bent and crippled with age, who has an eventful history. He is one of the very six hundred who rode "into the valley of death" who made that awful charge at Balaklava "into the mouth of hell," celebrated by Tennyson's poem, "The Charge of the Light Brigade." He has papers establishing his identity and identity, but he is feeble, fell sick while putting natural gas pipes in houses.

SCHOOL BUILDING BURNED.

The Normal at Lock Haven, Pa., Destroyed by Fire.

The Central State Normal School building, in Lock Haven, Pa., was totally destroyed by fire. One hundred boarding students, most of whom were in the building at the time, were safely removed. The building was a wood, four stories high, and cost $150,000. The amount of insurance is said to be small. The total number of students attending the school over two hundred. Many of them lost their books, clothes, and valuables.

GEN. HARRISON'S CONTRIBUTION.

The President-Elect Helps Buy Bricks for a Connecticut Chapel.

A chapel is about to be built at Berlin Station, near New Haven, Conn. The money to pay for it has been raised by ladies who had gone about securing the names of persons who would pay for one brick or more which are to go into the chapel. One of the ladies wrote to President-elect Harrison and asked him to buy some bricks. He did so, sending $2. Two bricks are to be marked with his name and put in the corner of the building.

FOUND MURDERED IN A CREEK.

Ellis Johns' Death and the Arrest of Two Negroes on Suspicion.

The body of Ellis Y. Johns, who disappeared from Wyoming, Pa., was found in a creek with the skull fractured. It is supposed that he was murdered and the body thrown into the creek. Two negroes named Mason have been arrested on suspicion of having assaulted Charles McCall and robbed him of his horses.

WEARY OF LIVING.

G. W. T. Adams of the Empire Freight Line Commits Suicide.

G. W. T. Adams, agent of the Empire Freight Line, at Lafayette, Ind., and formerly with the freight department of the Cincinnati, Hamilton, Dayton, and Chicago Railway, died from the effects of strychnine taken with suicidal intent. He lingered about twenty hours unconscious, all efforts to arouse him being futile. He left a letter addressed to his brother-in-law, J. C. Tucker of Chicago, asking him to pay his debts with his life insurance, which would be ample. He closed the letter by saying: "This letter will end my life." He had told his friends of his intention of ending life, and his act was not a surprise to them. He had drank hard for several months, and was a constant sufferer from asthma. It was also understood that he had been troubled much by a Chinese, from whose tells he had been endeavoring to extricate himself for some time.

ITS IMPORTANCE MINIMIZED.

Opinions of Indiana Veterans on the Revolt in the Grand Army of the Republic.

(Indianapolis (Ind.) telegram.)

The so-called split in the Grand Army of the Republic, which originated here, continues an uproar not these in veteran circles and with the press. Comments on the movement has been greatly exaggerated by the Eastern press, particularly on all sides. The Evening News (independent) says that the organization of Democratic soldiers is so far of less importance than it has been represented. Enough that has been said regarding it are based upon information received from Adjutant-General Stewart, who is among Democrats who belong to the Grand Army, and who knows that of them are in sympathy with the movement, and do not informs the press of the fact. Scouts in saying that politics has been introduced into the order. Mr. Fairbanks, one of the ex-commanders of George H. Thomas Post, who was prominently mentioned in organizing Democratic soldiers during the campaign than any other man in the party, is not a member of the association formed here. Mr. Fairbanks, Mr. Stewart, and John H. Foster are all members of the Union Veteran Legion, which was organized to join it. There are many other Democratic soldiers who are not members of the G. A. R., which was ordered by the National Encampment, Mr. Mitchell and others. Mr. Foster, who is Prosecuting Attorney for Marion County, and Mr. Stewart, who is Adjutant-General, are both Democrats, and say that during all the time I have held office I have not heard a word of politics, nor, at any time, in any shape, manner, or form, introduced into the work of the Post. Politics should not be introduced into church organizations, and I do not think it should be introduced into political organization than the order of Mr. Mitchell and others, who have formed it."

Colonel L. N. Walker, Assistant Adjutant General of the G. A. R., in charge of Illinois, sent the following pointed statement to the Associated Press:

"I want to enter a protest against the speculation and interview regarding Democrats in the Eastern press, about a decided split in the Grand Army. It is all bosh. Nothing of the kind has occurred, and Republicans will find out that Democrats are to be relied on in their support of the order than now. There are a lot of disappointed Democrats who had have succeeded in getting themselves adjutants, quartermasters, and other high-standing, and never had, in the G. A. R., the pull to do it. Democrats in Illinois are loyalists, and have been engineered by half a dozen disappointed men, who, if they been able to secure the attendance of Democrats, would have made a show of numbers. I speak as a member of the G. A. R. No Democrat of any importance in the order, and I am a Democrat, a member of the G. A. R., can be found opposing the order, and the statement is made to injure the party that political faith have personally and by interest influenced the order, and that Democrat politicians. The Department of Indiana is all right."

GRAND ARMY ORDERS.

Various Appointments Made and Instructions Issued.

(Kansas City (Mo.) telegram.)

General Order No. 4 of the Grand Army of the Republic, issued at Kansas City, by R. Schneider, of Prescott, A. T., is as follows: Pursuant to the authority vested in me by the Constitution and Laws, I hereby call of Administration from Arizona. The order gives instructions to the Department Generals changing the time of closing their annual inspection from Dec. 31 to June 30. The report of the Pension Committee, of which Commander-in-Chief Fairchild is chairman, and the Pension Committee, George I. Merrill, Lawrence, Mass.; Jas. Tanner, Brooklyn, N. Y.; John S. Cooper, Dayton, Ohio; John W. Evans, Sycamore, Ill.; and Richard W. Blue, Plainfield, Ind., will be considered at the membership, which was ordered by the National Encampment, and is now ready for issue, and has been copyrighted by the Department of the Republic.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS

IMPORTANT MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACT UPON.

At the Nation's Capital—What Has Been Done by the Senate and House—Matters Disposed of and Not Considered.

A bill for the establishment in the Department of a Bureau of Immigration, the discussion of which occupied the Senate on the 15th inst., was passed by a decisive majority, and by unanimous consent. It has a large number of provisions. Senators Mason, Plumb, Pettigrew, and Representative Mutchler introduced bills to provide for the relief of the Mississippi River, brought up, as usual, by the Louisiana levees. Senator Plumb's bill appropriates $5,000,000 for the north banks last year just before the Mississippi River Commission, and $1,000,000 for the south bank, and provides for the future by a tax on the commerce of the river. Senator Pettigrew introduced a petition of citizens of North Dakota, Dakota, and Montana, and the Governors of Dakota and Montana, and the Governor of Dakota, and the Governor of Dakota Territories, Representatives in Congress, and Delegates, and Senators, proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators by the people, every Senator to be the direct votes of the people, and the time of each State to count the votes in the Presidential and Vice Presidential election, and the Senate, Representatives, and Delegates to meet on the second Monday in December next succeeding the meeting of the electors, and to make the holding of any time of office of Senator, Representative, and Delegate to the Senate, and for the election of President and Vice President.

When the tariff bill was taken up in the Senate, Senator Harris moved that the Senate substitute for the Mills bill as the text of the tariff bill, and that the first section, "Sec. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, A MINORITY PRESIDENT

The official canvass of the popular vote for president shows that Grover Cleveland is elected by the people by nearly ninety-six thousand votes, although by the electoral system Benjamin Harrison will be declared elected. This is not the first time the evils of the electoral system have become apparent in the overturning of the popular will, but there is no hope of a change by the party who has gained power by the present system. Not until the party in power has a safe majority of the popular as well as the electoral vote will there be any hope of reform.

If the president and vice president were elected by a popular vote, a vote in one state would count as much as a vote in another. Now it does not. There would not be the specially bitter contests as witnessed this year in New York, Michigan, Indiana, and other close states. There would no longer be a "solid" democratic south against a solid republican north or west. The work of the canvass would be distributed among all the states where it would do the most good, and the vote of a republican negro would count just as much in Tennessee or Mississippi as it now does in Indiana. The colonization of voters from one district or state to another would be stopped, so far as the presidential issue is concerned.

While we do not claim that any change from the present system will be entirely free from fraud and illegal voting, we would like to know what fraud can be greater than overturning by the juggling of the law the votes cast by the people, and declared to be legal and according to law by the various states.

How long will the people submit to such a law?

WILDCAT HUNTING.

The Delights of This Sport Entertainingly Told.

Wildcat hunting is very exciting, especially for the cat. Once in Mendocino county, Cal., I was enjoying a few days' quail shooting at a farmhouse where was a large and sociable dog. His father was a setter and his mother a bull terrier, and the combination of inherited qualities made this dog peculiar. If I took him hunting with me the setter instinct prompted him to rush around through the brush and scare off every bird within half a mile, and if I slipped away without letting him know, the faithful bull terrier quality would tend to come out in company with a large piece of my leg when I returned home.

SAFE WAY TO CARRY A GUN.

One evening I was returning from a hunt with that dog. He had enjoyed the hunt so much that not a quail had remained in the county. Suddenly he plunged forward; there was a quick rush and a scrabble, and I beheld a huge wildcat joined on the flesh of a small tree just out of the dog's reach. Emotion swelled wildly in the cat's tail and freeze ruled the dog. I stopped back a rod, extracted most of the shot from one barrel and sprinkled the cat in the region of the jumpers. He came out of the tree and came suddenly, and next minute there was a whirlwind of fur and agony under that tree, and mingled sounds informed me that both the cat and the dog had ascertained that something was wrong. There was a combination of clawing and yowling, spitting and snapping, revolving and rough and tumble excitement which lasted about a minute, and then a peaceful hush succeeded, during which the sculpture blew away the cloud of dust and hair and disclosed what was left of the dog lying serenely at peace with the trivial remains of the cat, and both so mixed as to be inseparable.

The trouble with that dog was that his pedigree was contradictory. His setter instinct prompted him to let go the cat and run, and his bull terrier instinct prompted him to hold on, lie down and chew, and before he could make up his mind whether he ought to obey his father or his mother he died.

There is nothing so necessary to a sportsman as a thoroughbred, well broken dog.

Always purchase a pedigree with the dog. A full blooded dog with a reliable pedigree costs about $100, which allows $140.50 for the pedigree and fifty cents for the dog.

The best dog for hunting purposes in this section is a pointer.

Some pointers are very expensive. I heard the other day that Cyrus Field once got a pointer from Jay Gould which cost him $250,000.—Henry Guy Carleton in New York World.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustacian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B. For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 16eo1y

The Real Secret of the unprecedented success of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS may be found in two distinguishing characteristics, which more than anything else have contributed to its remarkable growth.

FIRST—It is a Daily Paper for Busy People. The people of the busy West appreciate keenly the necessity of an intelligent knowledge of the world's daily doings, but they are too busy to waste valuable time in searching through a cumbrous "double sheet" newspaper for the real news of art, literature, science, religion, politics, and the thousand and one things which make up modern civilization. They want news—all the news—but they don't want it concealed in an overpowering mass of the trivial and commonplace. It is because THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is "all wheat and no chaff," that its circulation is over a million a week."

SECOND—It is an Independent, Truth-telling Newspaper. The people demand a fair, impartial, independent newspaper, which gives all the news, and gives it free from the taint of partisan bias. With no mere political aim to gratify, no "axe to grind," the impartial, independent newspaper may truly be "guide, philosopher and friend" to honest men of every creed, political faith, and life is why THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS has to day a circulation of over a million a week."

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS now adds to these two comprehensive elements of popularity, a third, in its unparalleled reduction of price to ONE CENT A DAY.

It is always large enough—never too large. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is for sale by all newsdealers at One Cent per copy, or will be mailed, postage paid, for $3.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. The former and mechanic can now afford, as well as the merchant and professional man, to have his metropolitan daily.

SOME RUSSIAN PALACES.

TSARSKOE-SELO, MADE FAMOUS BY CATHERINE THE GREAT.

Its Magnificent Banquet Hall, Ball-Room and Other Features—Peterhoff Palace and Its Many Beauties—A Relic of Peter the Great.

BY WILLIAM ELEROY CURTIS.

The most beautiful place in all Russia is the park which surrounds the famous palace of Catherine the Great at Tsarskoe-Selo, although the palace itself, so far as the exterior is concerned, is an architectural nightmare, and, as one author remarks, presents almost every fault that an architect should avoid. There is no comfort in any one of the imperial residences, and a great deal of bad taste everywhere, but nowhere is there so little comfort and so much bad taste as at the favorite residence of Catherine, although nearly as much money was spent upon it as upon the Winter Palace or the Hermitage.

Now so closely associated with the memory of Catherine the Great as Tsarskoe-Selo and there is no other example of her extravagance so vivid. The vast pile is a monument to the wicked wastefulness of a woman who did not know the meaning of either pleasure or money, but gratified every whim at the cost of the treasury and the happiness of her subjects.

The palace grounds cover 2,000 acres, beautifully laid out, filled with statuary in marble and bronze, and even now require 60 men to keep them in order. A large triumphal arch was built in the park by Alexander I. after the retreat from France, and there are other ornaments erected by the Czars and Czarinas, including a Turkish bath, who ordered the plans for a royal residence and built a portion of the present palace. There is a large lake, with a beautiful bath-house in the shape of a mosque, with golden roof and spire. Its waters the Czars have given fetes in boats and barges. One portion of the lake is laid out in the Chinese fashion, with curious Chinese bridges, and an entire Chinese village, which is occupied by the families of the gardeners. There is a museum filled with armor and other trophies of war, mostly captured from the Turks and Eastern khans.

Catherine's Banquets.

There is a pavilion, to, in which Catherine used to give banquets, long, narrow tables enclosed by glass, with a wide portico supported by granite pillars extending around it. Here Catherine used to gather the poets, painters, actors, and inventors who were her royal guests, and set them to quarreling until the quarrel, while she laughed till the tears rolled down her cheeks. Tsarskoe-Selo was to her what Sans-Souci was to Frederick the Great if Prussia, a hospital, an asylum, a banqueting hall, and a hermitage.

I saw here the great chair in which she used to travel around the ground when she got so fat she could not walk, and there is a little step upon the side of it on which the court jester, a little dwarf, used to stand and accompany her on her drives. The other part of the pavilion set up for each guest was a little table, and after dinner and spoiled till morning, and Catherine's splendid card table is there still, with the top, as used together in diameter, covered with pearls as large as the end of your finger. There are more than two thousand of them the attendant told me, and of course the table is almost priceless.

The Riches of the Palace.

The front of the palace is painted green, white and yellow, a most hideous combination, slapped on without regard to architecture or even mathematical proportion. The domes of the palace and chapel are also like the old Russian domes, and the roof is painted blue.

The interior, although full of the most expensive materials, is so utterly absurd in its arrangement and decoration that one feels nothing but disgust and indignation that money should be wasted in such a way. The room which is lined with amber I have already described, but there are other rooms that represent quite as much money, if not if they are not so unique. There is the famous Chinese room, which is entirely walls are lined with veneering of that material, and there is a room lined and vaulted with jasper; another of malachite, another with its walls and ceilings covered with tortoise shell; and still another done in mother-of-pearl in the same manner.

The ballroom of Catherine is white, the floor is ceiling with panels of white and gold, the ceiling is elaborately carved and gilded, and is one of the most effective rooms in the house. There are Chinese rooms finished in teak, Egyptian rooms furnished in woods from the Nile, Japanese rooms finished in bamboo and filled with the rarest Japanese work in porcelain, ivory, wood, and bronze. There is a similar room done in Chinese porcelain, with pillars of purple glass. There are rooms of all sizes and shapes finished in glass of different hues, the walls, ceiling, and floors all of the same material.

The number of paintings and statuary in Gobelin tapestry is almost countless. The ballroom of Catherine contains a profusion of ceiling pictures, and there seems to be a portrait of Catherine in every one of the five hundred apartments. There is enough gold in the gilded walls and woodwork to make thousands of the Czar's subjects comfortable for life, and the precious stones with which the doors, windows, pictures, frames, mantels, cabinets, and other furniture are ornamented would give a year's schooling to all the children in Russia.

A Magnificent Ball-Room.

The ball-room is 320 feet long and 120 wide, without a pillar to destroy the effect of its carved and gilded walls and ceilings and its magnificent chandeliers. It is one of the finest halls in the world, and the floor of 25,000 square feet is polished like glass. It covers acres and acres of the finest marquetry on the floors of the palace, and in the apartments occupied by Prince Potemkin in Catharine's time the floors are of mosaic of the finest and most artistic kind, like that in the Cathedral of St. Marks at Venice. It was done by a Venetian artist at the orders of Catherine while the Prince was off in some war, and cost 100 rubles for every square inch.

It was in this palace that the Princess Dolgorouki lived in state during the reign of the last Czar, and he showed her her apartments, which were fit for an emperor, much more luxurious and elegant than those of the Czar's legitimate wife at the Winter Palace. The room in which she was married to Alexander three weeks before his assassination, by her priest and confessor, in the presence of only three witnesses, was also opened for us, and one of the servants who saw the ceremony described it for our benefit. The marriage was kept secret until after the death of the Czar, but was then fully proved by the evidence of the priest and the witnesses.

The Palace of Peterhoff.

The present Czar has not entered the palace at Tsarskoe-Selo since his father's death. All its associations are repulsive to him. He lives either at Gatchina or Peterhoff, the latter being second in extent to the palace I have just described, and quite as hideous in its architecture. It is also painted the same distressing yellow color, varied by lines of dark brown. Within the palace, however, are some beautiful tapestries, colossal treasures of art in oil, bronze, marble, gold, and silver, and a number of battle pieces which are exceedingly fine.

One room is filled from ceiling to floor with the portraits of 365 Russian soldiers, each in a different posture. This was one of the freaks of Catherine. Count Orloff, one of her lovers, was a fine portrait artist, and, similar to him, she ordered him to travel through the empire and paint the picture of every soldier he saw. In one room at the Peterhoff Palace are the results of his work, for Catherine never permitted him to return to Petersburg. Here, too, are two portraits of Catherine, opposite each other in the apartments she once occupied. In one she appears stark naked in the other arrayed in her coronation robes and wearing her imperial crown. She was a queer woman.

On the broad flight of stairs which leads to the palace at Peterhoff the Czar Paul, the husband of Catharine, the man who broughs her from Germany to rule over the Russian people, was stripped of all his clothing but his shirt by Count Orloff and other of his captors, and taken to Petersburg to die.

The Czarina's Birthday Party.

The grounds about the palace are extensive and shaded by some beautiful trees. The location is much superior to that of Tsarskoe-Selo, as it lies upon the Gulf of Finland, and the palace has a fine marine prospect. Since the time of Catharine it has been the habit of the sovereigns to illuminate the grounds once a year on the birthday of the Empress, and we happened to be in Petersburg to assist at this festival, which is always the grandest of the summer, and the grandest I ever saw or expect to see. Nearly two hundred years' experience in illuminating the grounds, an annation on the part of the artists in charge of the preparations to exact each other, and an unlimited amount of money, for the Czarina never yet what a thing cost, has made the annual illumination of Peterhoff a thing to be seen.

Commencing with the fountains which are possibly surpassed by those at Versailles, but are more expensive and unique, the lights, myriads of them, were introduced twilight, or under the water, so that the effect in the air, and then falls shivering into trillions of pearls to the water beneath. From the samson fountain to the sea stands a bank of canal, each side of which is a row of fountains that when in operation look like poplar trees, and are about as tall.

Some Remarkable Effects.

In another basin the jets are so arranged in the center and on the sides as to form the Russian coat-of-arms in water. There is another peculiar effect produced by arranging little brass tubes about the diameter of a lead pencil and of different lengths, from two inches to three feet, so as to form a dome of water. The supply for turning on there is a fountain in the shape of a pyramid—a pyramid of water—the tip of which is twelve or fourteen feet high, and the base of about twelve feet square. This, when illuminated in the manner in which I have described with lights of different colors, is worth seeing to put it very mildly. Just imagine, if you can, a pyramid of purple water, or green or gold or crimson. But the greatest curiosity of all, in the way of illusions, is a great tree of bronze. Every limb and branch is a conduit, every leaf a jet, and when the water is turned on the effect is most remarkable.

The tree is about 40 feet high, water-tress and these magnificent jets, sometimes two, or three feet in diameter, then fountains that spray over some hundred nymphs, and cascades in the most unexpected places. Basins of water, with blossoming flowers and foliage plants in the center, like moonlight gardens, statuary of bronze and marble, artistic arbors and kiosks, some of marbled brass, and every possible form of shrubbery and flowers.

A Relic of Peter the Great.

Within the park of Peterhoff is a memorable place, known as Montplaisir, a low French-looking cottage which was the summer home of Peter the Great, and in which he spent much time in study, apart from the world but his peasant wife who cooked his meals for him. It was here that the restless, imperious spirit rested—the only place where he could be at ease, and where he could be a child for a time, as much older as he was in the midst of a forest, for it was surrounded by the cottages and palace a fine collection of paintings, being examples of the Dutch masters, which Peter collected in his visit to Holland. One of these pictures represents him as a ship wright at Saardam. In one of the apartments is a chair in which he used to sit when he was at work, and a table at which he ate. Some of the tools he used are there, and the room is a museum of relics of the great Czar. Within the palace, however, are some beautiful tapestries, colossal treasures of art in oil, bronze, marble, gold, and silver, and a number of battle pieces which are exceedingly fine.

The Latest Fashions Discussed, and Suggestions Made in Relation to Becoming Toilets—Few Fickle Fashions Considered and Requirements.

[NEW YORK CORRESPONDENCE.]

There is a radical change for the smaller, and therefore [illegible] in the theater and in other places of assemblage, where outspreading millinery has been in the manner in vogue. Women who this time last year sought a head-covering for the genuine protection it would afford them were in despair. The folly of fashion was carried to a still more hideous end in artistic extreme by the brims, which were out of all proportion to their slender high crowns and face trimmings. This season all the exaggerations are modified. The bonnet shield the back of the head almost entirely, which the horse-shoe style of last year did not. The bonnet is now really a bonnet, and not the toy head-gear that it was. But it must not be imagined that the visual obstructiveness of millinery is shaded, because, quite fortunately, a proportion of our women will go into audiences wearing hats, instead of bonnets, and here are pictures of brand-new hats that are fully as big as their predecessors. These are hats of lace, and are something entirely new. [illegible] Broadway and Fifth Avenue would not to-day disclose half a dozen examples of them, for they have only just been brought home from London, and are barely yet adopted into vogue by our fashionable women. It will be seen in the two models sketched that they are peculiar in having their brims turned up all round, and in being surmounted by wide, loose bows of chiffon, which sway and flap in December winds like the sails of a bark. Feathers and flowers and ribbons are not to be put on them, and if there is any other adornment than the bows it consists, as in the first picture, of a whole bird.

There are often sharp talks by sympathetic persons upon the fashion of wearing hats as mentioned, but I do not suppose it will have the slightest effect upon the sex who it is—give that it is chic to walk or drive about the streets with a distorted little mass of feathers, bonnet and flowers, perched in an impossible position upon a head-dress which is admittedly several inches too high. The mother birds are killed, they say, and the young left to die of starvation because certain women insist that it shall be so. Yet how gentle, and sympathetic, and tender these very women pretend to be when it suits their convenience. That a nineteenth-century woman is so utterly selfish, so hopelessly without brains or feeling, and so incapable of appreciating the genuine chivalry of humanity, that she must have birds to adorn herself with, is beyond belief. This terrible indictment against our women is far too sweeping. They are simply thoughtless, and to put it tersely, led by the nose by the milliner. She tells them birds are the fashion, therefore they wear birds, but I believe that the majority of them have a sort of vague idea that the bird is made somewhere, just as lucifer matches head trimmings and bonnets are made. If they could only be persuaded that the fashion was an ugly one, and ungraceful one it would quickly be dropped.

A HAT OF BOWS.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE.

Fashion Small Talk.

It will be observed that, with all the frivolity of detail in the outlines of bodices and skirts, there is uniformity in the length of the latter, which implies clear the eyes, that we have so long been exempt from the once fashionable dragging of skirts in the streets, that it is to be hoped the enormity will never be revived. These agreeable and comfortable short skirts naturally necessitate careful attention to foot-gear and ankles feel, but the sirability of neat hosiery. The very latest caprice in ties and slippers, too pretty to be seen, and that in size, time the Empress Elizabeth that lady, being, particularly fond of a certain rose-bush, ordered that no one should pluck a flower from it but herself. To enforce her order she asked the commandant of Gatchina to put a sentinel there to warn people away. The order was executed and never revoked, so each morning, summer and winter, for more than a hundred and twenty-five years, in frost, war and in time of peace, in storm and sunshine, when the palace was empty and when it was full, this sentinel was seen to be on his post. He died, and until the rosebush has gone, and there another, and no one knows why, the sentinel goes. Not long ago a man who had served in the army and had been wounded in the war of 1812 was put in his place, and then another, and another, and another, and so on, and no one knows why. Just as well kept at his post until the investigation of the curious office being reported to the Czar the order of Elizabeth was revoked.

The Palace with a Tragedy.

There is a beautiful drive through what is called the English garden, so called from its having been laid out by an English architect, to the palace of Pavlovsk, the scene of some of the most tragic episodes in Russian history. The palace was originally built by the notorious Prince Menchikoff, who was the lover of Catherine I., and in his time "the little Czar," because of his diminutive stature, Peter II., was made to sign his name to a document in which he admitted the most extreme subservience to Peter was the cause of his rapid rise, and that his fiance at court, for he used to let Peter sleep with his wife and family in his dirty work. His influence continued through the reign of his master, and Catherine, who ordered her son and successor on the throne, Peter II., to make his daughter, his daughter; but he refused to do so, and as soon as he died, Menchikoff, his wife, his daughter and all, to Siberia, and confiscated the property of the father and the Prince.

Near Peterhoff the Czar has a small private park, in which he often spends a morning in preference to the larger and more showy one. It was formerly the residence of one of his uncles, and was purchased by the present Czar. As the imperial family are there the court resides at Peterhoff. There is still another private palace called Gatchina, and the family are there a good deal. While I was in Petersburg the Czar was at Peterhoff, and the King of Greece and his family were occupying Gatchina.

The Kitten Heals the Puppy.

Then the sister of the Czar, which a cat shows when, having been caught in a position from which there is no escape, she calmly sits down to face out the threat of a dog, is a marvelous thing. Puss will sit on a door-step, or on a street doorstep attacked by a dog ten times her size, as apparently self-possessed as if she were in her mistress' lap. If she turns tail and runs down the street, she is lost; the dog will have a sure advantage of her. Even as it is, if he could get up courage enough to seize her on the spot, he would be able to make short work of her. It is a case of life and death; but the whole air and attitude of the cat is one of pity and contemptible. "You dare not touch me, and you know it," is what the cat seems to tell the dog. But she is intensely on her guard, in spite of her air of perfect content. Her legs, concealed under her fur, are ready for a spring; her claws are unsheathed, and her eyes never for an instant from the dog; as he bounds from side to side, barking with consciousness of his superiority, puss follows with the keenest scrutiny. If he plucks up his courage to grab her, she is ready; she will sell her life dearly. She is waiting for her chance, and she does not miss it. The dog tries Fabian tactics, and withdraws a little, settling down upon his forepaws, growling ferociously as he does so. And then the sound of a dog's bark in the next street attracts his eyes and ears for a moment; and when puss looks back, the kitten is gone. He looks down the street and starts wildly in that direction, and finding no sign, heard fence just as a cat's tail—a unstrous tail for such a little cat—is vanishing over the top of it. The dog knows the cat showed not only more courage but more sense than he, and more generalship.—Boston Transcript.

Satisfied.

It takes a good deal to disturb the equanimity of a thoroughly well-ordered mind, as the following incident illustrates:

Old Aunt Sally Pratt, all her life a resident of a certain New England village, was one day sitting by her favorite window in an upper chamber of her house. The day was warm and Aunt Sally suddenly dropped asleep. The window was open, and, ten minutes later, the old lady fell forward and, to the horror of several persons who saw her, she fell out of the window to the ground below. When picked up she gathered herself together in an amazingly short time, glanced up at the window and said calmly:

"Well, well, I didn't set at that window an' wondered how it'd feel to go a-ridin' out on it, and I know. Well, well, well! Queer how things do turn out sometimes."

The fact that she had turned herself out of the window gave her no comfort, though she narrowly escaped being killed.

She Wanted Everything to Match.

Little Flossy was visiting her papa's sister, a maiden lady, in the country. The child was painfully impressed with the elegance and neatness of everything, and one day asked: "Aunt Maria, what makes you so neat and pretty all alike?" "Because I like to have everything match," replied the aunt. "Was that why you married papa? I have heard papa that you were trying awful hard to make a man out of your old widower" in town." asked innocent Flossy.

Total ordinary expenditures	$270,000,000.00
Estimated surplus, applicable to purchase of bonds	$104,000,000.00

FISCAL YEAR 1890.

The revenues of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, are thus estimated upon the basis of existing laws:

From customs	$217,000,000.00
From internal revenue	127,000,000.00
From sales of public lands	10,000,000.00
From fees—consular, letters-patent, and land	2,250,000.00
From miscellaneous sources	21,250,000.00
Total estimated receipts	$377,000,000.00

The estimates of expenditures for the same period, as submitted by the several executive departments and offices, are as follows:

Civil and miscellaneous expenses	$80,033,022.48
Pensions	81,758,700.00
Indians	4,406,414.39
Military establishment	5,949,553.61
Navy department	20,906,949.60
Permanent annual appropriations:
Sinking fund	47,800,000.00
Interest on public debt	38,000,000.00
Refunding—customs, internal revenue, taxes, etc	12,464,990.00
Collecting revenue from customs	5,500,000.00
Miscellaneous	4,907,555.12
Total estimated expenditures, including sinking fund	$323,567,488.54
Or an estimated surplus of	$53,432,511.66

Excluding the sinking fund, the estimated expenditures will be $275,767,488.54, showing a surplus of $101,232,511.66.

SINKING FUND.

The requirements of the act of Feb. 25, 1882 (R. S., 3694, 3695), establishing a sinking fund for the gradual extinguishment of the public debt, estimated for the current fiscal year at $47,800,000, have been thus far met by the redemption of treasury notes, fractional currency, and bonds of the United States, which had become, or were thereby made, subject to call. The total expenditure for the purchase of $38,839,513.88 at a cost to the sinking fund of $7,672,222.29 on the former and $38,537,163.88 on the latter loan.

SURPLUS REVENUE.

In the last annual report it was estimated that the revenues for the year to end June 30, 1889, would exceed the ordinary expenditures, not including the sinking fund, $119,000,000, and the following is the foregoing statement that such excess was in reality $119,612,116.09. The surplus for the year was thus the department estimate. It was also estimated in last report that the total surplus for the fiscal year to end June 30, 1890, would be $104,000,000. Judging from the actual expenditures for the first quarter of this fiscal year, and in the light of the foregoing statement of the business of November, it is probable that this estimate will prove to be even fairly accurate, and that the surplus will almost exactly equal the predicted sum.

The accumulated surplus on Sept. 30, 1889, was $96,844,853.84. The surplus revenues from that date to June 30, 1889, as estimated, are $8,365,208.35, making the total accumulation on June 30, 1889, which could be used in the purchase of bonds, $171,810,054.09; however, between said Sept. 30 and Nov. 22 $44,399,595.50 has been paid for bonds, consequently, if no more bonds were bought between now and June 30 next the surplus would then amount to $127,000,000. Upon the basis of appropriations recommended by the department, and upon the assumption that the receipts of the fiscal years to end June 30, 1889 and 1890, will be equal, the surplus revenues for the latter fiscal year will be $101,000,000, which, with the surplus revenues of the year and the surplus already accumulated, make a total of $228,000,000, which could be used during the next nine-teen months in the purchase of the interest-bearing debt, and which ought to be used for that purpose, unless the laws are so changed as to reduce the difference between revenues and expenditures by nearly that sum.

About $188,000,000 of the 4½ per cent bonds are now outstanding; they are payable at the option of the government, interest which will accrue on them from July 1, 1890, to maturity, on the dates and numbers ($25,000,000); consequently the interest on the bonds which will mature probably accrue before July 1, 1890, will be only the pro rata for those bonds and all the interest which would accrue upon the bonds which mature during the ensuing fiscal year.

The principal of the 4½ per cent bonds is now $280,000,000, and the interest which could accrue upon the bonds which will have to 1907 is about $500,000,000; a calculation will show that the present surplus revenue, if continued, would pay before 1900 all of the 4 per cent bonds and all of the 4½ per cent bonds, or all the money which is saved by the purchase bonds less the interest which would be observed to accrue but shorten the time when all the bonds may be purchased and paid. There seems to be no other way of so quickly and so easily reducing the public debt, although the reduction of the revenues by nearly that sum will be a serious matter.

Nothing seems to be needed than the foregoing statement to show the absolute necessity of a reduction of the revenues at the earliest possible date. To continue taxation at the rate of the last two years when such an investment is a cruel waste of the people's money.

Digest and Be Jolly.

Did ever any one see a jolly dyspeptic? We believe that dyspepsia is generally in great against the amount consumed. FARM AND GARDEN.

USEFUL HINTS TO YOUNG AND OLD FARMERS.

The "Box" Style of Building Popular in Some Sections Is Described, with Directions for Erecting a Neat Poultry House on This Plan.

A correspondent describes in The Poultry World a style of building used in some parts of the country called "box," the distinctive feature of which is that nostrils or glass are used. The expense is therefore reduced and a smooth surface is secured on the walls.

FIG. 1—FRAME OF POULTRY HOUSE.

A neat poultry house, built in this style and illustrated in the accompanying cut, is 12½ feet long, 6 feet wide, wall 6 feet high. The foundation is four tiv logs, each six inches in diameter, framed together, leveled and hewed straight on the outside. At each corner is then set up a sort of trough made by nailing the corner boards together. The four trough's are accurately nailed to the foundation, and, if necessary, stay lathed till the plates are fastened to them, when the building appears as in Fig. 1.

FIG. 2—"BOX" POULTRY HOUSE.

Spreading of the pieces is prevented by the beams, and across the ends of the building, from one corner board to the opposite, is nailed a plank, to which two end boards are nailed as the building is boarded up. Rafters and roof are added as in other buildings, but the rafters should be collar beamed.

Well Bred Mules.

Are the best shaped mules raised in Missouri or Kentucky? To this question American Agriculturist replies: Undoubtedly Kentucky carries off the palm in this respect, as the breeding of mules has been long conducted there. There are many intelligent mule breeders in Missouri, but the Kentucky stock has the general preference. Kentucky mules, upon an average, are worth $10 per head more than the Missouri mules, from the fact that they are better bred. There is more thoroughbred blood diffused among the horse stock generally of Kentucky and Tennessee than in any other states in the Union, thus giving a better class of mares to breed from than can be found outside of those two states. On the other hand the blood of the Clyde and Percheron mixed with the coarse Canadian is the foundation of a large number of the brood mares in the Northwest. They produce large, coarse, sluggish mules, not to be compared to the somewhat smaller, but clean limbed, active, high spirited mules out of well bred Kentucky mares. No animal shows the effects of good breeding more readily or to greater advantage than a mule.

To Prevent a Calf from Sucking.

The most effectual way to break a calf from sucking her dam, says Dixie Farmer, is to separate the calf entirely from the dam, but if this is not practicable or desirable make a muzzle for the calf as follows: Take long, sharp, flat beaded spikes in a piece of harness leather two inches wide and long enough to go round the muzzle of the calf. Stitch or tack another piece of leather to the back of the first so as to hold the spikes in position. Stitch into circular shape, and attach to the calf's nose by means of a headstall. The spikes should be about two inches apart and three inches long, and would be better if made of steel, which may be done by any blacksmith.

The Object of Experiment Stations.

The object of the national and state agricultural departments and experiment stations is the promotion of agriculture by such scientific investigations and careful experiments as farmers cannot make for themselves, and which require the skill of trained specialists. At the various stations that now exist in almost every state, analyses of commercial fertilizers are made, as well as experiments with growing crops and best methods of combating the numerous species of destructive insects. In short, everything pertaining to the success of agriculture is considered and reported on.

Noted horticulturists of the northwest express widely differing opinions of the value of the Russian apples.

Flowers in Washington City.

Proportionately more flowers are bought in Washington than any other city in the country. There are very few private conservatories, and the lovers of fragrance and beauty are forced to go to the florist for their buds and blossoms. In and out of the social season the florists do a thriving business. One in a few years made money enough to buy a big corner lot facing a prominent thoroughfare, and to erect a large building, the lower part of which he uses for his city storehouse and sales room. In the winter he gives weekly flower shows, and for his pains he has chairs to gaze at upon certain occasions, gaudy tablecloths, and great pots of ia Fingee roses. A number of wealthy people have contracts with him to regularly furnish palms, ferns and other rare plants. They are symmetrically placed in odd corners of drawing rooms, and as they lose their freshness and vigor they are taken away to the cooler nurseries, and other plants are substituted for them.

Strange to say, but few flowers are shipped to the florists from local points. In the winter all the rare flowers, including the more valuable kinds of roses, are bought by the florists in New York and Philadelphia. The roses are packed individually in wads of cotton wrapped in oil paper, covered with sawdust and well jolted. They quickly fade, of course, but they retain their beauty and perfume longer than with the first course of the menu at the first wedding on the order of dancing.—Chicago Herald.

CORNS IN HORSES' FEET.

Cause and Cure for These Troublesome Excrescences.

If a horse is supposed to have a corn, say Welby and Dale, let the shoe be removed the inside quarters of one, or both, fore feet upon being pared will show a strained, inflamed appearance. The horn will be soft and more spongy than other portions of the hoof. In bad or long neglected cases if you follow the corn with the knife you will come to suppuration. In all such cases one favorable condition is found—the horse stands upon a thick heeled shoe, and the frog of the hoof cannot reach the ground. The whole weight of the horse rests, not upon its natural, elastic support, but upon long, heavy heels and iron. This condition is a violation of natural laws, and a corn is the first and most easily managed consequence. The smith, whose ignorance of the anatomy of the organ he has disabled is the sole cause of the trouble, "cuts out the corn," and attributes the difficulty to weak feet, hard pavements, or gives any excuse he thinks may answer for the moment, and puts on, perhaps, a "bar shoe." He cannot tell why he puts on a bar shoe, but he knows it will give temporary relief, and the relief is in this wise: the bar must rest upon the frog, and the heels cut away to allow it to do so. This, by a chance conference of heavy iron, is yielding a part of the relief that nature designs. The true relief is in such a system of shoeing as will preserve the natural action of the foot. The natural action is with a low heel, to have the frog of the foot strike full upon the ground and press upward, against the downward action of the coffin bone, just as a spring acts when a weight is thrown upon it.

The horse's hoof, continues the authority quoted, is simply a boot inside of it is a true foot. The frog is only a part of the hoof that has a nervous connection with the living tissue inside the horn. Just above the frog is the sensitive frog, and on this rests the coffin bone. The vascular bone is connected with the hoof by elastic laminæ, and moves in the hoof by the action of the horse, having its natural rest upon the frog. If the horse stands upon a rim of iron, the center of the foot is unsupported; the points of the pressure are under each "wing" of the coffin bone. From lack of action the frog dries up and loses its function; the sensible frog sympathizes in this condition. Circulation and secretion are lessened. There is more or less fever, probably not perceived by the groom, or, if perceived, he "stuffs" the feet, inflammation begins at the points of pressure under the wings of the coffin bone, as the horse has a corn. The cure of this defect is obvious when the cause is stated; it is to shoe so that the horse will invariably stand upon his frog; this must be secured by the use of a shoe that will admit no other bearing, and the method known among horsemen as the foot-enough system. No horse can travel safely without the use of the frog.

Aside from its all essential necessity as the natural rest from the bony structure upon the ground, its expansive power in keeping the hoof from contracting upon the inclosed parts, and its promotion by its action of circulation of blood to the extremity of the hoof and consequent growth, the frog has a function always overlooked by the ignorant and disregarded by the unreflecting, in that it is the organ of touch. It is the only part of the hoof that communicates with the nervous system, and through that to the brain, and it is therefore the only means that the horse has of accurately determining his foothold upon the ground. In the common method of shoeing, the frog is taken out of action by the thickness of the shoe, and the horse is deprived of its use. Upon no muscle in the body is he more dependent for healthful, natural action, and from the moment the frog is displaced by the blacksmith's iron the decay of the horse's power begins. Contraction, quarter cracks, toe cracks, navicular disease, inflammation, and, more problematic than all else, corns usurp the free elasticity of nature, and the animal commences his downward course.

A Convenient Crane.

In Farm and Fireside is described a convenient crane for use on the farm. The runners are three and a half or four feet long and about flat for apart. The uprights, five feet or so high, are made of scantlings with a shoulder on the lower end to set firmly on the runners.

A FARM CRANE.

The upright block at the top is four by four inches, with notches to receive the top of the four uprights where they should be bolted. On top of this is a long heavy lever with a hook on the shorter end. The lever is held in place by a clamp similar to that shown in the cut by a notch in the head of the frame, or by other suitable devices.

What Farmers Tell One Another.

One of the last things written by the late E. P. Roe was a letter commending the "Bancroft" strawberry, whose vigor and hardiness he was testing. He said for those who like a sweet berry it leaves little to be desired in flavor.

"I believe the enterprising farmer will warm the water for his stock in the near future," says Waldo Brown.

Professor Samuel Johnson, of the agricultural college of Michigan, says: "I think that the experience of wheat growers generally will commend this rule: Try new varieties sparingly until convinced by repeated tests that they are adapted to your soil and latitude."

The editor of Gleanings in Bee Culture says: "The best conventions I ever attended were in the winter time, when it was so cold that nobody wanted to run outdoors, and some of them were held in small towns, with only a moderate number in attendance. I cannot remember one held on a fair ground that I thought was very much of a success, for the reasons mentioned, yet they might perhaps be a success after all."

Professor Henry claims that the important point in stock feeding is to constantly bear in mind that a young animal gives better returns for feed consumed than an old one. A pound of meal or a pound of hay adds more to the weight of a calf than to the same animal when grown.

The Favorite

Medicine for Throat and Lung Diseases has long been, and still is, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It cures Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and Asthma; relieves Irritation of the Larynx and Lungs; strengthens the Vocal Organs; relieves soreness of the Lungs; prevents Consumption, and, even in advanced stages of that disease, relieves Coughing and induces Sleep. There is no other preparation for diseases of the throat and lungs to be compared with this remedy.

My wife had a distressing cough, with pains in the side and breast. We tried various medicines, but none did her any good until I got a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has cured her. A neighbor, Mrs. Gleason, had the measles, and the cough was relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have no hesitation in recommending this

Cough Medicine

—the best the world knows."—R. Horton, Foreman *Herald*light, Morrillton, ARK.

"I have been afflicted with asthma for forty years, and last spring was taken with a violent cough which threatened to terminate my days. Every one pronounced me in consumption. I determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Its effect was magical. I was immediately relieved and continued to improve until entirely recovered."—Joel Rizard, Guilford, Conn.

"Six months ago I had a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, brought on by an excessive cough which deprived me of sleep and rest. I tried many remedies, but received no relief until I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It soon settled the medicine cured me."—Rev. E. Coburn, 19 Broad st., Lowell, Mass.

"For children afflicted with colds, coughs, sore throat, or croup, I know of no remedy which will give such speedy relief and permanent cure as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have found it, during the past year, in cases of Whooping Cough."—Jane Lovejoy, 1257 Washington st., Boston, Mass.

LOCAL NOTES AND NEWS.

Turn over a new leaf.

Did you get a present?

How did you enjoy your Christmas?

H. L. Brinks goes to Chicago this week on business.

What's the matter with some of our correspondents.

John Hull cut one of his feet quite seriously last Friday.

Alick Ross drew the fine $12 dressing case at Beaman's the first of the week.

A number of Charlevoix people attended a dance at Burgess Christmas night.

The Enterprise says that Isaac Vance, of Echo, commenced plowing last week.

If cheek had a money value, how many millionaires would there be in Charlevoix.

Moses Cooper has been sick several weeks, but was able to come to town last Saturday.

The dressing case at F. G. Hines & Co's was drawn by Geo. Bates. It was a fine one.

Some of the boys are letting up so as to be ready to swear off for a year by New Year.

The usual number of casualties are coming in of boys who were too previous on the ice.

Geo. Sherwood held the lucky number that drew the fine rocking chair put up by John Wagner.

Romey Emrey's number was the last out of the box and took home the dressing case from Cochran's.

We would like all the school teachers in the county to send us a monthly report of their schools.

Will Cooper moved this week his family to his fathers farm, and will try farming as his vocation next year.

To get an idea of her Christmas trade, Miss Todd required the services of three extra clerks the past week.

☞ James Hemmings, painter, has headquarters at the Ferguson house. All wanting work in his line are requested to call.

Mrs. R. Emrey received from her sister in Florida, a handsome gold watch, the finest present we have heard of this year.

The Pope Mfg. Co. of Boston, Mass., has sent us a very handy calender and memorandum pad, advertising the Columbia Bicycles and Tricycles.

After this week much less of our space will be devoted to advertisements. This will not be so gratifying to us as it may be to our readers.

The Petoskey Record says C. M. Burns received appointment as news agent on the D. M. & M. road and went to Marquette last week to report for duty.

The town board of Marion have appointed Geo. Anderson to the office of supervisor made vacant by the election of Mr. Ward to the office of county treasurer.

We understand that our juvenile friend, on proof reader H. H. Miller, has finally chosen the ministry as his profession. We wish him every reasonable success.—Enterprise.

Mrs. C. A. Strond, of Horton's Bay secretary of the Women Home Missionary Society, Cheboygan association, read a splendid paper at their annual meeting, held at Bellaire, Dec. 13.

☞ Call and get a sample copy of the 12-page New York Weekly World; a three-months' subscription given free for every $1.50 paid in advance for a year's subscription to the JOURNAL.

President Cleveland has promised Mr. Ford he will come to Michigan next summer for trout fishing. What a pleasure it could have if he would come to Charlevoix and angle in the many trout streams hereabouts.

A strong effort is being made to get a mail route from Bellaire to East Jordan and it will undoubtedly be successful as the people hereabouts do not ask for a thing until they are entitled to it, and then they ask hard—and get it.—Bellaire Advertiser.

W. H. Francis has an order from a New York firm for 30,000 cedar corks, for fish nets. He has also just filled an order for 8,000 for a Milwaukee firm, and will make several thousand for the home trade. This would look as if his corks gave satisfaction, and makes busy times in his shop.

An excellent report is made of Mr. Hall's supper for the firemen Monday evening. Every arrangement was complete, the menu was all that could be asked for the occasion, and a full corps of competent waiters served the guests without any delay.

Coleman the peddler, who commenced suit against the president of this village for damages for detention while under arrest for violation of a village ordinance, failed to show up when the time for trial came, and the case was thrown out. Mr. peddler was wise, for preparations had been made to lay him in good shape that time.—Enterprise.

The Gordon hung on bravely to the last, and made her final trip on Thursday. She will lay at Charlevoix for the winter and be on the route again, bright and early, as soon as the ice is soft enough to creep through. This little boat has done good business, and Capt. Grand has made a host of new friends, all of whom we reckon will stand by him in the future.—Enterprise.

For full measure and running over, a fine example may be found in Demorest's Monthly Magazine for January which has just arrived. The water-color, "The Birth of the New Year," is beautifully executed, and forms a valuable addition to the series which is promised to run during the year. The second of the superbly illustrated New York City articles is even more attractive than the first, and one of the great advantages of these articles is that each is complete in itself. If you want to know all about the great metropolis, you should buy "Demorest's" and visit the city through its pages. You will find it a rich treat. We wish every girl could read the articles on "Reading for Girls," that are now appearing, and the mothers, too, could profit by them. In fact, every member of the family, from baby up to the "lord and master," is provided for, making it in the fullest sense, a "Family Magazine." Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th street, N. Y.

Scribner's Magazine completes its second year and fourth volume with a Christmas number containing nineteen articles in prose and verse—twelve of them fully illustrated by well-known artists and engravers. Among the artist represented are Elihu Vedder, J. Alden Weir, W. Hamilton Gibson, John La Farge, Robert Blum, George Hitchcock, C. Jay Taylor, and M. J. Burns. The number is rich in beautiful decorations and pictures. The literature deals with unusually attractive phases of life and art especially fitted for the Christmas season. The fiction includes stories of adventure and sentiment; the general articles treat of stained-glass windows, the Adirondacks in winter, and Botticelli; there are several elaborately illustrated poems; and Lester Wallack's reminiscences are concluded. Robert Louis Stevenson, H. C. Bunner, Will H. Low, Rebecca Harding Davis, and Hamilton Wright Mabie are among the contributors.

A toothpick factory is one of the flourishing wood-working establishments at Harbor Springs, Mich., and it is one of the largest factories of the kind in the country. White birch is exclusively used in the manufacture of the toothpicks, and about 7,500,000 are turned out daily. The logs are sawed up into bolts each twenty eight inches inches in length, then thoroughly steamed and cut into veneer. The veneer is cut into long ribbons three inches in width, and these ribbons, eight or ten at a time, are run through the toothpick machinery, coming out at the other end, the perfect pieces falling into one basket and the broken pieces into another to be reused. The picks are packed into boxes, 1,500 in a box, by girls, mostly comely looking young squaws, and are then packed into cases, and finally into big boxes, ready for shipment to all parts of the world. The white birch toothpicks are very neat and clean in appearance, sweet to the taste, and there is a wide market for them. The goods sell at the factory at $1.90 a case of 150,000.—Timberman.

HIRAM HATRICK ON FAMILY CARRIAGES.

BY SARAH LEWIS.

"Father day when I tell ye to down for Lizy's jewelry,

Tildy! I should drive ye crazy jiggle the sights thar is to see.

Did the bigger bunting of 'em all Fox used for mony a day

Was the Mayor's hoss-cover carriage, thar I heard the people say

Cost a week a thousand dollars—countin' out in the front a dozen sot an' oom pors follerin' behind?

It was just a sight to see the critter bobbin' up an down

Like a actor in the circkis that they call the fancy clown.

Now of thet air's fuss an' humming wun's every travelin' show

Wear jes' sich I'd as leaf spend a nickel for to ain't know.

Ain't a wagon good enough for folks or it has got the springs?

Ain't Lizy ashamed serve as well as them air buffler things

Don't the Bible tell us, Tildy, how it all hed Thet the lowdest an' swifter rid Jerusalem's streets upon an ass?

Sez I, what's a fancy carriage or its thoughts for the best,

But fur an' a good example an' we ortor to do the rest?

Thar's a time an' He has drawed it, of we want to foller Him,

An' it never hin he did of we go fallerin' every whim.

Now I'd rather up an' foot it for a dozen mile ye see,

Than to be a-hoppin' up an' down like monkeys in a tree,

Thar's the Squire's single buggy, thet is rather But it wouldn't hurt him either of hard travel on his feet,

He's a talkin' things too easy for the solid rules of health,

An' his income increases in purportion to his wealth.

Fer example, take the Joneses, who could best the village head,

Ef they hed a wind to, an' jest give an easy ride

Them's the sorter people, Tildy, as might hev a carriage fine.

But ole Jones is quite determined to keep on the good old line,

Hy, it seems a sorter curious Daddy Larkins fer to go

Fur to pick a fidley carriage, so thet he kin pass on he

"When I go to meetin', Sundys, an' kin set his head an' say;

"Well, my honey, Brother Hatrick! aren't we pun'ty style to-day?"

What! Hev ye hed a carriage, Tildy? Did I hear ye tell it right?

By thunder! I took the critter! Eggsy!, ye hev thrun me in a fright!

Now, how air we goin' to fix it—air pore Lizy's Joggin' long in our ole wagon—Tildy, I'll be fer bein' skeered! Mercy! Mercy!

I'd a-druv off some cattle an' come out in bigger style,

Ef I'd a-hitched a carriage thet'll make the kaboodle smile.

Yes, we ortor hev a carriage—pesain' over what I said,

Fer we'll go in boat the Larkins folks, an' keep ahead.—Chicago Ledger.

MY NEAREST NEIGHBOR.

BY A. BOOMER.

I have always regarded Mr. Jonas McGuffin as a sort of harmless individual, and did not think he was anything out of the common run until the other evening.

McGuffin is my next door neighbor, on the south, and has but recently moved into his house.

He is a benevolent-looking old gentleman, of about fifty summers, and has struggled through existence from birth with a totally bald head.

He says his grandfather was scalped by the Indians out West somewhere, and he thinks it "looks" and has become hereditary in the family.

But McGuffin's bald head has nothing to do with this story; but I thought I would mention it, as a bald-headed man's story generally carries more of an air of truth with it than one told by those supplied with a hirsute covering.

I stayed at home, one fine day last week, to prune our aged cherry tree in the yard, and had just finished the job, and seated myself under the shade of the tree to rest myself with a quiet smoke and meditation on the happiness and appetites of those who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, when McGuffin, who had been critically watching the pruning operation from his porch, came up to the fence and looked over at me.

"You didn't see the remains of my cat in your yard this morning, did you?" he queried, interlocutorily, as he helped himself to a seat on the top rail, and vigorously scoured his head with a large cotton handkerchief.

I told him I didn't, and asked him why.

"I didn't know. I fired most of my furniture and clothes out on the fence last night, and I ought to have killed some of 'em. Hlast the cussed cats!" and he hopped his face more vigorously than ever.

"I guess you don't like cats," I venured to remark.

"I should say not—that is," he hastily added, "I never saw but one I admired, and that was a mechanical one; could lick any dog on the hill down home." (It may be as well to state that his home is somewhere in Maine.)

I said nothing, but watched him through the rings of tobacco smoke.

"I never saw anything like it," he continued. "A tramp printer by the name of Billjoy wandered into the town down there one summer, and getting a situation on the Oxford County Bear, married and settled down. He was the greatest man on inventions I ever saw; always putterin' away at something or other.

"He had a large house-cat which met with a sudden death one night. He took the skin, stuffed it, and fixed a sort of internal machine in it, and had it arranged so you could wind it up, set it a-going on the ground, and the way that poor, stuffed cat would run, jump, claw, spit and growl, would have made you feel 'creepy' all over. Billjoy set it one night for some cats, and the next morning he found the remains of nine cats in his yard, and the struggle had only broken a tooth in the ratchet wheel that regulated the jaw of the mechanical tom-cat.

"Billjoy put some new steel sinews and muscles into his cat, together with a new set of chilli-t iron teeth, and used to go around the country in the summer scooping in the skeels from the cats they killed by matching his cat against their dogs.

"A good deal of interest was manifested by the citizens in town about the cat, and when it became known that young Jenkins, son of Amasiah Jenkins, the grocer, was training his dog, 'Plunger,' who was a cross between a bulldog and a mastiff, and weighed fifty pounds, to fight a match to a finish with Billjoy's cat, which weighed about twelve pounds, the whole town was on the qui vive to speak.

"But I should explain, apostrophize McGuffin, 'why no one interfered in the preparations for the fight. The tender-hearted knew that the cat was only stuffed; wouldn't hurt it anyway, and as Jenkins' dog was occasionally in the habit of lunching off stray children who ventured into the store, people really were eager to see the dog worsted, and one or two of the deacons of the church were so anxious to help out the good cause that several very liberal bets were made as to the outcome of the fight.

"Meanwhile, preparations went vigorously on, and as Jenkins had read somewhere about the toughening effects of bear, the dog was bathed and scrubbed in a strong solution of borax every morning, to toughen the skin against the steel claws of the cat, Jenkins said.

"A town meeting was called, and a legal holiday proclaimed for the day of the fight, so as to enable all who wished to see the match. A wave of immorality seemed to have swept over the place. Maidens, old and young, held sewing-circles to discuss the matter, and at the meeting of the Woman's Helping Hand Society it was resolved, That we attend the fight in a body, in full regalia and heavy marching order.

"Thursday was appointed by the selectmen as a day for the meet, and as the sun rose over the low mountains in the east, and kissed the opening buds on the sturdy maple tree, it shone upon a long chain of people, in vehicles of all kinds, on horseback and on foot, hurrying toward Pennyroyal Grove, where the contest was to be held.

"A place had been roped off, a reserve of constables detailed to keep back the crowd, and the Oxford Buffalo Brass Band given a station in a large hay-rack just capacied of a load of maidens from the Tarsell Academy.

"Ground had been rented for booths, and the merry crush of the ripe peanut, the gurgle of the red lemonade, and the steady chaunt and clop of the pink sprree gum was heard on every side, the appearance of the grove suggesting an early spring circus or a fair.

"McGuffin paused, and as he had looked rather longingly at my pipe, I passed it over to him, and after refilling the stem off under his arm and petting it in running order, he continued:

"Presently Billjoy arrived with his cat under his arm, attended by a coterie of friends, followed shortly after by a team containing Jenkins and the dog. After the dog had been put in the ring and tied to a stake, Col. Bangs, of the Daily Bangle, was chosen referee, and he proceeded at once to business. Onplacing the cat in the ring, the dog howled and tore at his chain in vain endeavor to reach the cat, and his yating on the hookings jumped to 10 to 1.

"The excitement was intense, even the Tarsell maidens letting their cries of gum rent heedlessly in their mouths. Presently Billjoy stepped into the ring, braced the cat's legs apart, pressed a spring, and jumped back with an 'all right; let'er go.'

"With a snap the leash was thrown off the dog and he gave a rush and jump toward the cat. He seized an ear and tugged; not a move. He let go his grip and stared.

"Then heard a subdued sort of rumble in the bowels of the cat, and suddenly it gave a bound of about six feet up in the air, and came down in its tracks. The next moment the dog made a rush, grabbed the cat by the throat, and commenced to worry it. Still not a sign of displeasure on the part of the cat.

"One of the Jesseys was about to hedge on his bet, when suddenly something snapped in the cat's neck, and the quiet spectacle of a large, overgrown dog, holding a little inoffensive cat by the throat, disappeared, and nothing was visible but a gray and tan halo of hair, claws, and dirt, with a few sparks of fire, as the chilled iron teeth of the cat crunched on some particularly hard bone.

"Round and round the ring went the revolving cyclone halo, bumping up against the stakes, and occasionally making an entire circuit without touching one of the posts. That is how it generally went, you understand, but this time the dog had to have the bustle compressed and disarranged by the girting of an entire enclosure, and the yelping of the spectators was very appreciable. He grew on stylish young women in the street in his very elegantly adorned. The woven material, adapting itself perfectly to the form of the wearer, carries its patterns of overlaid decoration very seductively. Graceful girls know this very well, and are therefore likely to use the jersey, in some form or other, for a long time to come.

"The girl of the promenade—that is, she who most gracefully arrays herself for the walk in Broadway and Fifth Avenue was one that appealed attractively to the eye, and consequently there was a striking display of new autumn toilets. The reason which decided the choice for portraiture was that several positive novelties were embodied in her costume, and that she had a modification of the helmet. It will be seen that the fore-and-aft visors are retained, but instead of the smooth, stiff, and unpicturesque crown of the masculine hat, a soft military arrangement of fabric has been substituted. This is a distinct improvement, and it will popularize the helmet hat among those who otherwise would avoid it as too stiff and unbecoming. The next noteworthy thing in this toilet is the jersey, of a sort which is likely to be worn for a while in lieu of a street jacket. It is striped laterally in the woven material, the colors being a soft black, and its aspect distinguished by black bound white pockets. Four of these are attached at the breast and just forward of the hips. They are conspicuous, but nothing in them the wearer carries an ornamental handkerchief, another for use, a purse, and enough other little things to make up a collection that would rival the contents of a schoolboy's trousers pockets. The arrangement of the over-jersey is peculiar, the portion of the jersey below the belt being divided at the rear, so that the curvature is visible to the waist. But we are here descriptive, and not critical, and it is to be regretted that a fact that embroideries, embossed designs and appliqué patterns are wrought into fronts of gowns more richly than ever before.

An eccentricity of a wealthy woman of fashion, and one in which they are able to distinguished themselves from people with shorter purses, is an indulgence in very costly buttons. The show cases in the city goods stores are devoted to these things also in jewelry stores, so fine is the workmanship, and so varied the devices of the buttons displayed. These are used for all purposes to which exterior buttons are ordinarily devoted. They are being put on dresses for balls and receptions, and on gowns and wraps for the street. Jewels as rare as genuine pearls and diamonds are often set in them, and many come with places left for the insertion of precious stones. Some of our dames possessing rich stocks of gems are having them transferred to buttons. In many cases artists in jewelry are employed to originate designs, so that a woman who can afford enough to pay for the luxury may button herself with garments quite individually. Real ivory is carved exquisitely, gold and silver are wrought intricately, and, indeed, the best talent of the day in this work is just now being employed in the production of beautiful buttons. If the enterprising thief of the period should contrive to rob a woman of a pair of nippers, lie in wait for the lady with a fortune in her buttons and deftly nip them off her, he will miss the tribution of ornament would be wiser. Matters of Especial Interest to Ladies Who Desire Becoming and Fashionable Toilets—The Art of Dressing Economically and Well.

The matinee girl is foremost just now as an exponent of the newest styles in walking costumes. The one here delineated was chosen carefully and without bias from something like five hundred assembled in a Broadway theater. The afternoon was bright, the performance was one that appealed attractively to the sex, and consequently there was a striking display of new autumn toilets. The reason which decided the choice for portraiture was that several positive novelties were embodied in her costume, and that she had a modification of the helmet. STOCKINGS with knees of tiny flowers in place of clocking have just come out in Paris to match flowered gowns.

THE Alpine hat of felt, with binding and band of handsome ribbon, and the low-crowned turban of felt, are wet-faced, and all a glitter with pin-tongue and jewelled ornaments, are the two kinds of headgear most affected by the Parisian dressers for autumn wear.

SEALSKIN garments are in straight shapes, just reaching to the hips. The Russian sealskin and the astrakhan render them most stylish; the combination of furs, although seemingly incongruous, is very attractive. Jaunty little turbans of the furs complete the ensemble.

THE long silky-haired llama fur is seen again after many years as a trimming for outer garments. It is used as a trimming for showy dressy outer garments, as is the more common black llama on fur from goat of Thibet; perhaps it is more truly a hair than a fur. It makes a handsome sort of trimming when not too much is used.

THE outline of the figure in all the Directoire models is hidden, and this is so true of the outer garment as it is of the corsages of costumes. It seems rather a pity to spoil the effect of a faultless figure by the drapery of the corsage, but fashion's decrees must be followed and the col-skin corsage is at present entirely passe.

Water Before and at Meals.

Opinions differ as to the effect of the free ingestion of water at meal times, but the view generally prevails that it dilutes the gastric juice and so retards digestion. Apart from the fact that a moderate delay in the process by no means a disadvantage, as Sir William Roberts has shown in his explanation of the popularity of tea or coffee, it is more than doubtful whether any such effect is in reality produced. When ingested during meals, water may do good by washing out the digested food and by exposing the undigested part more thoroughly to the action of the digestive ferments.

Pepsin is a catalytic body, and a given quantity will work equally efficiently, provided the peptones are removed as they are formed. The good effects of water drunk freely at meals have, however, another beneficial result—it washes away the mucus which is secreted by the mucous membranes during the intervals, and favors peristalsis of the whole alimentary tract. The membrane thus cleansed is in a much better condition to receive food and convert it into soluble compounds.

The accumulation of mucus is specially marked in the morning, when the gastric juice has been secreted in a thick tenacious layer. Food entering a stomach at this time will become covered with this tenacious mucus, and for a time protects it from the action of the gastric ferments and so retards digestion. The viscid contents, instead of coalescing in the morning before breakfast, is not suitable for peristalsis. Exercise before partaking of a meal stimulates the circulation of the blood through the vessels. A glass of water washes out the mucus, partially dilutes the stomach contents, aids digestion, and prepares the alimentary canal for the reception of food. Experience has shown that non-irritating substances directly thrown into the "cubical" stomach, and even if food be present, they only mix with it to a slight extent.—British Medical Journal.

An African Gentleman.

HATEVER may be said or thought of the manhood of the fair-sexed Black Continent in general, there is at least one chief in Congo Africa who is worthy to bear the title of gentleman, if the testimony of Sir Samuel Baker, Emin Pasha and Henry M. Stanley is to be believed. His name is Aziba, and he rules over the region made famous in Rider Haggard's remarkable novel, "She." He is described as a portly, well-dressed man of middle age, who is possessed of inborn tact, never asks for presents, and is so inquisitive about the private affairs of his guests. Since the Arabs began trading in the country, they have been able to procure many articles of European manufacture. Dr. Emin says that Anfini is the only negro prince he has met to whom clothing and wine are directly thrown. Aziba's palace is built now by employed in the production of beautiful buttons. BE NEVER CAME BACK.

The Story of the Man Who Called to Lick the Editor.

There once existed in the large cities of the land a newspaper whose proprietor was so firm a believer in aggressive, sensational journalism that he offered a new hat as a prize for any reporter that would succeed in getting himself kicked bodily out of doors while in pursuit of news. Half the staff promptly sent in their resignations, and the proprietor was thus enabled to hire a new staff at a much reduced rate of wages

TAKE A RECEIPT.

Whenever a payment is made on subscription in wood or produce, we want every person so paying to call at the office and get a receipt for the same, so that proper credit may be given on the books. Unless this is done, mistakes and misunderstandings are almost sure to follow. Please remember it.

THE President and Mrs. Cleveland celebrated Christmas quietly at the white house.

WM. HARTSUFF has given notice of his intention to contest Congressman Whiting's certificate of election.

GRAND RAPIDS capitalists are organizing a transportation company to run a line of steamboats from Grand Haven to Mackinac, touching all principal intermediate points, to better enable Grand Rapids jobbing houses to compete for the trade of northern Michigan.

Bay City republicans celebrated the defeat for representative of S. O. Fisher by burning him in effigy, and he will show his appreciation of Bay City civilization by withdrawing all his business interests from that city. This may not cause the grass to grow on the streets of Bay City, but it will hurt the town a great deal more than the stupid performance that provoked it will benefit the place. A more contemptible performance than subjecting a man of Mr Fisher's standing and character to such an indignity as this, simply because he was the candidate of the unsuccessful party, in the election, could not well be conceived of. Mr Fisher cannot be blamed for shaking from his feet the dust of the dirty town whose the outrage was perpetrated.—Marquette Journal.

Scientific American.

Perhaps some of our readers have visited the extensive offices of the Scientific American, at 361 Broadway New York, but many have not, and to such the following account may be of interest. A correspondent who recently had this pleasure informs us that he was greatly surprised at the magnitude of the establishment. It suggested to his mind an enormous insurance company or banking house. At the main office, which is principally devoted to the patent business—forming as it does so important a part of the establishment—may be seen the members of the firm and their able corps of examiners. Ready access to the principals is afforded to every one; and here may be seen inventors from all parts of the country showing their models and drawings, and explaining their inventions. The models left by inventors form a large and interesting collection, and are kept in a room by themselves. The large corps of draughtsmen who prepare the patent drawings are for the most part experienced mechanics, electricians, or engineers, some of them having been connected with the U. S. Patent Office. Most of the correspondence is carried on by type writers, and this necessitates a separate department, where a number of experienced female type writers and stenographers are constantly employed. The dark room, where the photographs of the patent drawings are copied, and where the photographs for the architectural department are produced, is also on this floor. On the fifth or above may be found the editorial rooms, compositors' and subscription room, and the engravers' department.

The architectural department occupies the top floor, and here may be seen the manager of this department, and also a number of draughtsmen at work preparing the plans and general designs for the Architect and Builder edition of the Scientific American, which is published monthly, and has attained a widespread circulation. The printing of the papers is carried on in a separate building. At the entrance of the main office, which alone occupies a floor space of 60 by 165 feet, may be seen one of Prof. Draper's remarkable recording barometers, with which instrument a complete record is kept of the atmospheric changes. This barometer was built specially for the Scientific American, and it is a remarkably fine and sensitive as well as a very expensive instrument.

Some idea may be had of the extent of the business done at the office of the Scientific American when we state that over one hundred persons are employed by Munn & Co. on their several publications and in their extensive patent departments.

WHAT'S THE MATTER

—WITH THE—

DETROIT FREE PRESS.

Three years ago at the encampment of the Michigan State troops at Brighton was first heard the high-pitched inquiry: "What's the matter with this one?" and then the stentorian reply, "He's all right!" The interrogatory and reply, expressive and taking, spread over the land, being made esoterically prominent by Michigan men at Chicago last summer, and as a rallying cry was vociferously repeated all through the political campaign.

As the Free Press comes under the discriminating eye of the reader we seem to hear this question:

"What's the matter with the Free Press?"

And its vast army of readers outshout a Peace Jubilee chorus in responding:

"Oh, the Free Press is All Right!"

And in verity the Free Press is all right.

What would you have good reader? The telegraphic news from the four quarters of the globe, the doings of kings and kaisers, parliaments and people?

Do you wish the run of the exchange, the fluctuations of Wall st., the talk of the Bourse, the price of the products of the soil, and the fabric of man's skill?

Do you wait for the proceedings of the courts, the—shall we say—doings of congress, the news of the government, the amazing variety of intelligence gathered from all parts of the continent and related at length?

Are you interested in Michigan news, the movements of notable people, a picture of life in the great cities as seondy a corps of intelligent reporters and vividly reproduced in all the varying phases of nature?

Will editorial discussion of topics of general interest, keenly analyzed and comprehensible, interest you?

Will it please you to read of matters pertaining to "The Household" or "The Farm and Garden."

Are you entertained by discussion on music and the drama, in discussion of plays, in the gossip of the stage? Are you interested in general art matters?

Do you find pleasure in reading of what is going on in the world of athletics?

Or will your fancy be stirred, your sentiment secured, your emotions touched, your humor tickled, your faculties improved by the whole fully interesting stories, poems, essays anecdotes and manified exposition of human nature, which are to be found in its columns, original all of them, contributed by scores of writers of intellect and cultivation; brighter and larger array than many a magazine can boast of, and not duplicated in any other paper, but to be read in the Free Press alone?

Do you like to know what is going on in the social world, and what are the latest society "fads?"

If these things cannot satisfy, appease, interest and instruct you, then it is hardly within the power of those who labor solely to produce a pure, refined and high class, modern newspaper to do so.

But if you will take the trouble to compare the paper with any other which may come before you, no matter from what place, near or remote, bearing in mind that the daily is furnished every day in the year for Seven Dollars and the Weekly (10 to 12 pages) each week for a year for One Dollar, your unbiased judgment in response to "What's the matter with The Free Press?" cannot be other than this; The Free Press is one of the best and cheapest family newspapers in the world, therefore,

"The Free Press is all right."

Scriber's Magazine,

For 1889.

The publishers of Scribner's Magazine aim to make it the most attractive and enterprising of periodicals, while at all times preserving its high literary character. 20,000 new readers have been drawn to it during the past six months by the increased excellence of its contents (notably the military articles), and it is to be hoped our efforts will merit a share of the success. The illustrations will show some new effects, and nothing to make Scribner's Magazine attractive and interesting will be neglected.

THE RAILROAD ARTICLES will be continued by several very striking papers; one especially interesting by Ex-Postmaster-General Thomas L. James on "The Railway Postal Service." Illustrated.

MR. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON'S serial novel "The Master of Ballantrae," will run through the greater part of the year.

A CORRESPONDENCE and collection of manuscript memoirs relating to J. F. Millet and a famous group of modern FRENCH PAINTERS will furnish the substance of several articles. Illustrated.

The brief and papers written last year by Robert Louis Stevenson, will be replaced by equally interesting contributions by different famous authors. Mr. Thomas Bailey Aldrich will write the first of them for the January number.

Many valuable LITERARY ARTICLES will appear; a paper on Walter Scott's "Knight of Work, illustrated from original MSS., a second "Duel of Old Books," by Mrs. James T. Fields, and many other articles equally noteworthy. Illustrated.

Articles on ART SUBJECTS will be a feature. Papers are arranged to appear by Clarence Cook, E. H. Blashfield, Austin Dobson, and many others. Illustrated.

FISHING ARTICLES describing sport in the best fishing grounds will appear. Salmon, Winninish, Bass, and Tarpon are the subjects now arranged. The authors are well-known sportsmen. Illustrated.

ILLUSTRATED ARTICLES of great variety, touching upon all manner of subjects, travel, biography, description, etc., will appear but one of the conventional commonplace sort. Illustrated.

Among the most interesting in the list of scientific papers for the year will be a remarkable article by Professor John Trowbridge, upon the most recent developments and use of PHOTOGRAPHY. Illustrated.

A class of articles which has proved of special interest will be continued by a group of papers upon ELECTRICITY in its most recent applications, by eminent authorities; a remarkable paper on DEEP MINING, and other interesting papers. Other illustrations.

A SPECIAL OFFER to cover last year's numbers, which include all the Railway articles, is as follows:

A year's subscription (1889) and the numbers for 1888. $4.50

A year's subscription (1889) and the numbers for 1888, bound cloth, $6.00

$3.00 a year; 25 cents a number.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and auditory tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are promptly cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (white) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 10eOW

A Sound Legal Opinion.

E. Raimbolt, Attorney, and County Atty., Clay Co., Texas, says: "Have used Electric Bitters with decided benefit. My brother also was very low with malarial fever and jaundice but was cured by timely use of this medicine. An satisfied Electric bitters saved his life."

Mr. D. I. Stevenson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, saying, "I sincerely believe he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters.

This great remedy will ward off, as well as cure all malarial diseases, and for Kidney, liver and stomach disorders stands unequaled. Price 50c, and $1. at G. Hunt & Co.'s drug store. 4

The first services in the basement of the new Baptist church were held last Sunday morning, and were a dedication of the room, and the building, to the worship of God. Rev. Mr. Clark's text were the words, "Worship God," and his remarks were very interesting and appropriate to the occasion. There is every reason to believe that the room will make as comfortable a place for worship as any in town. The colored glass windows are now in place, and are a novelty in style and pleasing effect. The society are to be congratulated on their success thus far in the construction of their house of worship.

A father can give son no better present than a year's subscription to the Scientific American. Many youths having an inventive or ingenious turn of mind have received lasting benefit from carefully reading this most instructive paper. It is written in a popular style. Nearly every number contains the description of new engineering and mechanical works of magnitude, has one or more articles on subjects in experimental science. It is published by the well-known firm of Munn & Co., of 361 Broadway, N. Y., who have been its publishers for more than forty years. Its subscription price of $3.00 a year, or $1.00 for four months, puts it within the reach of every one.

Eveline.

Ironton, Dec. 26—Tuesday was Christmas, and oh! the turkeys had to suffer. The day passed off quiet in this town.

Having been away from home for some time, we arrived home to spend Christmas, and find things looking natural with the exception that some moving has been done about town.

"Are we going to have any snow this winter?" is being heard from nearly everybody. Some say "No; not to amount to much." We say wait untill near spring.

The dance given at David Snyder's on Christmas eve, was a success. It lasted until nearly day-break.

Miss Mary Johnson spent Christmas at home.

Peter Tuttle who is working at Pellston, spent Christmas at home.

Joe Tuttle returned home from Pellston last week, and will remain.

South Arm was frozen over down to the mouth, but has again opened up as far as can be seen from Ironton.

J. M. Harris and wife, of Boyne City, spent Christmas with Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Noyes, at Ironton.

Information Wanted.

MR. EDITOR.—Will you inform your readers, for you know everything, what Bro. Smith means when he says in last week's issue of the Sentinel in his article on old time dances, "and the balls became more rescreche? What does the word "rescreche" mean? Some of your readers are not familiar with anything but English. Is it Indian?

Again, Bro. Dixon in the Enterprise of last week in an article on peddlers, says the peddler has no locus standi, which he explains in modiately as meaning "no place of standing." Locus, undoubtedly is the Latin word for "place," but where did he get that word "standi?" It is not enough to confuse the English without setting about at once to coin a word in the language to which he resorts?

Anyway, Mr. Editor, wouldn't the pure English language be better and more intelligible in both these cases?

The Christmas dance at Solter's hall was a grand success and a very enjoyable time for the many who attended.

The Christmas tree groaned under its load and the presents it contained made many hearts glad.

Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Hamlin are visiting in Grand Rapids.

Mrs. Jennie Wade and children of Grand Rapids are visiting at Mr. Wm. Baker's.

Henry Baker and wife of Charlevoix, spent Christmas at his father's Mr. Wm. Baker's.

The Fire Department Ball.

The boys of the fire department are congratulating themselves on the success of their Christmas ball, both socially and financially. One hundred and two numbers were sold, and nothing occurred to mar the pleasure of the occasion. The supper at the Fountain City house was a credit to Landlord Ball and his corps of assistants. The committee of arrangements as well as the whole department are deserving of praise for their efforts to give a first-class entertainment.

Advertising.

It may be worth while to communicate a nothing to readers on the idea of an old one on the subject. They are simply and briefly as follows: The first utility of frequent and regular advertising consists in this: there is at all times a large class of persons, both in country and town, who have no fixed place for the purchase of certain necessary articles and are ready to be swayed and drawn towards any particular place which is brought under their notice. Indifferent to all, they yield without hesitation to the first who asks. Then, in the country, a considerable number of persons who wish a supply of the article advertised and do not know of any particular place where it is to be got, being thus furnished with the address of a person who can supply them, naturally open a communication with that address which perhaps leads to much ulterior business. People in the country are also liable to be favorably impressed by a frequent sight of a name in the newspapers. The advertising party acquires distinction in their eyes, and thus they are lead, in making a choice to prefer him.

But by far the most important effect of advertising is one of an indirect nature. It conveys the impression that the party—pretending or not pretending, quackish or not quackish—is anxious for business. One who is anxious for business is unavoidably supposed to be an industrious, attentive, civil person who keeps the best of articles at the cheapest rate, does everything in the neatest and most trademanlike manner, and in general uses every expedient to gratify and attach customers. People like to purchase under those circumstances, and the system of advertising assuring them that such circumstances exist at this particular shop, they select it accordingly.

Such are the opinions of the old tradesman alluded to, and they are certainly supported by fact, for wherever an extensive and regular system of advertising is practiced, and no backdrawing or uncongenerable circumstances exist it is usually seen to be attended with a considerable share of success. One feature in the philosophy of the subject must be carefully attended to. A fainted infrequent system of advertising does not succeed, not even in proportion. "Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring"—Chambers's Journal.

Only $2.10 for the CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL AND Demorest's Monthly Magazine.

A WONDERFUL PUBLICATION.

MANY suppose DEMOREST'S MONTHLY to be a fashion magazine. This is a great mistake. It undoubtedly contains the finest "Fashion Department" of any magazine published, but this is the case from the fact that great enterprise and expense are shown in this department, which is equal to a magazine in itself. In Demorest's you have a magazine in one, and secure accurate and instructive for the whole family. It contains Stories, Poems, and other Literary attractions, including Artistic, Scientific, and Household Articles, and is illustrated with original Steel Engravings, Wood Engravings, Colored Plates, and Designs in Embroidery, Lace, Knitting, and Crochet Work.

Each copy contains a PATTERN ORDER entitling the holder to the selection of ANY PATTERN illustrated in any number of the Magazine, and a full size of THE SIZE manufactured, each valued at from 10 cents to 50 cents, or over $5.00 worth of patterns per year, free.

Yearly subscription, $2.00. A trial will convince you that you can get an issue the value of ten money paid. Single copies each containing Pattern Order, 20 cents.

Published by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, NEW YORK.

The above combination is a splendid chance to get our paper and DEMOREST'S MONTHLY at a reduced rate. Send your subscriptions to this office.

The New Discovery.

You have heard your friends and neighbors talking about it. You may yourself be one of the many who know from personal experience just how good a thing it is. If you have ever tried it, you are one of its staunch friends, because the wonderful thing about it is, that when once given a trial, its king's New Discovery ever after holds a place in the house. If you have never tried it and should be afflicted with a cough, cold or any throat, lung or chest trouble, secure a bottle at once and give it a fair trial. It is guaranteed every time, or money paid back. Trial bottles free at G. Hunt & Co.'s drug store.

The homekeeper's tear or a good broom, the green color of the corn, is no longer trustworthy; old, brittle, and yellow corn is now dipped in a green solution and made to look exactly like the superior article.

DR. TANNER, who won glory a few years ago by breaking the fasting record, is now proposing to give his a rest for sixty days, having "his body sealed meanwhile in an air-tight casket. At the end of two months he proposes to come out of the coffin just as well as he was when he was boxed up.

A GREENVILLE, Mich., woman who asked for a divorce told the Court that a little, measley, one-armed cur had licked her husband. "My marriage contract calls for a lord and protector," she said, "but when a man is so cross to get away with he can't be much of a lord to a woman and protect her." The Court allowed that she had all the logic on her side.

THE etymology of the word homeymoon is thus given by a good authority: "Among the northern nations of Europe there was an ancient practice of newly married couples to drink methyglin or mead, a kind of wine made from honey (hydromel) for thirty days after marriage. Hence the term honeymoth or honeymoon. Adieu, the Hon, Bob; so much mead at his wedding feast that he died."

ACCORDING to the Roman Catholic returns for 1888, there are in England and Wales 2,314 priests, as against 1,728 in 1875, serving 1,304 churches, chapels and missionary stations. In Scotland there are five bishops and 224 priests, serving 327 chapels, churches and stations. The estimated Catholic population in England and Wales is 1,959,000; in Scotland, 320,000; in Ireland, 3,961,000; total, 5,641,000.

THE Emperor of China's railway train, which has just been constructed in France, is about to be shipped at Marseilles. It consists of six carriages, three of which are for the Emperor's own use. They are most sumptuously decorated and furnished, and the silver and panels are ornamented with enormous brass dragons. In each of the imperial saloons is a throne at one end, with a small table for opium smoking in front of it.

ARMY recruits are not of first-class quality nowadays. Of sixteen recruits recently arrived at Livingston, M. T., six are in the guard house for serious offenses, three have deserted, one has been sent to Fort Benton for trial by court martial, and one was strung up by indignant citizens and made to confess where he had hidden a sachel, gold watch and some money he had stolen from a dead woman.

A NOVEL locomotive engine is on exhibition at Milwaukee, Wis. Except the noise of its wheels moving upon iron rails, it is noiseless and smokeless. The steam, after use in the engine, is condensed in a new manner, and the water at the boiling point is reused. All the wheels of this locomotive are driven wheels, being so arranged as to give them easy control of the car on curves and on uneven tracks.

On the mountains south of Sierra City, Cal., a party of Italians have rigged a device to transport wood from the top of the mountain to the other side of the river. It is simply a wire rope, fastened at both ends and suspended in the air. The wood is fastened together in bundles by means of small branches of hardwood, and a hook is formed in the same manner. The wood is attached to the wire with the hook and this, in the wink of an eye, the thing is landed at the bottom.

A CURIOUSLY considerate invention has been produced by a Frenchman in the shape of a noiseless clock for use more especially in sick rooms. In place of the usual pendulum the hands are set in motion by the unrolling of a chain, the end of which is fastened to a buoy floating in a tank of liquid. This fluid escapes at a uniform rate and can be utilized to feed a lamp which, thus giving the apparatus the double character of clock and lamp. When the lamp is lighted the necessary diminution of liquid takes place by combustion; at other times by carefully regulated dropping.

DR. MORELL MACKENZIE will claim in his forthcoming book that had he instead of the German physician attended the late Emperor Frederick from the beginning of his sickness the Emperor's life would have been prolonged twenty months. Dr. Mackenzie will also endeavor to show that the treatment of Dr. Gerhardt produced cancer. He has chosen for his motto page too pungent motto from Shakspeare: "What trick, what device, what starting-hole canst thou now find, to hide thee from thy open and apparent shame?"

TO AN Englishman who lately visited him Mr. Whittier expressed his surprise that his guest should know so much of his poetry by heart. "I wonder," he said, "that should burden my memory with all that rhyme. It is not well to have too much of it; better get rid of it as soon as possible. Why, I can't remember any of it. I once went to hear a wonderful orator and he wound up his speech with a poetical quotation, and I clapped with all my might. Some one touched me on the shoulder and said, 'Do you know who wrote that?' I said, 'No, I don't; but it's good.' It seems I had written it myself. The fault is I have written far too much. I wish half of it were in the Red Sea."

THE largest man in the Massachusetts Legislature for many years was Hen. Myron Lawrence, of Belchertown, who was for several sessions President of the Senate. About the year 1845 he boarded at the Marlboro Hotel, which was quite a resort for Senators and Representatives. He weighed about 350 and wore a hat of the Judge Woolbury style of enormous size. He always carried a bandana handkerchief of the blanket pattern, and when he applied it to his ample nose, the result was "no uncertain sound." One evening a little snip of a fellow who imagined himself very funny took down the Senator's hat from the rack, and balancing it on the back of his small head and shoulders, pretended up and down the hallway, a rather comical sight. Suddenly the ponderous Senator appeared on the scene. Laughing good-naturedly at the little fellow, he exclaimed: "My boy, you remind me of the fable of the frog and the ox." Quite a laugh ensued all around, during which the young fellow hung up the hat and "skedaddled."

ROBERT J. BURDETTE, the famous humorist, who has just been licensed to preach by a Baptist association in Pennsylvania, has been a member of that denomination for many years, his activity as a Baptist dating from the time when he left Peoria and went to Burlington to work on the Hawkeye. He has been almost steady in his lecture field since 1877, and has amassed a well-deserved competence. In the intervals between his lecture seasons he has occasionally preached as a layman, and even when enjoying a summer vacation in his camp in the Adirondacks he was never too far off to be informally compelled with the invitation of a pastorless Baptist country church to go for off and supplied its pulpit regularly during his vacation in the mountains, of course without charging the brethren a cent for his services. "Bob," as he is universally known among his friends of the newspaper craft, is one of the most genial and kind-hearted men on the lecture lot, and is one of the few who never forget his power to injure. In his new field of usefulness it is to be hoped the world will not lose his cheerfulness in one of its rarest humorists, either on the lecture platform or as a contributor to the press.

GEN. WHEELER, of Alabama, is the smallest as well as the shortest man physically in the House of Representatives, writes a Washington correspondent. On the floor he is quiet and unobtrusive; but whenever there is any measure before Congress in which he is specially interested, he is heard. Nothing can daunt him. It is recorded of him that one morning when he had a matter of special interest to his constituents, on private bill day, he raised a storm because he was unable to catch the Speaker's eye. Patiently and unostentatiously he endeavored to get a hearing from noon until three o'clock in the afternoon. Then, walking down the aisle in front of the Speaker, when other members were securing recognition and passing bills by unanimous consent, he shouted, "I object!" again and again, until every member who had matters engaging their attention were obliged to stop and succumb to the persistent, though effective words of objection from the little man from Alabama. Then he got recognition, and demanded the passage of his bill by unanimous consent. It was done. Gen. Wheeler was determined to be the one solitary determined objector who should stop all the legislation in the House until he secured recognition. Inasmuch as he seldom pushes himself aggressively forward, the matter was noticed and commented upon; and since that day, whenever Wheeler wants the House to hear and favor him, he finds little trouble. It is a hurly-burly place, and a man must become recognized as a fighter before he receives the wholesome respect of his colleagues.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

The Mystic Sign.

"O gorgeous poppy, of rich renown,
Have ye the way to Sleepy Town,
Baby must go—he's tired of play,
And he wants to know the right of the way."
Then languidly up and down
Waved the flower of rich renown,
Ah! only it seemed to say,
"This way—this way—this way—
Is the way to Sleepy Town."

"O ripening wheat, all golden brown,
Have ye the way to Sleepy Town?
How shall we find where the starlight gleams,
On the City of Honey or the Land of Dreams?"
Then soothingly up and down
The wheat-ears nodded to and fro,
And whispering seemed to say,
"This way—this way—this way—
Is the way to Sleepy Town."

"O little one, with curly crown,
Have you learned the way to Sleepy Town,
Where the faintest music, and softest light,
And sweetest blossoms exhaust the night?"
Then drowsily up and down
The little curly head seemed to nod,
While the tiny eyes seemed to say,
"This way—this way—this way—
Is the way to Sleepy Town."

How a Little Boy Camped Out.

Once there was a little boy who all summer long had been very anxious to camp out over night. Behind his mother's house was a large garden—as large as a whole city block—and at the far end of it was a little knoll, or hill, with rocks cropping out. It was behind this hill that little Paul wished to pitch his tent. He thought that there the house would be out of sight, and would be "just like truly camping." So his mother gave him a large old sheet—both for a tent; a pair of blankets and a sofa-cushion for a bed; a tin pail full of bread, cold meat, and hard-boiled eggs, and some ginger-bread and apples for his breakfast; and a bottle of milk, a tin cup, a wooden plate, and a small package of sugar and salt. She then gave him some cotton to put in his ears—to keep out little bugs and things. She had the little boy help him drive the stakes and fasten the crumb-cloth over them. The children came out of his own accord, brought from the barn a long bundle of hay to spread over the blankets, so as to make a comfortable bed. By twilight everything was ready, and Paul kissed his mother, his aunt, and his big sister good-by, and shouldering his cross-bow, marched away to the "Rocky Mountains"—as he called the little knoll.

He pinned back the doors of his tent with big catch-pins, and then sat down on a stool. Everything was dreadfully still; but the little man pulled the bottle of milk looked very comfortable. The two cows lumbered up to brave cross-bow, with its pin-pointed arrows, promised safety; while the blankets, sofa-cushion, and the tin pail were all that any reasonable camper could ask for.

But it was so dreadfully still! Not even the smallest baby-breeze was stirring; the leaves of the big apple-tree cloth alonce a star and the star shone straight down on the little boy, who battened one shoe then the other, and sat for a while listening. The silence—dreadful! Oh his mother! he wondered under the blankets and lay quite still. He was a brave little boy, and somehow camping out wasn't exactly fun at all.

It was over a half-past eight. Mamma was thinking; the aunt was sewing, and big sister was reading aloud a dictionary, rehearsing her elocution exercise. Suddenly but mamma heard the back bell-door softly open, and the tiny feet go stealthy upstairs. When the elocution exercise was over mamma said she must go and find the mate to the stocking she was knitting.

So she went upstairs; but, before looking for the stocking, she went into Paul's room. There, in the starlight, she saw the brown curly head cuddled down in the middle of the pillows. She was a good and faithful mamma, and so she knelt down and—just long enough to whisper the half-finished prayer—she prayed "Now I lay me" and "God bless mamma." Then she stole out of the room, and "tippy-toed" down the hall back bell-door softly open, and the tiny feet go stealthy upstairs. When the elocution exercise was over mamma said she must go and find the mate to the stocking she was knitting.

Paying for a Dead Indian.

If an Indian is killed in a quarrel, his relatives are usually appeased by payment of a remuneration. Once a fancy, overbearing young Assiniboine took came into the Milk River Agency and had a little horse and wagon. He died yesterday. The agent warned him if he did not pay for the horse kill the Indian. The young buck shot his arrow, the agent killed him. We expected to have a war-dance, but the grief-stricken father came forward on behalf of the dead young man and claimed that in consideration of the young man having killed a starved buffalo runner, the agent must pay for the loss—such a person a red blanket, a piece of calico, and two pounds of sugar. He complied with their demands, but the vengeful relatives therefore adopted him as their banker. The mother and other relatives of the slain young man want any come to it.

PACIFIC NORTHWEST.

TACOMA, THE CITY OF MANIFEST DESTINY.

The City of Puget Sound and of the Pacific Northwest.—A Great Tributary County and the World for a Market.—Tacoma Terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

TACOMA, Wash. Ter., Oct. 14, 1889.

This city is situated at the head waters of Puget Sound, and is the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad, the only transcontinental line which enters this section. The advantages accruing out of this fact will be apparent, when it is borne in mind that accommodating the large transoceanic trade The Sound is open the year round, often time fishing advantages, and with unusual facilities for loading and discharging vessels at Pacific Ocean, and thus to the ends of the world. More vessels load here with wheat, coal and lumber than at any other port. The country surrounding Tacoma is varied in character, consisting of timber, agricultural and mineral lands. The timber lands are large, ranging from 100 to 300 to the acre. The agricultural lands yield from 25 to 60 bushels of wheat per acre, the average being 40 bushels per acre, while grow tons to the acre. The mineral lands are of great extent and great abundance. The mineral lands consist of coal, iron, and the more precious metals. Building material is abundant and cheap.

The climate of this section of our country is wholly unlike anything experienced on Atlantic slope or in the Mississippi Valley, or, indeed, anywhere on the Atlantic or Pacific coasts in the same latitude. The summers are cool and the winters comparatively mild. There is very little rain during the months, between October and April. A tender plant can be left out all the year without protection, and often in the winter does the mercury go down to the freezing point. Fruits do not mature especially early, but the yield is very large. Persons suffering from pulmonary complaints find in the climate suitable for them, and the mercury in winter is seldom down to the point of rheumatism, but taken altogether the climate of Tacoma is one of the best in the world. There is no malaria in the country, and consequently there are no chills and fevers to be contended with at any time during the year.

The city is the vocal government land in the country, or Tacoma. Some miles back from the Sound, the country of land to be had for the taking, much of which is heavily timbered and whose soil, when cleared, yields abundantly. Any industrious man can succeed in making a comfortable home upon a quarter section of land, or secure title to 160 acres which is the amount he can take independent. In Pierce Washington the land is open and more easily cleared, and yields far larger returns per acre. There is considerable vacant land in Lewis, Clark, and Cowlitz, in the Big Bend of Columbia River which is now rendered accessible by the building of the branch of the Northern Pacific through that region.

Ten years ago Tacoma had a population of 1,000 people; the population now is one hundred times greater. People depending from the Eastern States, and from Europe, to Tacoma are in the majority, and the number is greater than that of any city this side of Rocky Mountains. It is rapidly rivaling Chicago in its early stages of development, and it is a place that great metropolis is at the head of navigation on Puget Sound, and is the terminus of the Pacific Ocean, and for all the world.

The Thoughts of the lovesick youth are sadly mine-shaped.

HOW TO BE BEAUTIFUL.

BY SHIRLEY DARE.

GOSS of hair is not merely an injury to the looks; it is a serious damage to the general comfort of the body. The hair was a necessary protection to the skull and scalp, and assisted in equalizing the temperature of the brain, blood, and entire system. Thin hair prepares the way for neuralgia of the head and face, especially with open bonnets and a windy climate. Neuralgia quickly induces grayness and affects the sight. Nature's penalties for neglect are various and interlinked. Thin haired persons often have weak eyes, but seldom connect the two conditions. The hair ought to be thick on the forehead and waved or crinped enough to afford a slight shade to the eyes, without falling low, which interferes with the sight and gives an idiotic expression. The flat, well-brushed bands of hair in front, drawn strictly away from the parting are unbecoming, thinning on the temples and at the parting. All flat and very smooth styles of hairdressing injure its growth more or less, by drawing it closely to keep it in good order. Hair can not be too easily or loosely for its own well-being and that of the nerves of the head. This matter is considered of such vital importance by inquired into in behalf of our nerveys, and it is very serious, and, of things like pressure, heat, or strain about the head inflicts injury on the brain and nerves. The roots of the nerves system. The dragging of the hair by the roots in Spanish and Parisian-Chinese coiffures is only pulls it out in time, but irritates the nerves of the scalp. When drawn up tightly behind, the glands of the neck have been known to swell in ugly fashion. Wrong hair-dressing aggravates spinal malady as truly as wrongly shirts do. The Psyche knot, so pretty for the very few who know how to wear it, probably ruined the hair of Grecian women as it does our own, if twisted at all tight, and a Psyche knot or "massive coil" does immense mischief by heating the base of the brain and the sensitive top of the spine. Women only notice the effect by the relief it is in headache, or when tired out of "letting one's hair down." But those with any pronounced spinal ailment find the sensation of a mass of hair on the top of the head or at the back of the neck, and the tension of hair at the base of the spine. The pompadour coiffure is safe if open work rolls are used to support the front hair. The chatelaine braids suspended from the crown are bad whenever they drag or lean the back of the head. The high coiffure piled on the top of the head looks well in a young face, and is active spot, which is one of the first to grow thin and bald.

These cautions are not captious fault-finding, but the opinion of liberal doctors and hair-dressers who are artists as well as tradesmen. The very best artists and physicians alike is that the natural and safe way of wearing the hair is flowing naturally in waves, curls, or long hanging braid in the Russian fashion, by which the weight falls equally on all sides. Young girls should wear their hair free and curling, tied by a ribbon or gold fillet, or in braids, as it is decorum will tolerate. Women should wear curls close to the face, pretty fashion of twenty years ago, or in the hanging braid at home, and abroad the braid looped in Cadogan knot, or wound coronet wise around the head. With this, curls should be arranged in style of head-dress a host of petty ailments would be relieved, and half the headaches disappear. The available result would be increased care of the hair, more frequent brushing, and would be tolerable in such simplicity. To be natural and healthy is to grow, under all possible conditions, and with good care its average growth is from two to three inches a year, it would be the work of two or three months only to make most women with as handsome a chevelure as they would desire. It is a matter of pride with the devoted to show their hair down to the knee, and braids thick as an arm, or curls to the waist, but as a matter of fact and experience one would prefer some other woman to wear them. These magnificent, phenomenal heads of hair are immense, impeding their owners in the cars, and keep tolerable, even if one sits all day coiling and uncoiling it. The Sutherland sisters, or lives like a mermaid, as to comb and a glass in her hand. The women who have to do their own work find it a bar to their before admiring friends, have a life of toil to care for these exhibition trees. You can't wear a bonnet, the flowing, to get stepped on, and the work of putting it away every day would reconcile any woman to Effectes and a pig in a wooden box. No; a very good standard of hair is just long enough to wind around the head when braided and thick enough to look well hanging straight.

A Turkish Lamplighter.

This functionary is simply a tall and gaunt Mussulman, with a fierce mustache, an embroidered vest and jacket and a huge turban. He carries a ladder, a box of lucifer matches, and a big green umbrella. The ladder is made of bamboo; the wooden post, on the top of which a common tin lamp is securely fastened, and, taking off the glass chimney, opens his umbrella to keep off the wind. The handle of the umbrella is hooked under his arm, and then, balancing himself on the rungs of the ladder, he proceeds to strike a light with his lucifers, and then to climb and the spattering flames with his hands. Naturally this is a slow process, and he has to make three or four ascents before he can light a street lamp. The ladder is shipped from the east end of Lake Outario, within 250 miles of Boston.

A FEW nice laubs kept about the yard will answer the purpose of a lawn mower, and will give into mowing at the same time, save a writer. It is as them to be able to get a market value out of the grass that is generally wasted around dwellings.

RUSSIAN PRIESTHOOD.

SUBJECTED TO GREAT HARDSHIPS AND PRIVATIONS.

Half the Jokes in the Funny Papers Are About Them—The White and Black Clergy—Priests' Wives and Families.—How They Get Rid of Their Daughters.

BY WILLIAM ELROY CURTIS.

The priesthood of the Russian Church is composed of two classes—the white and black clergy. The latter are monks belonging to the several orders of religious seclusion, and from their numbers all the bishops and higher ecclesiastical officials are chosen. They are teachers in the schools, also tutors in the families, of the nobles, and many of them have been celebrated for their profound learning and their scholarly and literary gifts. Asceticism is not practiced to the extent of self-torture, as it is in other countries, but it is carried far enough in the fulfillment of vows. During the last century the church estates were confiscated and confiscated by the crown; then the emancipation of the serfs deprived the religious orders of a great part of their wealth, some of the monasteries owning twenty, thirty, and even fifty thousand serfs. This was a severe blow to them, and only a few, such as were possessed of other resources, survived it. At present there are about five hundred monastic establishments throughout the empire, and they are not wealthy.

There is a feeling of bitter hostility existing between the white and black clergy. The former are the city and village priests, the latter are called "popes." They accuse the black clergy of arrogance and indifference to their vows of fasting and celibacy, of extortion and worldliness, of taking advantage for the necessities of life, of violating the rules of the order, of the church, and of life by refusing to marry, and by setting the people the bad example of licentiousness. Many of these charges hold true in the cases of some of the monks, but some of them, a small proportion, perhaps, lead lives of austerity and devotion, giving their time to study or the instruction of the people, and devoting their revenues to charity.

The priests are taken orders they must marry the daughter or the widow of some other priest, who is selected for them by the Bishop. They are not even allowed to choose their own wives. They are not permitted, either, to marry outside of the church. When a priest dies his family is a burden on the diocese till the boys can be sent to a seminary, and the girls married off. The Bishop who has them in charge makes all the marriages, selects the brides and the bridegroms, from into prison, and compelled to restore the treasure, when she was released, through the efforts of Minister Jewell. The Grand Duke, however, was never forgiven. He not only disgraced the imperial regime, but committed sacrilege that cannot be pardoned by robbing a saint. He was sent to Siberia, but has since been allowed to command some troops in the southern part of Russia, having shown himself to be a gallant soldier during the war with Turkey, but he will never be allowed to appear at court again.

Umbrellas and Braces.

One that knows the petty questions which have disturbed the peace of churches might exclaim, paraphrasing the Pharisee's famous words, "O, religion! religion! how many absurdities are committed in thy name!"

In the history of Weare, N. H., writes that in the early days of that town two young ladies while on a visit to Boston, bought two cotton umbrella, and carried them home. When they appeared with them open, there was a great excitement. Some over-strict women said the young ladies were indulging in sinful vanity. Others asserted that to carry an open umbrella was a defiance of Providence, for it interrupted the rain which has intended to fall on the just and the unjust."

The dangerous innovation, being found very convenient, the religious scruples were put aside, and umbrellas came into general use.

Another innovation also excited criticism. Braces were not worn, but men's trousers were kept in place by a leather belt girt about the waist. One man wore two strings crossed over his shoulders. A committee of the brethren of the church waited on him, and urged that he should abandon the use of these string "suspenders," because by wearing them he encouraged pauper, as he wore a cross on his back. But again the inconvenience overwhelmed the scruples, and braces soon became a common article of dress.—Youth's Companion.

A Conjurer's Wonderful Trick.

The most popular newspaper of the French metropolis invited a very select number of notables to be present at the first appearance in Paris of a marvelous conjurer, and of a singularly complete Russian Literal Society. The name of the "illusionists," as he calls himself, is Beatier de Kola, and he is a Hungarian by birth. His tricks are all original and perfectly incomprehensible, even to the adepts assembled to criticise them. I will only attempt to describe one, which thoroughly puzzled all present.

After spreading a newspaper on the floor he placed a chair upon it, and then asked a young lady to sit down. He threw over her a piece of silk, which barely covered her from head to foot. He then rapidly removed the drapery, and the chair was empty. As soon as the amazement of the spectators gave them time to applaud, the young lady walked out from the shawl bowed her acknowledgments. There certainly was a trap in the floor, the chair was of an ordinary kind, and the trick was done in a strong light. The lady, in fact, disappeared before the very eyes of the audience; but so quickly was the trick done that no one present saw her escape.

A Providence.

He was a great believer in a special providence. To exemplify it he told the following charming little anecdote. Said he:

"Boss, one night I was gwine back from church, feelin' mighty low-spirited and down-hearted like. I had no money, was powerful hungry, an' I didn't really know what I was goin' to git a brekfuss from. I knew'd de chiefuns an' de colo'ceum was mos' mizzibly hungry, too, an' I tell you I was a-feelin' mighty bad. Hit seemed to me'z if I had no friends, an' I jes prayed that a blessin' might descend on a pore ole man. Hit was about midnight, an' des' as I got near Colonel Mullin's place I heard a rooster crow out moo' beautiful. I des' clim de fence, sah, an' I got dat rooster, an' four fat hens, too, sah!—very impressively—I 'spose dat rooster had crowed whilst I was in church, I wouldn't a heerd him! A BETTER ERA DAWNING.

BY BILL ARP.

THE ROAD TO THE HEART IS THROUGH THE THROAT.

OW gratefully conscious we are that our children and grandchildren live in a better age than that in which our youth was spent. The world is assimilating—knowledge is being diffused. Half a century ago it was within reach of the privileged few. I remember when my father was a merchant, about half his customers made crossmarks to their promissory notes. But few of them could tell whether they had signed for $10 or $100, but they signed and trusted. Honest and true, they believed that others were. We love to tell of the honest simplicity of those good old times, but still every man has a yearning for his children, a longing desire for their education. Not long ago I called at a humble cottage for a drink of water, and found a little bare-footed girl reading a story to her grandpa. It was a Sunday-school paper, and I was glad that she was proud to tell me that Sarah Jane could read. "I had no larnin," said he, "but this child has been to school, and now she comes and reads to the old man, and it does me a power of good." I know of a father who goes regularly to school with the two little boys, and studies the same lesson and stands up with them at recitation. The humble country people, the toilers, are advancing in knowledge, in ideas, in language. The time was when most every family and their kindred had a dialect of their own. Their language was a defiance of Providence, for it intercepted the rain which has intended to fall on the just and the unjust."

The dangerous innovation, being found very convenient, the religious scruples were put aside, and umbrellas came into general use.

Another innovation also excited criticism. Braces were not worn, but men's trousers were kept in place by a leather belt girt about the waist. One man wore two strings crossed over his shoulders. A committee of the brethren of the church waited on him, and urged that he should abandon the use of these string "suspenders," because by wearing them he encouraged pauper, as he wore a cross on his back. But again the inconvenience overwhelmed the scruples, and braces soon became a common article of dress.—Youth's Companion.

A Conjurer's Wonderful Trick.

The most popular newspaper of the French metropolis invited a very select number of notables to be present at the first appearance in Paris of a marvelous conjurer, and of a singularly complete Russian Literal Society. The name of the "illusionists," as he calls himself, is Beatier de Kola, and he is a Hungarian by birth. His tricks are all original and perfectly incomprehensible, even to the adepts assembled to criticise them. I will only attempt to describe one, which thoroughly puzzled all present.

After spreading a newspaper on the floor he placed a chair upon it, and then asked a young lady to sit down. He threw over her a piece of silk, which barely covered her from head to foot. He then rapidly removed the drapery, and the chair was empty. As soon as the amazement of the spectators gave them time to applaud, the young lady walked out from the shawl bowed her acknowledgments. There certainly was a trap in the floor, the chair was of an ordinary kind, and the trick was done in a strong light. The lady, in fact, disappeared before the very eyes of the audience; but so quickly was the trick done that no one present saw her escape.

A Providence.

He was a great believer in a special providence. To exemplify it he told the following charming little anecdote. Said he:

"Boss, one night I was gwine back from church, feelin' mighty low-spirited and down-hearted like. I had no money, was powerful hungry, an' I didn't really know what I was goin' to git a brekfuss from. I knew'd de chiefuns an' de colo'ceum was mos' mizzibly hungry, too, an' I tell you' I was a-feelin' mighty bad. Hit seemed to me'z if I had no friends, an' I jes prayed that a blessin' might descend on a pore ole man. Hit was about midnight, an' des' as I got near Colonel Mullin's place I heard a rooster crow out moo' beautiful. I des' clim de fence, sah, an' I got dat rooster, an' four fat hens, too, sah!—very impressively—I 'spose dat rooster had crowed whilst I was in church, I wouldn't a heerd him! 'Sposen he had crowed arter I got home, I wouldn't a heerd him, but I crowed des' as good fo' dem hens, an' I heerd him! Now, isn't dat providence?"

RUSSIAN PRIESTHOOD.

SUBJECTED TO GREAT HARDSHIPS AND PRIVATIONS.

Half the Jokes in the Funny Papers Are About Them—The White and Black Clergy—Priests' Wives and Families.—How They Get Rid of Their Daughters.

BY WILLIAM ELROY CURTIS.

The priesthood of the Russian Church is composed of two classes—the white and black clergy. The latter are monks belonging to the several orders of religious seclusion, and from their numbers all the bishops and higher ecclesiastical officials are chosen. They are teachers in the schools, also tutors in the families, of the nobles, and many of them have been celebrated for their profound learning and their scholarly and literary gifts. Asceticism is not practiced to the extent of self-torture, as it is in other countries, but it is carried far enough in the fulfillment of vows. During the last century the church estates were confiscated and confiscated by the crown; then the emancipation of the serfs deprived the religious orders of a great part of their wealth, some of the monasteries owning twenty, thirty, and even fifty thousand serfs. This was a severe blow to them, and only a few, such as were possessed of other resources, survived it. At present there are about five hundred monastic establishments throughout the empire, and they are not wealthy.

There is a feeling of bitter hostility existing between the white and black clergy. The former are the city and village priests, the latter are called "popes." They accuse the black clergy of arrogance and indifference to their vows of fasting and celibacy, of extortion and worldliness, of taking advantage for the necessities of life, of violating the rules of the order, of the church, and of life by refusing to marry, and by setting the people the bad example of licentiousness. Many of these charges hold true in the cases of some of the monks, but some of them, a small proportion, perhaps, lead lives of austerity and devotion, giving their time to study or the instruction of the people, and devoting their revenues to charity.

The priests are taken orders they must marry the daughter or the widow of some other priest, who is selected for them by the Bishop. They are not even allowed to choose their own wives. They are not permitted, either, to marry outside of the church. When a priest dies his family is a burden on the diocese till the boys can be sent to a seminary, and the girls married off. The Bishop who has them in charge makes all the marriages, selects the brides and the bridegrooms, and then the weddings are made by proxy. The priests are compelled to marry, and from this fact, without knowing the characteristics or dispositions of any, assigns them to the graduates of the seminaries. Thus, a clergyman of Russia gets a wife in the same manner as he gets a "living." It is a lottery of marriage. The bishop is strictly impartial, for he seldom knows the man or woman. He has the two names and makes the assignment, being glad to get both off his hands.

Not only are the priests subjected to great hardships and privations, but they are the butt of all the wits and humorists of the empire. Half the jokes in the funny papers are about them, and their lives suggest half the proverbs of the country. "As poor as a priest." "As stupid as a priest." "As wretched as a priest." "As hungry as a priest," etc., etc., are familiar suggestions. Under the circumstances, little better can be expected of them. The average of morality and temperance is said to be higher in the priesthood of the Russian than in the Roman Church, which is due, perhaps, to the fact that the former are compelled to marry, are crushed by the heel of the despot, and are condemned to spend their entire lives in the villages, which they seldom leave.

The influence of the priests over the people is very great. They are the representatives of God, and are regarded with reverence and veneration. The peasants, when they visit him when he is to marry a bride, bury his boots and mounts the roof of his house. He is with them always, like the poor, and is the friend of the people, and if ever he cannot but wield an immense power. He is, still further, the only man who writes of political, social, and domestic economy, and his advice is based upon the sanctuary. As the Czar is the autocrat of all the Russians, so is the priest the autocrat of his diocese, so is the priest the pope of his village, and his word is law, and is kept by certain orders in monastic life, and in the fulfillment of vows. He Got Away With Too Many.

A short old man in rather rusty attire, with a long gray beard yellow in streaks and an armful of Christmas bundles, wandered through Fulton market on Thursday afternoon and stopped at a wagon where baskets of grapes were displayed for sale.

"Here you are!" yelled the proprietor, pointing to open baskets of fruit, "the best Concords, Catawbas and Delawares in the market, for half the price you pay inside."

The small man stopped up, and shifting his bundles so as to free his turkey arm, meditatively pulled off a large grape from a bunch in a basket of Concords. Having discovered that he tried a Delaware and then a Catawba, and began on the Concords again.

The fruit vender, who had been engaged with a customer, now began to regard the short man's actions with suspicion.

"How much for grapes?" said the latter, laconically, eating a Delaware.

"Forty cents a basket."

"Too much," said the short man, stowing away two more Concords.

"Are you a wholesaler?" inquired the vender.

"No."

"Own a vineyard, perhaps, and make wine?"

"No."

"Where did you learn to eat grapes?"

"Over'n Jersey."

"Well, see here, old man, I reckon you've eat about a pound and you have only spent cents, or I'll tie that beard of yourn into a bow knot, and then you caper back to Jersey; we don't want no grape insect ravagin' around here."—New York Tribune.

No Fears for a Coal Famine.

It is claimed that a coal famine is imminent and that workers families will have to burn corncobs this winter. This is not overly encouraging to drought stricken Kansas, Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin, where there is nothing but cobs three inches long, but for Nebraska, where the cobs are used for baseball bats, we contemplate the famine with a remarkable degree of composure. As long as the festive cornrob maintains its present mammoth proportions coal diggers may strike, and coal dealers may pool, the Nebraska hearth will still be warm and cozy. Eastern strikers may put this in their cob pipes and smoke it.—North Bend (Neb.) Pilot.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schamiton, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delaware, Ill.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a mortgage, by which the power of sale therein has become operative, given by Hattie Cooper of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Jay W. Hatch, of the same place, dated the 2nd day of June, 1886, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds, for Charlevoix county, Michigan, June 24th, 1886, at 10 o'clock p. m., in Liber 14 of mortgages, on page 158. There is now due of interest upon said mortgage, the sum of twenty dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the money secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and default is made in the payment of the principal and interest, or any part thereof. That after the sale of said mortgage may elect to declare the whole amount of principal and interest due and payable; and more than 30 days have passed since the said interest became due, and said mortgagee does hereby declare the whole amount of said principal, both principal and interest, due and unpaid, and that there is now due upon said mortgage and the indebtedness secured thereby, the sum of twenty dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the money secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and no proceedings either at law or equity having been taken to recover the money or any part thereof, therefore, said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in said mortgage, viz: The south four rods of land of said Hattie Cooper, being in the township of Charlevoix, county of Charlevoix, Michigan, village of, number four, block one, of Hyde's addition to the village of Charlevoix, according to the recorded plat thereof, and that the premises be sold at public vendue, at the front door of the court house, in Boyne City, that being the place of holding the circuit court for Charlevoix county, on the 8th day of February, A. D. 1889, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of said day, and sum with all costs and an attorney fee of twenty dollars.

Dated Nov. 6th, 1888.

Harbor Improvements.

At Grand Rapids last Thursday afternoon the U. S. engineer in charge awarded the contracts for river and harbor improvements in Michigan, and the following have special interest here:

Charlevoix Harbor—Placing three cribs on stone foundation, George W. Crouter, of Charlevoix, $8,695.30.

Frankfort Harbor—Placing two cribs on pile foundation, Truman & Cooper, of Manitowoc, $8,081.58.

Manistee Harbor—Placing two cribs on pile foundation, Chas. Berner, of Green Bay, $9,831.

For the Charlevoix work, Dr. Crouter has sub-contracted the hemlock to Wm. J. McGeagh and Jas. O'Brian, of Norwood township; and the pine to the East Jordan Lumber Co., of East Jordan. The entire work will be pushed along as fast as possible.

He Never Did.

An editor was asked if he ever saw a bald-headed woman. His reply was: "No, we never did. Why should we? Nor did we ever see a woman walking around town in her shirt sleeves, with a cigar between her teeth, stepping into every saloon she saw. We never saw a woman go fishing with a bottle in each pocket, sit on the damp ground all day and go home drunk at night. Neither have we seen a woman yank off her coat, spit on her hands and say she could lick any man in town. No, God bless her, she isn't built that way."

Wide Awake.

The Christmas Wide Awake is so bright and beautiful that Santa Claus may be suspected to have written and illustrated it himself, at any rate, some of the private doings of Santa's household have got into the magazine. "Goody Santa Claus" by Katharine Lee Bates, with its dozen jolly pictures, is a regular fireside chronicle of "Father Christmas" and his folks. Margaret Sidney opens her new Pepper serial in this number. "The Peppers Midway" the irrepressible, irresistible "Phronsie" coming to meet us in the opening sentence. This story will run through the year. J. T. Trowbridge in his serial, "The Adventures of David Vane and David Crane," opens the door upon a typical New England farmhouse family, where every member is a distinct character. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps (Mrs Herbert Ward) contributes one of her best short stories. "The Toddlethwaite Prize." John Strange Winter the author of Bootles' Baby, has a good story with a sweet lesson, entitled "Yum-Yum: A Pug." Mrs. General Fremont has a remarkable story, "How the Good News Came Out of the West." Mary E. Wilkins is represented by one of her best fantastic stories, "The Silver Heir." Mrs M. F. Butts has a native story, called "Mussentouchit." Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen opens the magazine with a splendid ballad of the North, "Inge the Boy-King," with a drawing by Howard Pyle. Mrs. Frances A. Humphrey furnishes a charming paper from Scotland, about "Pet Marjorie," written among the child's kinsfolk; the portrait of this famous lift is girl whom Sir Walter Scott loved so dearly, and whom Dr John Brown has immortalized, will make the Christmas Wide Awake prized by thousands. Emiline Poulsson has a dainty poem, "Little Tree and Little Maid." Mrs. Whitcomb contributes a beautiful Christmas sonnet. Miss Amanda B. Harris tells the touching story of a captive eagle. Mrs. William Claflin gives the of first "Daisy's Letters to Patty." Mrs Sallie Joy White opens her series, "Cooking in the Public Schools," with a chapter entitled "Master Allen's Prophecy." Professor Starr's geological series, "A Long Line of Hills," opens with "The Labor of a Giant." Mrs. Goddard Orpen's series, "The Stories of the Famous Precious Stones," gives an account of "The Regent." There are many other interesting features, the wonderful "Celestial Bear," and the new department of crisp miscellany, "Men and Things."

The Supreme Court and the Press.

In view of the fact that whenever the Michigan supreme court has an opportunity to do so, it whacks it unmercifully to the state press, it is pertinent to ask at this time: Is there no remedy? How long will the press, which makes and unmakes judges, submit to this condition of things?

The best wisdom of our legislature may pass a law regulating libel against newspapers, but if it fails to meet the peculiar whims of the supreme court which is only human at best, hairs are split, and the benefit of all doubts and quibbles are thrown against the press.

The last legislature passed a statute regulating the law of libel. It provides that "actual damages" must be proved. The court recently decided this law "unconstitutional," in a case in which The Detroit Free Press was one of the parties concerned. This law was manifestly fair and just to all parties concerned. It did not shield the press, but merely provided that in case of suit for libel, the plaintiff must prove "actual damages." What fair-minded man but will admit the entire fairness of this? If the Journal, to illustrate, perpetrates a libel upon any citizen of Gratiot county, and he brings suit for damages, should he not be required to prove the actual amount of damages the publication was to his character, if he chanced to have one, and that the verdict awarded should be in accordance with such damages?

Who will deny for a moment that the damages of over $20,000 awarded Dr. Maclean against the Detroit Evening News some years ago was an outrage upon the press of the state? It was merely a judgment based upon opinion against the News. And the only comfort in regard to that decision is in the fact that the judge who was responsible for it was overwhelmingly defeated by the people just as soon as they had an opportunity to reach him.

A new judge of the supreme court is soon to be chosen in place of Hon. Thomas R. Sherwood, whose term expires next year. A considerable number of gentlemen are candidates for the place. Would it not be advisable for the press to know that the one who shall reach that honorable position shall be sufficiently broad and liberal in his views and general make up to deal fairly and equitably with it? We confess that it would hardly be the thing to exact a pledge in advance from a candidate for judicial honors. But will the press of Michigan be satisfied any longer to be treated by the supreme court? The press only asks simple justice at the hands of our judges and our law makers. The time has come when hair-splitters in our supreme court should be relegated to the shades of oblivion and men placed there who will guard well the freedom of the press and thus protect the liberty of the press.—Ithaca Journal.

J. Smith is one of the largest contractors in the country and this year he will bid on over 1,000 routes. The work of preparing these bids is something enormous, and the work of signing them alone is a matter of dread....The steam barge O. C. Burrows came into the harbor on Tuesday, the latest arrival known in the history of the past. When Wilson Bros. were fishing with a tug, they were still running later in the season, but an outside craft never entered the harbor before on Christmas day. She had taken a load of hay to Naubinway and ran in here to get a load of lumber for Chicago.... About half an acre of land on the extreme end of Harbor Point, dropped into the lake Friday night. This is the third instance of the kind in the past twelve years, and is caused no doubt by the current undermining the surface. As the point is constantly building up from the west, however, there is no danger of Harbor Point stock taking a tumble, either in value or into the lake.

PRESIDENTIAL INAUGURAL.

Preparations Being Made for the Reception of Gen. Harrison and Party.

Quarters have been engaged in the Arlington Hotel, in Washington, D. C. for Gen. Harrison and party prior to the inauguration ceremonies next March. There will be in the party Gen. Harrison and wife, Russell Harrison and wife, J. R. McKee, wife and two children, ex-Senator Saunders, of Nebraska, and wife (parents of Mrs. Russell Harrison), E. W. Halford, Private Secretary, wife and daughter. The distinguished guests will reach Washington about a week before inauguration day. They will be located in the Johnson annex on H street and to be served in a private dining-room. On the morning of inauguration day they will go to Willard's Hotel on Pennsylvania avenue, and occupy a parlor on the second floor, where they will view the procession as it forms. In accordance with the precedent established by Andrew Jackson, and observed by every President but two since then, President Cleveland will call for President-elect Harrison at Willard's and escort him to the Capitol.

HORRORS OF THE RIVER.

The Steamer J. H. Hanna Burned to the Water's Edge and Sunk.

The river boat John H. Hanna was burned to the water's edge at Plaquemine, La., causing the death of at least twenty-five persons. Some perished on the boat, others were drowned, and many in attempting to reach the shore stuck in the mud and were literally roasted alive. Scores sustained injuries by being burned or scalded by escaping steam. Among the dead are: Capt. J. S. Holmes, Samuel Powell, Bob Smith, Mike O'Neill, Joe Crane, Monroe Diggs, Jack Duff, Joe Harvey, Jim Watson, John Crafton, John Barlow, Jim Blank (colored), Dick Blank (colored), child of Priscilla White (colored). Among those who were badly burned are: Dan Carroll, Jim O'Neill, John Gibbons, Louis Welch, John Jackson, and Thomas Garrow. The details of the suffering and death of the passengers are harrowing in the extreme.

ARMED AND READY TO KILL.

The French and Eversole Factions on the Eve of Another Battle.

Ira Davis, Clerk of Perry County, Ky., says that the French-Eversole factions are on the eve of another battle. Both sides are well armed and determined, and at any moment a fight is likely to take place. The French faction has thirty-five men, armed with Winchesters, encamped in a stable near French's home. They are all bold, reckless men, with little regard for human life. French gives them $50 each per month for acting as his soldiers and bodyguard. The Eversoles are well armed, have a larger force than the French faction, and, as they are eager for a fight, considerable blood is liable to be spilled.

MUST GO TO JAIL.

Engineer Bauereisen Found Guilty and Denied Bail.

The jury in the case of John A. Bauereisen, charged with conspiracy to destroy property of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company with dynamite, returned a sealed verdict at Galena, Ill. The prisoner was found guilty and sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. The jury at first stood eight for five years and four for a fine, but a compromise was soon reached on two years' imprisonment. The prisoner's counsel at once moved for a new trial. Bauereisen was committed to jail, the Judge having refused to admit him to bail.

THREE ACRES BURNED OVER.

More Than $300,000 Worth of Property Destroyed at Cincinnati.

One of the most destructive fires which have visited Cincinnati, Ohio, for years occurred lately. The fire started in one of the buildings occupied by the Charles C. Jacobs Cordage Company. It spread rapidly in the building, in which tar and other material fed the flames, and soon extended to the large stable of the works and the platform of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad, and from thence over a large district. The loss will reach $300,000.

Suing the Northern Pacific.

At Lincoln, Neb., John Fitzgerald, in behalf of himself and other stockholders of the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company, has begun suit against the Northern Pacific Railway and the Construction Company for an accounting, the amount involved being $1,200,000. The bill alleges frauds and illegal acts by Jay Gould and others.

Received Into the Church.

In the Chapel of the Ladies of the Sacred Heart, at New York, Miss Gaston De Pontillac, nee Smith, sister of Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, was received into the Roman Catholic Church. She is the wife of Baron Gaston De Pontillac, whom she married a year ago in Paris.

Loss by Fire.

Two stores, four dwellings, an ice house, a barter shop, and two stables at New Cumberland, W. Va., were destroyed by fire; and other dwellings were damaged. The loss, $18,000, is fully covered by insurance.

MANY LIVES LOST.

A Mississippi River Steamer Burns Near Commerce, Miss.

The elegant passenger steamer Kate Adams, running as a semi-weekly packet between Memphis and Arkansas City, was burned near Commerce, Miss., forty miles south of Memphis, Tenn. She had on board about two hundred or more people, including twenty-five cabin and sixty deck passengers, and a cable crew of eighty. The fire caught in some cotton near the forward end of the boilers. The passengers were at breakfast when the alarm was given, and made a mad rush for the forward deck. At the time the steamer was about 300 yards from the Mississippi side of the river, and her bow was once headed for the shore. The scene was one of wild confusion. It is estimated that some thirty-five lives were lost, among whom were the following: George Corbett, clerk; Joe Porter, Andrew Rose, Monroe Jackson, and Jim Nelson, colored; Senator Cockran, Hilliard Horton, Lee Finley, and Frank Wells. Fifteen deck passengers, four of whom were white, are among the lost. The number of the cabin passengers were three colored women and two children. They were going to Memphis to spend the holidays. The white lady was been working on the levees and their names and destinations are unknown. The list of cabin passengers was quite large. The vessel, including crew, numbered but 167. Many passengers lost their persons on dishabilis. A colored man, handcuffed, charged with murder, was burned to death. Those who jumped overboard were battered by the collapse of the water, and this accounts for the large loss of life. The safe, containing several thousand dollars of money belonging to passengers, was saved. All the women passengers were rescued.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF TRADE.

The Volume of Business Satisfactory—Business of Prior Weeks.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s review of trade for the week says:

At St. Paul mild weather was held to be the cause of tardy trading, but movement at Kansas City was rather light, but reports from the Northwest indicated a satisfactory volume of business. In the Southwest there was more animation, and while the cotton movement was light there was a good deal of business done in other directions. At Memphis the character of recent failures was thought indicative of an unhealthy state of trade. Filtering from the Southern into undersizing North-ward, the movement at Chicago was fair, but at Philadelphia it was dull. The previous week's clearing houses were about 6 per cent. larger than a year ago, and at all cities outside of New York the amount was about 10 per cent. larger. Business failures for the week were 207, including those in Canada, as against 189 last week and 207 the week before. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 179.

EXCITED FRENCHMEN.

Abandoned the Most Glorious of Monarchies—M. Challemel-Lacour's Speech.

In the French Senate during the debate on the budget M. Challemel-Lacour said the present was not the moment to confound French finances but the future of France. He condemned the policy now pursued in the schools, which, he said, struck at the root of the traditional principle of parental control. The same cause of existing unrest, he declared, was radicalism, which relentlessly pursued the old founders of the republic and gave promises that were impossible to fulfill. France had abandoned the most glorious of monarchies, and was about to hasten the feet of the least of men. The Cabinet's duty was to check the movement toward the abyss, but instead of doing this the Cabinet were hastening the movement. It was time to return to a policy of good sense. He appealed to the Right to unite with the party of the Left, which was the upholder of order and liberty, and together save the country. The speech created a sensation, and at its conclusion the Senate arose en masse and enthusiastically cheered its orator.

PLAYING WITH DYNAMITE.

Terrible Explosion Caused by the Careless Issuance of Boys with Pipes.

A dynamite magazine belonging to the Wheeling and Lake Erie Railroad at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, seventeen miles west of Wheeling, W. Va., exploded, wrecking and injuring buildings. The shock was felt and report heard at Wheeling and all around. One person was killed and many injured. There were in the magazine 210 kegs of powder and ten cases of dynamite. A 14-year-old boy, Charles Glock, of Charleston, W. Va., visiting Mt. Pleasant, broke the lock and with two other boys went in smoking. The other boys ran before the explosion. Young Glock was literally blown to atoms. The other boys were badly hurt. Seventeen men were badly injured. Nearly every house within a mile was blown to pieces, and some further away were seriously injured. One hundred yards away was thirty tons of dynamite in a cave which was not exploded.

THE OKLAHOMA MOVEMENT.

Pawnee Bill in Command of the Would-be Settlers at Wichita.

Pawnee Bill has assumed command of the immense Oklahoma movement, which has forces in all the leading towns in the Western Kansas, Northern Kansas, Western Arkansas, and is said to be from 10,000 to 14,000 strong, and daily increasing in numbers. For some months the movement has been worked quietly. Pawnee Bill says the movement is backed by strong financial support, and, while some were favoring an immediate march into Oklahoma proper, he would certainly oppose such a movement until action on the Oklahoma bill, now pending, could be taken, and if unfavorable action were taken the immense colony would certainly march to Oklahoma. Kansas colonists would enter the Territory at Caldwell and at Arkansas City, Oklahoma City, Arns would not be resorted to except for self-protection.

BERTHA DUGLE ACQUITTED.

The Jury at Clarion, Iowa, Declares the Actress Innocent of Murder.

The jury in the Diggle case, tried at Clarion, Iowa, brought in a verdict of not guilty. Mrs. Bertha M. Diggle was prostrated from nervousness, sat with her head resting in her hands, and when the jury said "not guilty" she fell back into her brother's arms unconscious. Her nerves were entirely unstrung. A physician was called, and in a few minutes she was sufficiently recovered to be assisted to the hotel. She was confined to her bed several hours. The jury stood nine for acquittal and three for conviction on the first ballot. The result was at once telegraphed to Mrs. Diggle's mother and relations in the East. She has made many friends in Clarion, who called to congratulate her.

HAYTI GIVES UP THE SHIP.

The Seized Vessel, the Haytian Republic, Delivered to the United States.

Advices have been received from Hayti to the effect that the dispute over the seizure of the American steamer Haytian Republic has been settled. The steamer was then delivered to the American men-of-war, and the latter honored the Haytian flag with a salute of twenty-one guns. It was thought the action of the United States Government in considered an abuse of power against a helless nation, and this opinion is said to be shared by some of the foreign diplomatic representatives. Gen. Legitime has been unanimously elected President of the republic, and is taking energetic steps to repress the revolution.

BIG HAVANA TOBACCO DEAL.

Four Millions Paid for Important Fields and the Hearty Gag Contract.

It is understood in New York City that negotiations have been completed by which the control for the manufacture of the Henry Clay brand of Havana cigars, as well as the most important tobacco fields of Cuba, has passed into the hands of an English syndicate. Senor Alvarez, owner of the Henry Clay brand, has signed the papers. The amount involved is about $4,000,000.

A Fraudulent Marriage.

Recently, at North Adams, Mass., Thos. Baldy married Mrs. Margaret Moor, who first completed to show that his first wife was dead. The sudden departure of the pair excited suspicion, and inquiry soon show that the documents purporting to show the death of Baldy's first wife had been forged by the woman, who had thus deceived this life were forgeries, and that the woman is still living, in a destitute condition, at Port Henry, N. Y.

Editor Matthews Dead.

J. N. Matthews, editor and proprietor of the Buffalo (N. Y.) Express, is dead. He was born on Nov. 21, 1828, in Bungay, County of Suffolk, England. He made the office for the manufacture of a much quoted paper, and succeeded in placing it on a sound financial basis. Two children survive him—George E. and Frances Amy, wife of Charles B. Graves. Mrs. Matthews died last February.

Wants the Case Reopened.

A claim has been filed at Lima, Ohio, by Mrs. Laura Snyder, of Chicago, to a share of the estate of George Lenaure, who died Sandusky, leaving property valued at several thousand dollars. The estate was divided among the heirs, and Mrs. Snyder now asks that the matter be reopened, claiming that she is one of the heirs.

Caught by a Devil-Fish.

The body of S. J. Hughes, of the United States Coast Survey, who fell overboard from a steamer in Puget Sound two weeks ago, was recovered thirty miles distant, an immense devil-fish fastened to one leg.

Died After Baptism.

George Rose, a drayman at Port Washington, Wash. Ter., was baptized in the Methodist church and fell dead the pew from the bursting of a blood-vessel.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

NOTABLE CAREER OF M. DE LESSEPS, THE FRENCHMAN.

The Suez Canal a Great Success, While the Panama Has Been a Failure, Already Costing Hundreds of Millions of Dollars, and Yet in Its Inefficiency.

[From the New York Tribune.]

With the exception of M. Ferdinand de Lesseps and the other officers of the more ill-fated Panama Canal company, no one must begin in the work of securing transoceanic transit for ships through the American isthmus. Practically, the entire career of M. de Lesseps comes to an end—a career long and active beyond ordinary mortal compass, and full of such picturesqueness as is seldom to be observed outside the pages of romantic fiction.

His father, Count Mathieu de Lesseps, was born at Bayonne, and, as he was equally well acquainted with the Spanish and French languages, was sent by Napoleon I. to accompany Lucien Bonaparte, his first ambassador to the court of Spain. While there he was made the confidant and administrator of Mr. Kirkpatrick, United States consul to Malaga, and was so pleased with the family of Senor Grevigny, a notable of Andalusia. This noble Spaniard had two fair daughters, with one of whom Mr. Kirkpatrick was already in love, and it did not take the young man long to fall in love with the other. The Scotch-American consul and his Frenchman lieutenant were ere-in-law, and while the sons of the latter was to become President of Suez, and the daughter of the former became Countess of Medjidje and mother of Eugenie, empress of France. The elder De Lesseps in 1803 represented Napoleon I. in Egypt. Bonaparte instructed him to make himself popular with the Turkish troops, a man of energy and ability who could be proposed at Constantinople for the Viceroyship of Egypt in place of Cairo. M. de Lesseps pitched on Mehemet Ali, a Turkish commander of a corps of bashi-bazouks, and advised his patron as to a short cut to power, and with the mamelukes, who were the oppressors of the Egyptian people, and the enemies of France. Mehemet, who might have been one of Carlyle's heroes, was duly inducted into precisive at the massacre of the citadel, which Kinglake so fully describes in his "Eothen." It was when M. Ferdinand de Lesseps was a young man, and was Consul in Egypt that he became intimate with Mehemet Ali's grandson, Said, the Viceroy, and his successor.

Ferdinand de Lesseps was born at Versailles, in 1805, and, after receiving a thorough diplomatic education by traveling about in company with his father, entered the consular service himself and held the post of Consul at Tunis, Lisbon, and Alexandria, becoming Consul General at the Egyptian capital, and receiving the cross of the Legion of Honor for his heroism and skill in an outbreak of plague. In 1849 he made French Minister at Madrid, and the opportunity was given him to effect a reconciliation between the popular government and the Pretender, Count de Montemolin, which was so well received by the government in Italy he was recalled in disgrace, and was not reinstated until the Republic was succeeded to the Viceroyalty at Cairo, and he invited the young Count de Lesseps to go to Egypt as his guest. The idea of the Suez Canal had been conceived in the sovereign's mind, and Said became his first convert. The Sultan and his ministers at first opposed the scheme, but the company was formed in 1854, with a capital of $20,000,000. The work was begun in 1858, was pressed with vigor and enthusiasm, and the canal was opened with imposing ceremonies Nov. 17, 1869—the same year in which the Pacific and Central Pacific railroads were connected by Pennsylvania, in Utah, Brigham Young, Jim Lessegs had the sympathy and the interest of the Emperor Napoleon in this great enterprise, and it was largely through his patronage that he was able to carry it to a successful conclusion.

The Suez Canal is 87 miles long, a low, sandy project, and is about 100 miles long. By constant dredging it is kept at a depth of 26 feet of water. Its bottom is wide and ships pass in and out at either end without the slightest danger. The business done on the canal has steadily increased. In 1885 no fewer than 3,000 ships passed through, and the gross receipts were $12,000,992; the shareholders were paid a dividend of 17.50 per cent. after the sinking fund and been provided for, and there were left in the sinking vessels that passed through amounted to 8,595,411 tons.

The idea of cutting through the Cordillera of Darien, and thus connecting the Atlantic with the Pacific at Darien originated with the Spaniards, who made it a highway for gold years and years ago; but their plans lay for long years buried in musty and dusty archives at Madrid. The idea of a canal of modern science revived with the idea, when M. de Lesseps assembled his famous congress in the Low Countries in May, 1879, a variety of competing schemes were submitted to it. The chosen was Nicaragua, followed to the project of the canal through Nicaragua and that of the Isthmus of Panama. The Nicaraguan line had its advantages and was the cheaper of the two by $5,000,000. It was estimated to cost only $40,000,000, and disbanded it would be difficult and expensive to keep up the locks. The Panama route, on the contrary, would be limited in the number of ships would be limited by the locks, but the Panama Canal would be finished at any moment to be taken by the United American earthquakes. So the congress recommended the adopting of the Panama route, by a overwhelming majority. A few of the members abstained from voting, and M. de Lesseps points out that the abstainers and the small minority were mainly made up of Spanish-American delegates, so that the decision may be fairly said to have been unanimous. The work should be adopted had been surveyed and recommended by the French naval officers, M. Wyse and others. The congress finally received, by seventy-eight votes against eight, twelve abstaining, that the canal, at the sea-level, without any locks, should be made from the Bay of Limon to the Bay of Panama; all the commissioners agreed in favor of this resolution. Other recommendations of the congress were adopted and followed by the company which M. de Lesseps formed to execute the work, styled "Compagnie Universelle du Canal Interoceanique."

In July, 1879, M. Ferdinand de Lesseps concluded an arrangement with M. Bonaparte Wyse and his associates for the purchase of a concession granted to the latter by the Government of the Colombian Republic for a canal across the isthmus of Panama. On the 23d of that month M. de Lesseps published his first prospectus, inviting subscriptions for 800,000 shares of 500 francs, giving a capital of 400,000,000 francs, were not taken up, but in November, 1880, the subscriptions were found to be 600,000 shares, and upward of 1,300,000 shares were applied for, leaving 100,000 shares. The company was thus constituted with a capital of 300,000,000 in 600,000 shares, which have been paid in full, and the company has contracted six loans, mostly bearing 3 per cent. interest, but taken at large discount, the total amount of obligations to 1887 being 720,505,500, which had produced in cash only $140,546,740; the annual charge for interest, with that for the sinking fund, is $15,315,000. The total cost of the work, allowing 10 per cent. for contingencies, was estimated in 1880 at $240,000,000, but the actual expenditure up to June 30, 1887, was $236,000,000, and yet the work was little more than begun.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

WORK OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed and Acted On.

HOUSE Little progress was made on the tariff bill by the Senate on the 19th inst., only three pages being disposed of. Mr. Voorhees, after a speech on several amendments, spoke on the House substitute, which he said was in direct violation of the mandate of taxation, but contained a temporary political success. He was in favor of taking up the House bill and pushing it to a vote. The following resolutions were introduced: Resolution by Senator Frye, from Foreign Relations Committee, that it is the sense of the United States Senate, with reference concern and disapproval upon any connection with any foreign government or corporation or agent of any such, and that the President of the United States is requested to communicate to the Senate any such information in his possession as may be deemed not incompatible with the public welfare. Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate the expression of the views of Congress to the Governments of the countries participating in the Brussels conference. In the House agreement to the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill was adopted, providing that no change of the reservation of the Sioux Indians should be made which in any way affects the rights of the Indians to the Black Hills. The bill for the relief of the Mormon Church, a vote in favor of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad company in the Supreme Court, several minor amendments were disposed of, and the House adjourned.

Some Simple Remedies.

When a felon first begins to make its appearance, take a lemon, cut off one end, put the finger in, and the longer it is kept there the better.

Often after cooking a meal a person will feel tired and have no appetite; for this heat a raw egg until light, stir a little milk and sugar, and season with nutmeg. Drink half an hour before eating.

When stung by a bee or a wasp, make a paste of common earth and water, put on the place at once and cover with a cloth.

For a cold on the chest, a flannel rag wrung out in boiling water and sprinkled with turpentine, laid on the chest, gives the greatest relief.

For a burn or scald, make a paste of common baking soda and water, apply to the part and cover with a linen cloth. When the skin is broken, apply the white of an egg with a feather; this gives instant relief, as it keeps the air from the flesh.

At the first signs of ring round, take a cupful of wood ashes, put in a tea-pot, pour on a quart of water, put the pan on the stove, put your finger in the pan, keep it there until the water begins to boil, or as long as it can be borne. Repeat once or twice if necessary.

The farmer who studies his soils knows where to plant and sow, and where certain crops will do most good. He knows the soil which grows the best oats, barley, and wheat. Money is wasted when the soil is studied; so study the soil.

MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS.

EVENTS AND INCIDENTS THAT HAVE LATELY OCCURRED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties, and General News Notes.

—On the basis of the Presidential vote the present population of the State is figured at 2,195,692, an increase of 242,034.

—Three weary, travel-worn men appeared at Cheboygan lately. They had left Cheboygan to "go West" and make themselves millionaires, but were glad to get home alive, with a very few dollars in their pockets.

—The Hubbard ditch in the north side of Verona has been completed and accepted. It is perhaps the best constructed water course of its kind yet established in Huron County. In its whole length, which is nearly seven miles, there is not a single section upon which the water will stand at any time in the year.

—The Council of Administration of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Michigan has fixed the date of the next encampment for August 14, 15, and 16, 1889. The place of the encampment, Bay City, was selected by the last encampment, which was held at Lansing.

—Ed Warner, of Otsego County, had the honor to kill a white deer while out hunting this season. This deer was not very scarce, as a white deer is a rarity seldom seen by the hunter. Ed being a Unclerind or a Polander, knew it getting to stuff its hide. It is said that to shoot and kill a white deer is fatal to the hunter. It's luck heretofore, for Ed has been that sort of superstitious talk, and says he'll shang away as usual and isn't at all worried. Perhaps he will desert him or that his aim will be less true.

—Dr. Eugene H. Wood, convicted at Howell of burning the residence of his brother-in-law, D. A. Blodgett, has been sentenced to sixteen years in State prison.

—The Muskegon Car Works has just booked orders for the manufacture of 600 cars, the work to commence immediately. The works for the past few weeks have been running light, doing repairing and turning out a few cabooses. A telegram was received the other day to the effect that an order for 500 cars had been received from the Chicago and Atlantic Railroad Company. Another order for 100 cars had been previously booked for an Ohio road, making a total order for 600 cars to be built this winter. These new contracts will insure steady work during the winter, or for the greater part of the winter, and other orders are in view. The Muskegon Car Works are steadily forging to the front rank, and the handsome order just received indicates that they are able to compete with the older companies throughout the country.

—Sam Turney, while at work at Dwyer's Hall in Bear Lake, was struck by a piece of shaft of the top of which struck him in the back, inflicting a cut thirteen inches in length. Turney, stunned by the blow, fell back on his seat, receiving a cut above the knee-cap of about eight inches. As soon as possible Dwyer hitched up his sorrel team and took the injured man to the Cottage Hospital, at Manistique, where he received every attention. Although his wounds are of a serious nature, Turney will recover.

—The shipping of refined copper by rail from Hancock was begun last week. The companies about two weeks ago, and is now going on at the rate of from six to eight cars per day, each car carrying about 25,000 pounds. This is about the daily quantity shipped during last winter.

—The annual meeting of the Michigan Dairymen's Association will be held in Jackson early in February. A series of premiums are being arranged by the Executive Committee, which will eclipse the premiums offered last year.

—The Grand Lumber Company are building and about the 15th of January will start running a saw mill at a place called Sheppardsville, on the Sox Road, about thirty miles west of Hermansville. The company own about 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 feet of pine within a half mile haul of the saw mill, and plenty more not far distant, so that there is plenty of work ahead for the mill this winter.

—The output of the Norrie mine, near L'Anse, this year has reached 404,000 tons, a record never before made by any mine in the world.

—The Pool Mining Company, of Jackson, struck coal at a depth of ninety-six feet, and will commence taking it out at once. The coal is said to be of a fine quality.

—Workmen are busy putting the new steel cells into the jail at Grayling.

—Menominee has 140 fire hydrants, and pays over $10,000 a year to a Boston monopoly for the privilege.

—One of the oldest petitions that Gov. Luce has ever received reached him recently in the shape of an application for the pardon of a glandered horse. The State Veterinarian had condemned the animal to be killed, but the owner stood defiantly upon the pedestal of his rights as a Michigan citizen and said so. He writes that the horse is in his barn unharmed, and will stay there until he hears from the Governor.

—The track on the Battle Creek and Bay City Railroad has been laid to the city limits of Bay City.

—A bath tub has been placed in the Muskegon County Jail by the Supervisors, for the use of the prisoners. The Muskegon News, in commenting upon the fact, says: "The general idea of cleanliness on the part of the Board is certainly commendable, but the judgment displayed in putting into the jail a tub to be used by all prisoners in all stages of uncleanliness, expecting in the long run clean and wholesome results, has been questioned. Instead of the tub it was pointed out that if a cell or other place were fitted up with appliances for shower-baths—the stone or iron floors arranged so that the water would flow off to the sewer—it would be a hundredfold more cleanly and satisfactory. That consummation is there who would admit certain prisoners to his bathtub and afterward use it himself? Applances for hot and cold water baths would have been far preferable and no more expensive."

—The Comstock Brothers have two trains drawing logs from the Mud Lake Railway region. One of the trains burned last Friday at the Lake Shore, and the other unloads into their mill boom. The trains consist of twenty-two sections of 100,000 feet of logs and are brought daily to Alpena.

—"Boom" was first used in political slang, then it passed into business usage and soon became recognized as good English, but the first time we ever heard it used in connection with logs, letters, says the Bellaire Advertiser, was when the Rev. T. G. Baxter in his prayer petitioned for a raise in his salary," said Mamie. "Did he tell you?" "No." "Then how do you know?" "Because he came calls the head clerk Jack."

A LYRIC.

If anyone sings to you
How my song is wrought
And my melodies are caught,
I will give, not sell you,
The secret, if there be one
Yet I could never see one,
How my songs are wrought.
In the flow ing of the wind,
In the murmuring of the stream,
In the music of the rain,
And the voice in my dream—
Where many things appear,
The dimple, the tear,
And the pearls of the year,
Are the notes of my song,
And even and morn
Where sadness is gladness
And sorrow uniform,
For there Song is born.

How Few Are Rich.

It is probable, to say the least, that fully 90 per cent. of the whole body of the people spend nearly all that they can earn; of this 90 per cent. a portion may be set aside to moderate part of their small earnings, become the owners of a house, or become depositors in a savings bank, or insure their lives in a moderate way. Of the remaining 10 per cent. a part are enough to protect themselves against want in their latter years, and a very small part may become rich, and then need not work unless they choose.—Edwin Atkinson, in the Forum.

TAKE A RECEIPT.

Whenever a payment is made on subscription in wood or produce, we want every person so paying to call at the office and get a receipt for the same, as that proper credit may be given on the books. Unless this is done, mistakes and misunderstandings are almost sure to follow. Please remember it.

The cold wave throughout the western states last week did not reach as far east as the Traverse region.

The election of General Harrison was a surprise to the voters of the United States, inasmuch as a plurality of 100,000 favored Mr. Cleveland's retention in office. Through clever arrangements the machinery of election by states was made to traverse the will of the people, and the credit or discredit of those arrangements falls to Matthew S. Quay, of Beaver, Pa.—Chicago Herald.

Origin of the Democratic Party.

The principles of government held by the democratic party of to-day can be traced back to Thomas Jefferson, who, although not the first to formulate these, first successfully drew around him a party intent on promoting that theory which widens the suffrage, is jealous of the rights of the states and insists on the rigorous enforcement of every constitutional limit of the federal power. Under Jefferson's leadership they called themselves republicans, but their opponents, the federalists, in derision, called them democrats. Being the party of the people, after the single defeat of 1796 they came into power in 1800 and won every election continuously up to 1820 when they saw the last vestige of the federal party disappear from national politics.

As early as 1810 they accepted the name democrat, and until 1824 the party was known as the democratic republican party. When the federal party died its memory was caught new affiliations and in 1824 coalesced with that faction of the democratic republican party which supported John Quincy Adams for the presidency. It was the New England federal vote for Adams that defeated Jackson, who got the popular and electoral plurality, but no candidate having a majority of electors, the election was thrown into the house, and Adams was chosen president. In the next four years the federal leaven permeated the Adams and Clay wing of the republican party, while the national democrats rallied to the support of Jackson. In 1828 the latter was successful, and until 1860 continued in control of the government, with the brief intervals held by Harrison and Tyler and by Taylor and Fillmore.

Thus it may be seen from this outline that the democratic party was the successful and controlling party of the country from 1800 until 1860, with the exception of twelve years. Thrice since that time it has been defeated by fraud and chicanery—in 1876, through the machinations of Zach Chandler and John Sherman; in 1880 through the corrupting influences of Dorsey and Dudley, and now, in 1888, through the same malign forces controlled by Quay and Dudley.—Chicago Herald.

WHAT'S THE MATTER —WITH THE— DETROIT FREE PRESS.

Three years ago at the encampment of the Michigan State troops at Brighton was first heard the high-pitched inquiry: "What's the matter with this one?" and then the stentorian reply, "He's all right!" The interrogatory and reply, expressive and taking, spread over the land, being made especially prominent by Michigan men at Chicago last summer, and as a rallying cry was vociferously repeated all through the political campaign.

As the Free Press comes under the discriminating eye of the reader we seem to hear this question:

"What's the matter with the Free Press?"

And its vast army of readers outshout a Peace Jubilee chorus in responding:

"Oh, the Free Press is All Right!"

And in verity the Free Press is all right.

What would you have good reader? The telegraphic news from the four quarters of the globe, the doings of kings and kaisers, parliaments and people?

Do you wish the run of the exchange, the fluctuations of Wall st., the talk of the Bourse, the price of the products of the soil, and the fabrics of man's skill?

Do you wait for the proceedings of the courts, the—shall we say—doings of congress, the news of the government, the amazing variety of intelligence gathered from all parts of the continent and related at length?

Are you interested in Michigan news, the movements of notable people, a picture of life in the great cities as seen by a corps of intelligent reporters and vividly reproduced in all the varying phases of nature?

Will editorial discussion of topics of general interest, keenly analyzed and comprehensible, interest you?

Will it please you to read of matters pertaining to "The Household" or "The Farm and Garden."

Are you entertained by discourse on music and the drama, in discussion of plays, in the gossip of the stage? Are you interested in general art matters?

Do you find pleasure in reading of what is going on in the world of athletics?

Or will your fancy be stirred, your sentiment secured, your emotions touched, your humor tickled, your faculties improved by the wonder fully interesting stories, poems, essays anecdotes and manifold exposition of human nature, which are to be found in its columns, original all of them, contributed by scores of writers of intellect and cultivation, a brighter and larger array than many a magazine can boast of, and not duplicated in any other paper, but to be read in the Free Press alone?

Do you like to know what is going on in the social world, and what is the latest society "facts?"

If these things cannot satisfy, appease, interest and instruct you, then it is hardly within the power of those who labor solely to produce a pure, refined and high class, modern newspaper to do so.

But if you will take the trouble to compare the paper with any other which may come before you, no matter from what place, near or remote, bearing in mind that the daily is furnished every day in the year for Seven Dollars and the Weekly (10 to 12 pages) each week for a year for One Dollar, your unbiased judgment in response to "What's the matter with The Free Press?" cannot be other than this; The Free Press is one of the best and cheapest family newspapers in the world, therefore,

"The Free Press is all right."

The Real Secret of the unprecedented success of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS may be found in two distinguishing characteristics, which more than anything else have contributed to its remarkable growth.

FIRST—It is a Daily Paper for Busy People. The people of this busy West appreciate keenly the necessity of an intelligent knowledge of the world's daily doings, but they are too busy to waste valuable time in searching through a cumbrous "blanket-sheet" news paper for the real news of art, literature, science, religion, politics, and the thousand-and-one things which make up modern civilization. They want news—all the news—but they don't want it concealed in an overpowering mass of the trivial and inconsequential. It is because THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is "all wheat and no chaff" that its circulation is over a million a week.

SECOND—It is an Independent, Truth-telling Newspaper. The people demand a fair, impartial, independent newspaper which gives all the news, and gives it free from the taint of partisan bias. With no mercenary political ambition to gratify, no "ax to grind," the impartial, independent newspaper may truly be "a guide, philosopher and friend." So honest most of every shade of political faith; and this is why THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS has to-day a circulation of over a million a week.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS now adds these two comprehensive elements so popularity, a third, in its unparalleled reduction of price to ONE CENT A DAY.

It is about large enough—never too large.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is for sale by all newsdealers at One Cent per copy, or will be mailed, postage paid, for $2.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. The farmer and mechanic can now afford, as well as the ever hard worked professional man, to have his metropolitan daily.

THE YEAR THAT IS GONE

RECORD OF THE EVENTS THAT HAVE MADE IT MEMORABLE.

Roll of Its Distinguished Dead—Schedule of Its Disasters by Fire, Flood, War, and Disease—Railroad and Marine Casualties—Summary Proceedings by Jack Ketch and Judge Lynch.

The Past Twelve Months.

JANUARY.

1—Pontifical high mass was celebrated at St. Peter's, Rome, in honor of the 1,800th anniversary of his golden jubilee, Pope Pius IX officiated the imposing ceremonies.

2—Gilded day was observed in California, memory in many places fell to freezing point.

3—Ice gorged in the Ohio, memory recorded the highest water in the river since the Calipsoes Pass, Wis., spirit thermometer recorded 40 degrees below zero.

15—Great suffering among people and wholesale destruction of cattle in Northern Texas, extraordinary cold weather; Colorado River frozen over—first time in memory.

17—Commission appointed by New York legislature to report on most humane method of executing condemned criminals recommended abolition of hanging and substitution of electricity.

19—Mrs. Clarissa Jackson, colored, of Hancock County, Ohio, became a grandmother at the age of 29 years.

FEBRUARY.

10—Patrick J. Hart, who was hanged for murder at Helena, Montana, claimed to have made a discovery for producing a substitute for all the ingredients being taken. He was unable to demonstrate its value, because the officials refused to delay the execution of his death sentence.

13—Albert, the pedestrian (James Albert Caldwell), beat the record in a walking match at New York, covering 519 miles in six days.

27—Inauguration at Chicago of a remarkable strike of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, which, on the 3, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 days, in one of the greatest in mileage and wealth in the country, caused the B. L. E. to be known and respected.

29—John A. Deal, aged 15, began his term of imprisonment for life at the Columbus (Ohio) Penitentiary, his crime being the brutal murder of his mother.

MARCH.

1—For the third time in her married life of three years, his wife of James McIlhiney, Texarkana, Texas, gave birth to triplets—nine living children in all.

12—Great storm along the Atlantic coast; telegraph lines crippled, trains blocked, business generally paralyzed; New York in a blizzard in snow, and Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia in rain; Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the States lying between them received 20 inches of snow; loss to New York, $200,000; to Philadelphia, $100,000; loss of life, 100.

27—Gen. Boulanger, a disturbing element in France's political and army circles, placed on retired list.

APRIL.

16—Elizabeth Arnold (second) died at Pittsburgh at the age of 18 years.

20—New York Assembly passed bill authorizing electrocution for the hanging in case of criminals convicted of murder.

—The famous trotting horse Dexter died of old age at the residence of his owner, Mr. Robert Bonner, New York. Dexter was foaled in April, 1858, and in August, 1867, at Buffalo, covered a mile in 2:17¼—the fastest mile ever trotted at that time—when he was purchased by Mr. Bonner for $33,500 and withdrawn from the turf.

27—General Joseph E. Johnston, highest rank of living officers of the Confederate army, elected an honorary member of a Grand Army post in Chicago, Illinois.

29—Lack of support compelled the suspension of the Atlantic Monthly, established in 1857 by Mr. Lowell, Mr. Holmes, Mr. Emerson, and others.

30—President Cleveland sent to the Senate the nomination of Hon. Melville Weston Fuller, of Illinois, to be Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

MAY.

2—Dwyer Brothers, of Brooklyn, N. Y., paid $40,000 for a yearling colt as a sire of thoroughbreds near Paris, Ky.—highest-priced yearling ever sold in America. The Dwyers had made new purchases at a price nearer to the famous Hanover, a horse that won $40,000 in cups and stakes for the owner while during his life.

9—Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott called to the pulpit of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, as the successor of Henry Ward Beecher.

12—Hon. Thomas Nelson, United States District Court at Atlanta, Ga., ruled that the Chinese Exclusion law is not unconstitutional.

EXECUTIVE WORK.

How It Is Divided Into Departments in the United States.

The great mass of work imposed upon the executive power of the government—embracing so many distinct subjects and requiring so many thousands of agents to perform—must be arranged and treated in an orderly and systematic manner. To expect the president to give it his close personal attention and directly superintend the doings of each agent would be absurd. The magnitude and diversity of the work demand its separation into parts, and the general supervision or management of each part must be intrusted to a separate officer.

On this business basis and in accordance with the design of the constitution congress has divided the work among seven executive departments, each in charge of a general officer, or head of department, known respectively as the secretary of state, the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of war, the attorney general, the postmaster general, the secretary of the navy and the secretary of the interior; and the work of each department is still further subdivided and distributed among bureaus and divisions and minor offices, in charge of lesser heads or chiefs, designated as commissioners, superintendents, directors and by various other general or special titles. An executive department, then, represents one of the grand divisions of government work boldly marked out as suggested by the express provisions of the constitution.

These grand divisions readily arrange themselves. The sovereign relations of the republic with foreign states and its official intercourse with the governments of the states at home may be regarded as one distinct grand division; accordingly we have the department of state. The collection, revenue and general fiscal affairs suggest another great branch of work; hence we have the department of the treasury. The mention of arms suggests work that in time of trouble is likely to tax the energy of a separate division; thus we very appropriately have a department of war. The prosecution of offenses against the United States, and other judicial matters wherein the interests of the republic are concerned constitute a general division, represented by the department of justice. The postal service, as one of the most intricate and important branches of government work, certainly forms another great division; therefore we have the postoffice department. Maritime protection, like the military or land defense, forms a separate division; and thus we have the department of the navy. The various matters of domestic concern not covered in these other departments but contemplated by the constitution, such as the census, public lands, patents and odds and ends, may be conveniently grouped into another general division; and thus we have the very miscellaneous, yet most manned, department of the interior.

To some of these executive departments are intrusted matters which, on their face at least, do not strictly belong to the grand division to which they have been assigned by law. For instance, the weather bureau is in charge of the war department, the work being intimately connected with the peaceful interests of agriculture and commerce, it is very generally demanded that it should be taken from military control and placed elsewhere. —St. Nicholas.

Tough Restaurant Patrons.

Progressive in all things, Chicago has a restaurant in her midst which is conducted on a new and safe plan. One of its customers the other morning was a man who ordered a plate of cakes, some hot rolls and a cup of coffee. "That will be 20 cents," said the fair young waitress, after consulting the bill of fare and counting on her fingers. "Do I have to pay in advance?" inquired the astonished customer. "Dat's de rules," answered the waitress. Well, the man gave her a dollar bill and she hustled around and brought him his change before she filled his order in the kitchen. When the visitor disposed of his meal and started out he met the stage manager of the restaurant and asked why they required customers to pay in advance. "Sneaks," was the laconic reply, and the customer suggested that they chain the knives and forks to the tables. "No use," said the stage manager, "all our customers carry tools." —Chicago Herald.

Handsome Indians.

The Dakotas are said to furnish fine specimens of Indian manhood. The older one of both sexes are of a dark copper color; the younger ones are much lighter, and the young women are quite comely, of clear complexion and good color, but often much overlaid with red and yellow ocher. The young buck's dress consists of beaded moccasins and breeches fringed with buckskin, a government shirt, coat and hat, though many go bareheaded. The hair is coarse and black, and is generally worn by both sexes in two long braids down the back, each braid usually decorated with beads and wampum.

Wild Ducks Getting Scarce.

A serious danger that threatens duck shooting is the manufacture of a new glue in Canada, which relies for its quality upon the albumen contained in the duck's eggs. The birds go north every spring and make their nests in the Canadian wilds. Formerly the eggs were not molested, and they were allowed to raise their young. Now that the eggs are valuable the nests are robbed by the trappers, and thus an immense quantity are destroyed. This materially reduced the supply of young ducks which should come south for fall shooting. Many other causes have combined to make duck shooting in the Mississippi valley sport sport, and unless the states pass the proper legislation our wild ducks, like the buffalo, will be decimated. Every sportsman will tell you the difference between duck shooting now and five years ago. The complaint is general that ducks in this country are scarce. Many professional duck hunters, who used to use swivel guns on the little lakes over in Illinois, find their occupation gone and have laid away their paraphernalia. There has been too much wild duck shooting. The prices asked by the game dealers would alone prove that. They will tell you that where they used to get more than they could handle, they now cannot fill any fill orders. The wholesale slaughter of the birds in the southern states during the flight of birds. Our supplies in passing northward or southward are shot down in the states of Texas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan, and none of these states seem willing to pass prohibitory laws as long as the citizens of other states are allowed to bang at the ducks while passing through their territory. If one state would act now others would follow; for all sportsmen recognize the danger. Something will undoubtedly be done at the next session of the legislature, as the game dealers are aroused. Why, if the present lax system continues two years longer precious few wild ducks will be seen in this vicinity.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Counting the Motes.

Counting the dancing motes in a bar of sunlight sounds like one of those hopeless, never ending tasks with which malignant fairies delight to break the spirit of little heroines in the German folk stories. Something more than this, however, has been achieved by modern science, which is now able to count the particles floating in any given portion of the atmosphere and determine what proportion of these are dangerous germs and what are mere dust. Dr. Frankland's curious experiments have shown us how to count the micro-organisms, and now John Aitken, of Falkirk, by a totally different method, has been enabled to take stock of the more harmless but hardly less interesting dust motes. Thirty thousand such particles have been detected by him in the thousandth of a cubic inch of the air of a room. In the outside atmosphere in dry weather the same measurement of air yielded 2,119, whereas, after a heavy rainfall, the number was only 521. That this power of prying into atmospheric secrets will eventually yield very important results must be obvious to all. Among the most curious discoveries already made is the direct relation between dust particles and fogs, mist and rain.—London Daily News.

There has been consecrated in Philadelphia a church for the exclusive use of the deaf. It is the first and only place of worship in this country, if not in the world, that is managed entirely by deaf mutes.

Woodward avenue Baptist church, Detroit, has a rather peculiar method of renting its pews. The members are asked to make a special contribution to the fund for church expenses. Large sums are not asked, the motto and principle of the plan being "Something from everyone, according to ability." The pledges are handed in to the board of trustees. A meeting is called and the selection of pews made, the largest contributor being entitled to first choice, the next largest to second choice, and so to the lowest.

"Eleven years ago this winter" said of Harrisville resident, who has had his rigging rattled by the blizzardly freezes of many winters on those shores, "the stage running between Standish and Alpena went on wheels all winter and never once making the trip on runners. I also remember" he continued, "that vessels were unable to make the port of Au Sable on the 15th of May the same year on account of ice which was solid for miles out in the lake."—Harrisville Review.

Twenty car loads of copper from the Lake Superior mines have passed through Pelosky in the last few days and every train brings more. The copper ingots are inclosed in large strong barrels, each barrel holding twelve hundred pounds. The barrels are loaded in the cars of the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic railroad, which are transferred across the straits on the St. Ignace and sent through to their destination without change. It is understood that every pound of copper is controlled by the great French copper trust. That which has already passed here was billed to Waltham, Mass., and Waterbury, Conn., presumably to be used in the manufacture of "solid gold" watch cases.—Independent.

Test of Death.

Tests have been suggested to determine whether or not life is extinct which has appeared to course the most recent, and held to be the most reliable, is called the hypodermic test. In using it the operator injects one hypodermic syringful of strong solution of cochia under the skin of the arm or other convenient portion of the body. If the body be not dead—if life faintest circulation—the stuff will produce on the skin, at the point where it was injected, a red patch, on the surface of which red spots will appear; where he absolute death, there is produced a brown dark blotch, is distinctly conclusive against entire vitality.—Boston Herald.

Pollinid Ice.

Masses of ice must read up on the recent investigations of Kodak, Pengry and Sudden, showing that ice taken from polluted streams is not purified by freezing. Kodak tells us that if ice from streams containing putrefactive matter or sewerage it will be contaminated. In 1878, at Rye, Eng., an epidemic broke out in a hotel, and was traced to ice taken from an adjacent pond. The ice of this pond in summer was found swarming with putrescent matter, the matter as well as bacteria, eliminated by any comparatively of cold. Too many of our sources the recipients of sewage, is the ice age of civilization, we must have it pure.—St. Louis Democrat.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY IN ARKANSAS.

A Family Dispute Leads to a Duel, Both Contestants Being Killed.

Information of a shocking tragedy comes from Craighead County, Arkansas. It appears that some days ago the wife of William West, who was somewhat of a desperado, left him and returned to her mother, Mrs. Mary Dairey. West went to see his wife, who refused to receive him, but her mother went out on the porch, talking with her the young child of the couple. West began to abuse Mrs. Dairey, charging her with being the cause of the trouble between his wife and himself. Stephen Dairey was attracted to the porch by the dispute and ordered West to leave the place. West replied by pulling a pistol and firing two shots, one passing through Mrs. Dairey's hand and the other striking Stephen in the face. Dairey then got a repeating rifle and the two men exchanged shots. West was shot through the heart and died instantly, and Dairey was hit in the eye and lived but a few hours.

MURDERED IN HIS BED.

A Hannibal, Mo., Pork-Packer Killed by a Burglar.

Amos J. Stillwell, one of the oldest and wealthiest citizens of Hannibal, Mo., was murdered in his bedroom in a struggle with a burglar. Mr. Stillwell and his wife had been a social call early in the evening. They retired home and soon retired. Mr. Stillwell slept with one of the children and Mrs. Stillwell in the same room, with two children. She was awakened by some disturbance and heard her husband say, "Fannie, is that you?" She partly arose, and just at that moment saw a man standing with his back to her and near Mr. Stillwell's bed. A moment later she heard a whirring sound as of something thrown violently through the air, followed by the noise of some one running down the stairway. She then ran to Mr. Stillwell's bed and was horror-stricken to find that he had been murdered. Amos J. Stillwell, the murdered man, had long been engaged in the pork-packing business in Hannibal, and had accumulated a fortune estimated at $150,000. He was well and favorably known throughout the valley of West and South. He was about 60 years of age.

RICH GOLD DISCOVERIES.

An Old-Time Mining Excitement in Southern California.

An old-time mining excitement is full blast in Southern California and Arizona as the result of recent discoveries. Two Mexicans took to Yuma a large quantity of pure gold, which they said they had obtained in Southern California, about 100 miles from Yuma. They had been prospecting in a locality that was abandoned only recently by hostile Indians, who had kept miners out of the country for many years. The Mexicans said the gold was easily worked, and they would have stayed there longer and brought off more if their provisions had lasted. Their story set everybody in Yuma crazy with the gold fever, and a rush to the new fields has begun.

SEVEN PEOPLE DROWNED.

All the Occupants of a Boat Lost in Trying to Cross the Ohio.

Mrs. Turner and her little daughter, also a daughter of George Clyed, three Brooks brothers, and a man whose name is unknown, all colored, attempted to cross the river from Kentucky to Ohio in a small flat-bottomed boat. At some distance from the shore at Ripley, Ohio, waves from two passing steamboats capsized their little craft, and all seven occupants of it were drowned. They all lived in Kentucky.

A Justice Resigns.

N. J. McConnell, Chief Justice of Montana Territory, has forwarded his resignation to President Cleveland, finding the duties of the office too burdensome. Judge McConnell was appointed from Tennessee about two years ago. He will probably form a law partnership at Helena and continue to reside in that city. His resignation is to take effect as soon as his successor can be appointed and qualify.

NOT YET ENDED.

The Celebrated Litigation in Which Milton Weston Was Interested Revived.

Henry Hemaley, of Murrayville, Pa., gassed lamp, has brought two suits at Pittsburg to recover damages for the gas he was swept from the Romaley lands in the Murrayville gas fields against the Pew-Jackson Company and the Ferna Fuel Company, both of Pittsburg. The damages claimed are $100,000 in all or $50,000 against each of the defendants. The plaintiff claims that in the last decade of the life of Milton M. Weston, maker of six acres of his land in 1877, and that the defendants by assignment hold this lease, which did not include the natural gas producer. In January, 1876, he alleges, he leased to the same parties twenty-seven acres in addition, and under the terms of this lease the stove, coal, and gas were to remain with plaintiff in fee simple. This lease was also assigned to the defendants. The plaintiff claims that this lease was ante-dated to Jan. 15, 1878, and that he never acknowledged the execution of the lease, and the name of James Ferguson, Justice of the Peace, before whom it purports to have been acknowledged, was not the signature of said magistrate, but a forgery; that the procurement of the new lease was a fraud upon plaintiff, executed for the purpose of covering the well already bored, as the first lease did not include gas, and that, therefore, the gas produced from the well was his property. It will be remembered that Henry Hemaley was jointly indicted with Milton Weston of Chicago, A. M. Beaver, and others for the killing of Obediah Haymaker at Murrayville, Pa. The killing grew out of trouble between Weston and Beaver, and because each claimed to hold a lease for the gas privileges upon the farm of Henry Hemaley, the plaintiff in this suit. During the imprisonment of Weston and the trial of Bowen, Weston, and himself Hemaley did nothing, and now that Weston is free and he acquitted he has begun to determine whether he was in the right in the Murrayville affair, has been begun.

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

Dun & Co.'s Agency Report an Improvement and Increased Activity.

The week of trade just past has been reported by R. G. Dun & Co.:

Trade during the week was undisturbed by the cold weather, which was experienced over the middle of the region, and on the whole improved. The long forebodings of a shortage in the cotton crop, but there was some recovery, and at New York amounted to but 10,000,000 bushels for the week, and it is still expected that it will be swelled enough to permit marketing of a crop equal to that of last year. The failures throughout Canada and the United States, with lower freights, keep European prices low, and there is a steady demand by operators throughout Europe who bought cotton early in the season, expecting to see it go very widely above last year's 10.60 basis. Prices unchanged, with 8 4-16 cents bid, a break in the spring crop, and a slight advance in July, declined 10 cents per 100 gallons. No monetary disturbance has occurred, and business is in a healthy condition. Exchanges are simply equalized, though slight elsewhere than at New York, and there is no demand for currency at Boston or Philadelphia. The Treasury is still putting out more than it takes in, $2,500,000 being the last week. The excess of exports over imports of merchandise for the last fiscal year, for merchandise and $64,000,000 gold, and set forth the "conditions that confront us" then leaving the field ready for the President-elect with solutions in his message to Congress in its extra session.

PRESIDENTIAL INAUGURAL.

Preparations Being Made for the Reception of Gen. Harrison and Party.

Quarters have been engaged in the Arlington Hotel, in Washington, D. C., for Gen. Harrison and party prior to the inauguration ceremonies next March. There will be in the party Gen. Harrison and wife, Russell Harrison and wife, J. R. McKee, wife and two children, ex-Senator Sanders, of Nebraska, and wife (parents of Mrs. Russell Harrison) and C. W. Halford, Private Secretary wife and daughter. The distinguished guests will reach Washington one day before the inauguration day. They will be located in the Johnson annex on H street and be served in a private dining-room. On the morning of inauguration day they will go to Willard's Hotel, on Pennsylvania avenue, and occupy a parlor on the second floor, where they will view the procession as it forms. In accordance with the precedent established by Andrew Jackson, and observed by every President but two since then, President Cleveland will call for President-elect Harrison at Willard's and accompany him to the Capitol.

LITTLE CANDIDATE FOR THE MUSEUM

Cora Bell Fellows—Chaska Is the Mother of a Booming Boy.

Mrs. Chaska, nee Cora Bell Fellows, is a mother. The child is a booming boy. Mr. and Mrs. Chaska have resided from Bird Bird camp, Dakota, and now reside in one of the agency cottages. Chaska is a charged Indian. Mrs. Chaska is well known and associates little with his former cronies. Mrs. Chaska has undergone a wonderful change, the visit East no doubt assisting in the work of transformation. When she by a separate Chaska was standing in front of the agency store puffing a cigarette, and extended her hand for an animated slime-museum shake. Then he proffered a cigarette from a silver holder. Mr. and Mrs. Chaska have received congratulations from museum managers, but all have been refused. The child, reputedly borrowed $300 from an agency employe, giving a mortgage on her horses and carriage. Chaska is not out for a farmer. Mrs. Chaska will have to hustle in behalf of herself and little one.

DAKOTA FARMERS RIOT.

Several Persons Badly Hurt in a Fight Between Russians and Americans.

A serious riot occurred at Tripp, Dakota, between Russian Mennonites and Americans. There was a wrangle over a goose, which resulted in a fight in which a dozen or more men were engaged. The Russians are Mennonites. Two brothers named Johnson, who were passing, joined in the melee with knives. A Russian named Mayer was stabbed, and he in turn split Charles Johnson's head with a neckyoke, inflicting a fatal injury. The Johnsons were armed with knives, which they used to good effect. The Russians were badly cut up, some twenty men were engaged in the affair, and it is said that all were cut more or less. The Johnsons were passing, joined in the melee with knives. SERVED HIM RIGHT.

While Cruelly Beating His Ox at Lima, Ohio, a Driver Loses an Eye.

A singular accident occurred to John Fourman, a teamster, at Lima, Ohio. He was driving a team of oxen when they stalled in a rut, and because they could not pull the heavy load out he commenced beating them with his whip in most brutal manner. Finally he tied a huge knot in his whip-lash and said he would beat their ears off unless they backed out with the load and brought the whip down with all his force, but he missed the animal's head and the lash wrapped itself around his own head, and striking his right eye drove it back into his head about an inch, making a frightful wound and one that will cause the loss of his eye.

ARMED AND READY TO KILL.

The French and Eversole Factions on the Point of Renewed Hostilities.

Ire Davis, Clerk of Perry County, Ky., says that the French-Eversole factions are on the eve of renewed hostilities. Both sides are armed and determined, and if a renewal of the fight is likely to take place. The French faction has thirty-five men, armed with Winchesters, encamped in a shake near French's home. They are all bold, reckless men, with little regard for human life. French gives them $50 each per month, for acting as his soldiers and bodyguard. The Eversoles are well armed, have a larger force than the French faction, and, as they are eager for a fight, considerable blood is liable to be spilled.

CRUSHED TO DEATH.

Four Men Killed at Denver, Colo., by Falling Rock.

A fatal accident occurred at Denver, Colo., which resulted in the instant death of four men and the mortal wounding of two others. The Denver Gas Company had a contract with a company excavating a ditch six feet deep along the side of the embankment on the track of the cable car line, when suddenly the track for an entire block fell, crushing the ditch full of timbers and rock. The dead are William K. Kater, 50 years old, married, leaves a large family; N. M. Wilson, married; Joseph Trantine, leaves a widow; Mike Dillon, single; and an unknown man of about 35 years. The injured are Cozen was badly crushed and can not recover.

THE STEAMER HANNA HORROR.

Loss of Life Placed at Twenty-four—Sailor Givens' Fearful Injuries.

A special from New Orleans places the total loss of life by the burning of the steamer Hanna at Plaquemine, La., at twenty-four. Of the injured men in the hospital four or five will die, among them Givens, the sailor who was the hero of the disaster. His face is horribly burned, his nose is gone, and his eyes are burned out; his left arm is completely fried away, and his left side and leg charred.

BLOWN UP WITH DYNAMITE.

A House in which Negroes Were Making Merry Wrecked—Several Hurt.

A house near Harrisburg, Va., in which a number of colored people were holding a party, was blown up by dynamite, and several of the inmates were fatally wounded.

From Foreign Lands.

Gen. Loris Melikoff, the famous Russian officer, is dead at Nice.

Sig. Mancini, formerly Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs at Naples, is dead. He was 73 years of age.

M. Rex, the Bourse speculator who failed recently at Paris and fled to Switzerland, is dead.

King Milan has consented to relinquish the right to conclude foreign alliances and military conventions. The situation has been cleared by this resolve, and the radicals are now ready to accept the new constitution.

Husband and Wife Die.

The death of Elsea Browning and his wife, pioneer citizens of Southeastern County, Indiana, aged 88 and 82 years respectively, occurred almost at the same time. Mrs. Browning was taken suddenly sick and the news of her sickness caused her husband to be stricken down with grief, which resulted in his death. His demise was 5 flowed two hours later by that of his wife. The couple had been married over sixty years.

David Cash, the Shipbuilder.

Mr. David Cash, of Cedar City Island shipbuilder, died of apoplexy at his plantation near Greenville, Fla. He was

Mr. Cash and his brother Jesse moved from New York to Long Island City, where they established a shipyard at City Island, while the Cash family lived on Long Island. The firm of David Cash has been closely associated with the shipping interests of New York and is a shipbuilding firm of world-wide reputation. Schooners for Thebaud & Co., in the West India trade, he built; also the steam yacht Resolute for Mr. A. S. Hatch and the Atalanta for Mr. William Astor.

Had a Whole Town Arrested.

The shopkeeper of a man named F. M. Cutler, living in a small town in the western part of Nebraska, captured him with a horse that belonged to a neighbor and was whipped him for beating his wife, whom he had been compelled to marry. He swore out warrants under which the entire male population of the place have been arrested and taken to Greeley Center, where they will be tried.

Suing the Northern Pacific.

At Lincoln, Neb., John Fitzgerald, in behalf of himself and other stockholders of the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company, has begun suit against the Northern Pacific Railway and the Construction Company for an accounting, the amount involved being $1,500,000. The bill alleges frauds and illegal acts by Jay Gould and others.

Drowned in Sight of His Mother.

Paul Combs, a member of the faculty of the Maryville Agricultural College, was drowned while ducking at Breton's Bay, near Leonardtown, Md. His mother saw his accident from the house, but fainted away and was unable to render any assistance.

Received into the Church.

In the Chapel of the Ladies of the Sacred Heart, at New York, Mme. Gaston De Fontillinat, nee Smith, sister of Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, was received into the Roman Catholic Church. She is the wife of Baron Gaston De Fontillinat, whom she married a year ago in Paris.

Loss by Fire.

Two stores, four dwellings, an ice house, two sheds, and two stables at New Cumberland, W. Va., were destroyed by fire. The loss, $15,000, is fully covered by insurance.

Prince Eugene Dead.

Prince Eugene of Savoie-Carignan is dead at Turin. He was 72 years of age and was an Admiral in the Italian navy.

WHATCOM COUNTY, W. T.

AN ATTRACTIVE FIELD FOR BOTH LABOR AND CAPITAL.

Its Splendid Climate, Immense Forests, Magnificent Farming Lands, Inexhaustible Coal Beds, Fine Stone Quarries, and Unexhaustible Fisheries.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

WHATCOM, WASH. TERR., December 1, 1888.

Whatcom County lies in the north-western corner of not only Washington Territory but the United States, the forty-ninth parallel separating it from British Columbia, while the Gulf of Georgia is its western boundary. Its most northwesterly town is the Bellingham Bay town of Sehome, and it is just where the international boundary line meets the water of Semiahmoo Bay. Whatcom County has an area of over 2,000 square miles, much of it is a wooded plain interspersed with rivers and lakes, with mountains to the east, in which coal and ores are found in large quantities. The soil is unprolific in all the products of the north temperate zone, the kinds of fruit and vegetables that will not grow along this parallel to the east, or even many parallels south of it, east of the Rocky Mountains. This is due to the influence of the warm winds from the Pacific Ocean, which give singular uniformity to the temperature, winters with the mercury seldom below zero, and summers with no oppressive days or sultry nights. There is exemption from blizzards, cyclones and tornadoes. The entire Pacific Coast is one of great resources and possibilities, the lumber, fish, fruit, and miners.

The resources of this region are noted the world over for the immense size of trees, of which the fir and cedar take the leading place, although maple, ash, poplar, spruce and other varieties are found in marketable quantities. It is not uncommon to take from eight to twelve million feet of lumber from a quarter section. It grows to a height of from 200 to 300 feet, and is in demand among shipbuilders for masts and spars on account of its straightness, tenacity, and freedom from knots, and large quantities go to the shipyards of Puget Sound. The cut beds, too, are of large extent, with the finest sandstone on the Pacific coast is found. The famous Chinaman quarry, which supplies stone for every city on the coast, lies on Bellingham Bay, and rises 250 feet above the water, which is deep enough to allow the largest ship to come alongside and load. Viewing the region from nearly every standpoint it is an attractive field for both labor and capital.

Whatcom, the seat of government of the county, is situated on the eastern shore of Bellingham Bay, and was first settled in 1858, during the Frazer

River gold excitement. This site was the original one for the Western terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad, owing to its being the nearest point to the Pacific Ocean, but for certain reasons the route was changed. Two railroads, however, are now in the course of construction—one to a connection with the Northern Pacific and another with the Canadian Pacific. Bellingham Bay is one of the best harbors on the coast, and a number of towns are springing up on its shores. Whatcom, Sehome, Fairhaven and Fairhaven are in close proximity, and will eventually become one town. Some twenty steamers visit these places weekly with daily mails and connections with Tacoma and Seattle. The combined population of the four towns exceeds 4,000, and is of the kind of people who believe in schools, churches, and newspapers.

There is more agricultural land tributary to these points than in any other country in the Pacific Northwest, which, combined with the lumber trade, mineral advantages, water and fishing privileges, good climate, excellent health conditions, and fine scenery, might and will, in the near future, make this a most prosperous section.

A Debtor's Logic.

"Could you manage to pay me what you owe me?" asked one traveling man of another.

"Yes, I might, but you may as well wait for it.

"I like your coolness.

"My dear fellow, there are really better off as it is. You don't doubt that I am going to pay you this money, do you?"

"Not the slightest."

"And if I were to pay it to you now, I would only borrow it again.

"That's more than likely."

"And the next time I borrowed it I might not pay you at all. So you see it is safer as it is."—Merchant Traveler.

Significance of Toasts.

Jinks—I hear you refused to drink to the health of your old friend Uggleman at the banquet last night.

Winks—Yes, but I didn't mean any slur, you know. Greatman got up and asked that his health be drunk with water, and I didn't care for water.—New York Weekly.

BANQUET OF THE MASSACHUSETTS TARIFF REFORM LEAGUE.

Many Noted Men Present—Speech of Secretary Fairchild—A Letter from President Cleveland Commending the Work of the League Received with Cheers.

BOSTON, MASS.

The annual banquet of the Massachusetts Tariff Reform League took place here at the Revere House Friday evening. The principal guest of the evening was Secretary of the Treasury Fairchild. Among the other guests were: The President-elect of Harvard College, T. W. Higginson, F. A. Collins, Henry L. Pierce, George S. Hale, C. R. Codman, Leopold Morse, Jesse Metcalf, and William Endicott, W. E. Russell presided, and in an opening speech said the gathering was not one of interested capitalists to rejoice over a political victory, but a gathering in the interests of the propagation of a great political economic reform. A letter from President Cleveland, who had been invited to attend the banquet, and then read. The letter was as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 24.

MESSRS. Sherman, Hoar and others, Committee:

GENTLEMEN—I am exceedingly sorry that I can not be present at the annual dinner of the Massachusetts Tariff Reform League of Dec. 28. This is not merely a formal and common expression of regret. MICHIGAN INDUSTRIES.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF LABOR AND INDUSTRIAL STATISTICS.

An Interesting Array of Facts and Figures Relative to One of the Seven Industries Considered in the Annual Report.

The sixth annual report of the Bureau of Labor and Industrial Statistics, just issued, contains the result of an investigation of the wages and social condition of the men who produce wealth from Nature's laboratory.

A thorough and systematic canvass was made during 1886 of the labor employed in the manufacture of fire clay into drain tile and sewer pipe, in the iron mines of Marquette and Menominee, the copper and building stone quarries and the mines in the coal mines of Southern Michigan and the great copper mines in the Upper Peninsula. Special canvassers obtained the information sought for by blows, through interviews with the miners and laborers, and from the operators themselves, and from the men themselves. In the various industries the number of men interviewed were: Fire clay, 54 employes; slate, 9; coal, 60; grindstone, 124; gypsum, 26; building stone, 352; copper, 2,675.

The average wages paid in the Michigan industry will show the sum of the report. At most the entire labor, which includes mining, stone work, the stamp mill, and smelting works, is foreign. There are no Chinese or colored men employed in the mines. The nationalities of those interviewed were: Finlanders, Huron, Atlantic, Calumet and Hecla, Osceola, and Tamarack mines, and the smelting works at Hancock and on New Mass. In the above tabulation, the Finlanders are classed with the Swedes. The average of Finlanders, (Swedes included) for the Hurons exceeds a canvass of 3,000. The nationalities are: Old Americans, 102; Canadians, 186; Finlanders, 336; Canadian French, 52; Irish, 158; Scotchmen, 136; English, 115; Finlanders, 336; Swedes, 352; Norwegians, 41; Italians, 2; Austrians, 2; Germans, 2; Poles, 2; Bohemians, 2; Scotchmen, 2; Welshmen, 2; Swedes and one each Russian, Spaniard, and Australian. Of the 2,675 employed in Marquette here are 1,000 children of American parents; 175 are children of foreign parents; 1,000 are Finlanders; 200 are Canadian French; 7 twins; 1 family of 9 children; 1 Polish, 3 twelve, 4 Norwegian, and 11 entirely American families.

Out of the 3,059, 1,862 men are married, and 1,197 are single men. Of the married men, 1,862 have families of children, and 1,197 have provided for their families by carrying on housekeeping. Of the married men, 1,862 have their own homes; 452 are reported as owning their own homes, and 1,000 are reported as paying a total sum of $4,200.

The average wages is indicated by the newspaper, 1,000 earn $1 per day; 1,000 earn $1 per day, and 127 a month.

The fact that 32 families out of 1,862 own a piano, and 286 an organ is evidence of a beginning of the accumulation of wealth, and the fact that 1,862 families have stoves shows a desire for modern household conveniences.

The average number of hours labor employed in copper mining, owing to the nature of the work, is shorter than in other industries, and the average wages is more than in other industries. The children in Canadian only are reported as working ten hours per day, which averages up to a total of $15,485.

The average wages is supposed by the public generally to be underestimated, although the average earnings of the men show they enjoy their health, 1,497; and that they have good health and reported better health than when at home, 1,000; only moderate poor health, 1. Their tenures were: Poor health, 30; fair, 17; good, 1,000; better than at home, 1,000; best, 1,000.

The following table will give our readers an idea of the number of men employed in the different nationalities employed in the industries, and the average earnings of each nationality, and the average earnings of each nationality. The reason is that the majority are boys, some of foreign parents, who are

THE JOURNAL.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in state convention in Harmony's hall, at Grand Rapids, ON THURSDAY, JEN. 28, 1892,
At 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating one candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court, and two candidates for regents of the State University, to complete the unexpired term of each, and such other business as may properly come before it. Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least one delegate. Delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day of the state convention, for the purpose of choosing as follows: one vice president of the convention, and one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization, and order of business and resolutions.

I. M. WESTON,
FRANK H. THOMAS, Sec'y. Chairman.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates.

THE Grand Rapids Leader says that Mayor I. M. Weston of that city gives more to charity in proportion to his income than Gen. Algor does; but, adds the leader significantly, he does not make his charities a part of political capital.

THE Detroit Journal comes nearer to perfection in mechanical style and make up than any other Michigan daily received at this office, and editorially it is a right lively representative. The Journal is an ingenius and persistent advertiser, and on general principles can be rated as a success.

THE Detroit Journal You: Book for 1889, mentioned in these columns last week, contains over 160 closely printed pages of facts of value to the merchant, mechanic, and the laborer, who would keep posted on affairs of today. It is presented free to every yearly superiber, and may be obtained by sending 30 cents to the Detroit Journal company.

THE Boston Globe of last Tuesday says that "up to date James G. Blaine has not received from Benjamin Harrison the offer of a place in the cabinet. He has received nothing from the President-elect since the election, not even a polite note thanking him for his incalculable services in behalf of Gen. Harrison during the campaign." This is shameful. It is no wonder that the plumed knight's friends are making the political atmosphere lurid. They have a right to.

Is an article discussing almsgiving in general, and the late charity ball in Chicago in particular, the Chicago Daily news says: "Our whole system of charity and almsgiving seems to be wrong—so radically and injuriously wrong that it is quite time for protest and remedy. And the form of remedy is not far to seek. Let the cause which creates the great bulk of poverty furnish the means for its relief. Whiskey makes more paupers, four-fold more, than all other agencies combined. Let whiskey pay the expense of their support. Such organizations as the Relief and Aid society should be, in the main, maintained by a per cent of the license fees of the saloons which make the receipts necessary for such organizations. And they should then—under penalty of forfeiture of such income—be prohibited from their general and indiscriminate levy upon the charitable public."

THE Railway Series is continued in the January number of Scribner's Magazine, with a very lucid explanation of "Railway Management" from an official point of view, by Gen E. P. Alexander, president of the Central Railroad, Georgia. The line of responsibility and duty from the president to the track-walker or switchman is outlined with remarkable clearness and precision—for the first time making plain to a general audience the workings of a most complex organization. Among the things explained are the handling of trains, involving the making of time tables and the work of the train-despatcher; imperative rules for avoiding accidents; how freight and passenger rates are made; and how the earnings of a road are calculated. The illustrations are made from Blum, Burns, and other skillful artists. It is announced that Ex Postmaster-General James will contribute to the series an article on the "Railway Postal Service."

Reform the Libel Law.

The constitution of the United States guarantees freedom of speech and liberty of the press. So does the constitution of every state in the union. The American people boast of these rights.

Yet under the antiquated libel laws that still remain in force no newspaper in the United State can report the proceedings of a public political meeting without risk of civil and criminal liability.

A mass meeting of citizens is held at Coopers Union to denounce political or official corruption. If any one of the speakers makes statement which can be construed into an unwarranted reflection upon an officer, a candidate or an individual the paper that reports it as part of the news of the day may become the victim of a libel suit.

Are not such laws a mockery in a country where forty constitutions share in favor of free speech and a free press?

In this respect we are behind England. That country has recently blotted out this absurdity from its law. By a recent act of parliament the proceedings of public meetings are put on the same footing as parliamentary and judicial proceedings. They are declared to be privileged, and newspapers may report them without being called to account for libel.

This country should not merely follow, it should go beyond, the example of England. We should reform the libel law altogether.—New York Herald.

Brand Each Floater With an "F."

As a means of moral restraint upon electoral corruption a judge of the New York court of appeals proposes to repeal all existing laws against bribery, and to punish with a forfeiture of the right of suffrage every man who may sell his vote. This suggestion, should be amended by punishing in the same way every man who may undertake to buy the vote. There would be no sellers of votes if there should be no buyers.

The rigorous enforcement of such a law would have a most discouraging effect upon the people who make a regular traffic of their votes, and who are classified on the lists of campaign boodlers as "floaters," to be handled in "blocks of five." A stamp of infamy would be put upon this trade in men. A vote seller, if once convicted, could never have another opportunity, of polluting the ballot box. He would forever become a political outcast, incapable of holding up his head among his fellow-citizens.—Philadelphia Record.

Do Not Need More Protection.

The Fall River Cotton Mills show a high degree of prosperity during the year 1888. Nearly all advanced their dividends in marked proportion. The American Linen Mill (which is a cotton mill) and not a linen mill) gained from a 12½ per cent dividend in 1886, and a 13½ per cent one in 1887, to 22½ per cent in 1888; the Granite Mills have advanced from 12 per cent in 1886 to 22 per cent in 1888; and the Union Mill, which paid 16 per cent in 1886 and 21 per cent in 1887, in 1888 paid the enormous profit of 29 per cent on a capital stock of $750,000. The poorer mills picked up in somewhat the same proportion, and the Fall River Mfg. Co., which was a 3-per cent mill in 1886, is now a 12 per cent mill. The Fall River cotton mills apparently are not in need of any additional protection at present.—Boston Transcript.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Rippus, Ind., testifies: I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of 18 years' standing." Alphonzo Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half a dollar a bottle at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 2

A Narrow Escape.

Col. W. K. Nelson, of Brooklyn, came home one evening feeling a peculiar tightness in the chest. Before retiring, he tried to draw a long breath but found it almost impossible. He suffered four days from pneumonia, and the doctors gave him up. Dr. Acker's English Remedy for Consumption saved him and he is well today. Sold by G. W. Beaman, druggist.

WHEN YOU COME

to think of it, BELFORD'S MAGAZINE for December, published today, gives for 25 cents as much and a better quality of literature than can be bought in any other form for a like sum: DONS PIATT, the Editor, is seriously philosophical on "The Late Election," "The Balance of Trade," "A Plea for the Parent" and "About the Ballot." Circumstances affect some great editors. Had the DEMOCRATS won the editorials might have been different. Nevertheless, they are mighty good reading—sarcastic, bright, humorous and pertinent. MR. I. L. KINKEAD supplies the long novel. It is American, anyway, and, though not as dull and ponderous as ROBERT ELSMERE, is far more pleasing, and, therefore, a better story, being overflowing with love making, incidents and action, and the plot is sufficiently complicated and mysterious. The celebrated comedian, WM. J. FLORENCE, tells a story "About Dead Shot Dan." It is as humorous and unique as anything MARK TWAIN ever did. CELIA LOGAN'S story, "A Christmas Round Robin," reads like a chapter from PICKWICK PAPERS.—"Christmas in Egypt" is ROSE EYTINGE'S contribution; it is like herself, bright and clever. The two weighty articles are ETHELBERT STEWART'S "Statistics of Idleness" and "Certain Ancestors of PRESIDENT CLEVELAND." A story of frontier life, "Joe," by ROSALIE KAUFMAN, is not inferior to any of BRET HARTE'S. The poetry is furnished by Helen G. Smith, W. H. Hall, Thomas Hubbard, Joel Smith and W. E. S. Fales, and it is all poetry too. But the tit bit in this galaxy of good things is JAMES STEEL'S essay on "The American Eagle Under Difficulties." It is as original and funny as CHARLES LAMB'S on Suckling Pig.

BELFORD, CLARK & CO., Publishers, Chicago, New York and San Francisco.

Scribner's Magazine,

For 1889.

The publishers of Scribner's Magazine aim to make it the most popular and enterprising of periodicals, while at all times preserving its high literary character. 25,000 new readers have been added during the past year, mostly by the increased excellence of its contents. The publishers have every reason to feel elated over the past year with a new impetus and an assured success. The illustrations will show some new effects, and nothing to make Scribner's Magazine attractive and interesting will be neglected.

THE RAILROAD ARTICLES will be continued by several very striking papers; one especially interesting by Ex-Postmaster-General Thomas L. James on "The Railway Postal Service." Illustrated.

MR. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON'S serial novel "The Master of Ballantrae," will run through the greater part of the year.

A CORRESPONDENCE and collection of manuscript memoirs relating to J. F. Millet and a famous group of modern FRENCH PAINTERS will furnish the substance of several articles. Illustrated.

The brief end papers written last year by Robert Louis Stevenson, will be replaced by equally interesting contributions by different famous authors. Mr. Thomas Bailey Aldrich will write the first of these for the January number.

Many valuable LITERARY ARTICLES will appear; a paper on Walter Scott's Delineation of Work, illustrated from original MSS., a second "Stuff of Old Books," by Mrs. James T. Fields, and many other articles equally noteworthy. Illustrated.

Articles on ART SUBJECTS will be a feature. Papers are arranged to appear by Clarence Cook, E. H. Blashfield, Austin Dobson, and many others. Illustrated.

FISHING ARTICLES describing sport in the best fishing grounds will appear. Salmon, Winnialish, Bass, and Tarpon are the subjects now arranged. The authors are well known sportsmen. Illustrated.

ILLUSTRATED ARTICLES of great variety, touching upon all manner of subjects, travel, biography, description, etc., will appear but not at the expense of interest or timeliness. Illustrated.

Among the much interest in the list of scientific papers for the year will be a remarkable article by Professor John Trowbridge, upon the most recent developments and uses of PHOTOGRAPHY. Illustrated.

A class of articles which has proved of special interest will be continued by a group of papers upon ELECTRICITY in its most recent applications, by eminent authorities; a remarkable paper on DEEP MINING, and other interesting papers. Unique Illustrations.

A SPECIAL OFFER to cover last year's numbers, which include all the Railway articles, is given below.

A year's subscription (1889) and the numbers for 1888, bound in cloth, $8.00

$3.00 a year; 25 cents a number.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, May Prove a New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of two cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 1908

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood the severest tests, but her vitality grew weaker and her death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved outright by the first dose that she slept all night, and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. O. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby, N. C. Get a free trial bottle at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 2

Small Pox.

Now is the time to be vaccinated.
The State Board of Health passed the following resolution:

RESOLVED, That in view of the recent outbreaks of small pox in Buffalo, N. Y., Detroit, Port Huron, and elsewhere, it is recommended by this board that persons living in the seven counties in Michigan be promptly recommended the vaccination of all suspicious persons within their jurisdiction.

The following resolution was adopted Dec. 18th, 1888, by the trustees of the village of Charlevoix, viz:

RESOLVED, That all persons residing in the village of Charlevoix are hereby requested to apply to the health officer of said village to be vaccinated as soon as he receives a supply of vaccine virus.

RESOLVED, further, That the health officer be instructed to procure vaccine virus at the expense of the village, and vaccinate all persons that apply to him for vaccination at the expense of the village. Provided, that the persons so that they were unable to pay for the same, or the same shall be paid to the health officer for vaccination shall be not more than 25 cents.

A. A. Aldrich, who was to have looked up a site for a hoop factory in Charlevoix and didn't, has located in Cheboygan, and has bought 20 acres of land with good lake front, a tract of timber, and a good house and lot, and expects to build a hoop factory and shingle mill combined, the latter to have a capacity of 120 to 150 thousand shingles per day.

We know a farmer living at Yuba who came here five years ago and went into debt $4,500 for a farm and today it stands clear of incumbrance and he has horses, cows, good wagons and farming implements besides. He has a wife and six children depending on him for support. All the time he was paying this indebtedness he paid his subscription every year in advance.—Progress.

Scribner's Magazine for January opens the third year of its existence with the promise for 1889 of an even greater variety in its contents than before. Groups of articles on art, literature, and criticism, railways, electricity, and fishing, will be among the interesting features. The richness and excellence of the illustrations will be maintained and advanced. More than 25,000 new readers were added to the magazine during the past six months, and the outlook for the new year is equally encouraging.

The following explanation is given why the year 1900 will not be counted among leap years. The year is 365 days 5 hours and 45 minutes long; 11 minutes are taken every year to make the year 365¼ days long, and every fourth year we have an extra day. This was Julius Cæsar's arrangement. Where do these eleven minutes come from? They come from the future, and are paid by omitting leap year every hundred years. But if leap year is omitted regularly every hundred years it is found that the eleven minutes taken each year will not only have been paid back, but that a whole day will have been given up. So Pope Gregory XIII. who improved on Cæsar's calendar in 1582, decreed that every centurial year divisable by four should be a leap year after all. So we borrow eleven minutes each year, more than paying our borrowing by omitting three leap years in three centurial years, and square matters by having a leap year in the fourth centurial year. Pope Gregory's arrangement is so exact, and the borrowing and the paying back balances so closely, that we borrow more than we pay back to the extent of only one day in 3,866 years. And, besides, it would be giving Ben Davis too much of a show.

Worms for Birds.

"There are a good many men in Brooklyn who make a living at catching meal worms and selling them to our trade," said the proprietor of a Fulton street bird store to an Eagle reporter. "There is a man who has furnished me with these worms for the past five years. Step this way and I will show you how they come to us."

The reporter followed the bird dealer into a back room, where on a shelf stood a row of small tin boxes. The dealer took down one and opened the lid. The can was half full of small crustaceous worms of yellow and brown color. They measured about an eighth of an inch in thickness and an inch and a half in length.

"These boxes," said the proprietor, "hold about a thousand worms and cost at this time of the year $1 per box. Most of the meal worms are caught in the big grain warehouses on the river front, in flour mills and old feed stores."

"How much does a worm catcher earn in his peculiar vocation?"

"A good man at the business can make from $8 to $10 per week. They catch them with their hands or use a sieve. A great many worms are consumed in the course of a year. Mocking birds and robins eat all birds with soft bills are very partial to them. Besides, they are healthy. It is said that meal worms are good eating and taste like shrimp."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Test of Death.

Facts have been suggested to determine whether or not life is extinct. Death has been supposed to occure the most recent, and held to be the most reliable, is called the ably electric test. In using the operator injects one hypodermic syringeful of strong solution of iodine under the skin of the arm or other convenient portion of the body. If the patient be not dead—if life the faintest circulation—the iodine will produce on the skin, at a point where it was injected, a red patch, on the surface of which red spots will appear; where no absolute death, there produced a brown dark blotch, is definitely conclusive against stable vitality.—Boston Herald.

Polluted Ice.

Lots of ice must read up on the recent investigations of Kedzie, Pengra and others, showing that ice taken from polluted streams is not purified by freezing. Kedzie tells us that if ice from streams containing noticeable matter or sewdust it will not clarify.—A. In 1878, at Rye an epidemic broke out in a hotel, and was traced at last to ice from a small adjacent pond. The of this pond in summer was foul, making with putrescent matter, organic matter as well as bacteria, eliminated by any ordinary freezing of cold. Too many of our summer ice recipients of sewage is the ice age of civilization, we must have it pure.—St. Louis Democrat.

In Honor of Burns.

Burns inaugurated to celebrate birthday of the poet is an annual in Louis, Pittsburg. At the celebration twenty-four plowmen, hands and farmers, tastefully dressed to represent the principal characters in Burns' works, paraded a sheet headed by a volunteer band and accompanied by a crowd of Scotchmen, bearing a sheaf of oats, brass buttons and bees. Colonel Thomas Johnson, Andrew Carnegie, Thomas Bayne, Andrew Lang, Dr. Dwyer, James Bryce, Lord Rosebery, a number of strangers and the Lord Provost of Edinburgh were present.

THE VOICE OF A STAR.

BY WILL CARLETON.

Dark night her tent once more unfurled, on Flower's first-century home.
Upon the sleeping world—the great world—the great city of floors
And hushed at last were the chariot-tires, and still the sandaled feet.
And dimmed the palace window-fires, on many a noble street;
And lo a roof a maiden came, with eyes as angelic
And looked up at the stubborn or dense that answer
ly gleamed above,
She gazed at them with a misty eye, and spoke, in accents sad:
"O ye cold lords of the sky! if ever a voice you had,
In Judea-land! for a paltry stroke, and dear, as well as kind!
Else why must ever the heaviest yoke be placed on the willing mind?
Why should the science of man's heart be oft his meanest slave?
Why is her life ever torn apart, by those she has toiled to save?
"Why should the weal of the human race be crushed and thrown away,
Whenever it lacks the outward grace that voices the stronger clay?
Why must the mothers of men be bought and sold like beast that die?
Why must the sisters be for pride or naught, answered of all reply?
Why are we women of Rome o'er cold that we should hungry be,
Because not kept like flocks in fold, as those are well as kind?
"Have we no heart? Have we no mind? Must not our conscience weak?
Say, must our sons be dumb or blind, because their fathers are weak?
Must we be ever the laughing stock of man's cruel, cruel jest?
Were we but born for Pluto to mock—to play a mortal part?
Must all our triumphs be a lie—our joys in fetters cast?
Oh, ye cold gold-lords of the sky—if ever a voice you had!
"Then from the east a new, bright star flashed to her flashing eye,
And a voice replied to her from afar, with soft and kind reply:
"Why weep, fair maid, upon the eve of victory's dawn?
It is o'er strange for one to grieve whose chance smile's to be born!
To-morrow a new King appears, with dimpled, dear, and fair face,
And the shield of a million years o'er many a kingly land.
"His mother is crown the world will see, whose all women shall its sisters be whose ways are just and pure;
A woman's fault shall not be her death, by man or angels sent.
Rejoice! rejoice! ye the God-strown breath shall ever be sacred, ye humanest;
A woman's faces, by mere woman, shall add to her dignity grace,
And higher, as the years march on, shall be her place of place.
"And four great words the world shall see, in woven with man's life.
Mother and sister two shall be—and two be woman's as wife.
It shall be felt that she whose care the lamp of Cain take with man as an equal share of all their lives may earn;
That she whose soft and healing hand can soothe with blessing hitch
Is no less great, and true, and grand than he who leads the fight.
"Lone who through the woods may grope till light comes to his eyes,
The maiden shall find the new-born hope, and extend the glad surprise;
The mother shall be understood—its glorious meaning know at last,
And all her dreams of woman's good segmed and fulfilled in the past.
And when again the twilight gray was bright-ened by the morn,
Within the lounger, far away, the infant Christ was born.

HE WISHED TO INQUIRE.

BY MARY FARRISH.

One bright, beautiful summer morning, John Malcolm was sitting in an invalid's chair, on the piazza on his handsome country-seat, which overlooked the Hudson River, a short distance from New York. He was in a decidedly bad humor, and the sound of a sweet, fresh voice, singing a pretty love ballad, seemed to excite his irritabilities still more.

"Lulu, will you stop that everlasting yelling, and come out here a moment?" he called, angrily.

"What can I do for you, papa?" And the owner of the voice, a bright, sunny-faced, attractive young girl, stepped through the low, open French window to his side, and stroked his hair lovingly, with her soft, white hand, while looking quizzically into his face. "I always know you are feeling worse, papa, when you stigmatize my musical efforts as 'everlasting yelling.'" And she laughed, a gay, infectious little laugh, that brought an answering smile to her father's face. For, in spite of his assumed ill-nature, that was more the result of a temporary physical suffering than a bad disposition. John Malcolm dearly loved this bright, piquant, accomplished daughter of his.

"Are there no letters for me this morning?" he questioned, and, receiving a negative reply, he continued, impatiently: "There, those horses are standing in the stable, and no one whom I could trust to exercise them, while I am bound hand and foot with this confounded rheumatism! That man whom Jones promised to send ought to have been here last night, and there's not a sign of him yet, nor any letter explaining the delay."

"Well, papa, I think you had better agree to my plan, and let me drive them myself until you can get some one else," said Lulu.

"You! Let you drive those——" And here Mr. Malcolm stopped, breathless, at the mere proposition of such a mad caprice. "Do you want to be brought home with a broken neck?" he managed to ejaculate, with a gasp.

Lulu laughed gayly at her father's consternation, and was about to reply when she was interrupted by the sudden appearance of a young man before them.

He was a tall, muscular, rather handsome man, dressed in a gray suit that showed evidence of considerable wear. As he approached he doffed his hat, and was about to address them, when Mr. Malcolm exclaimed, irately:

"So you have arrived at last, have you? Why didn't you come last night, as you agreed to?"

The stranger's face flushed hotly, and he looked from Mr. Malcolm to his daughter, with a puzzled air.

"I beg your pardon, he began; "but——

"No excuses, sir, if you please," said Mr. Malcolm, testily; "for I've no doubt you have a strong excuse. But—"

"But," persisted the stranger, "I only wish to inquire——"

"Yes, yes, I understand," again interrupted Mr. Malcolm, more impatiently, "and it isn't necessary to talk all day. If you do your work half as well as Jones says you will I shall be satisfied. But remember, I won't keep you a day if you drink. My cousin was drunk, and it cost him his place. Now, call the gardener and let him show you to the stables. As soon as possible, harness up the team and give them a good exercising. By the by, what is your name?" was added, as the young man turned away pursuant to his orders.

"Fred Davis," was the reply, after a momentary hesitation, which Miss Malcolm was quick to detect.

"Well, papa," said she, as the young man's form vanished around the corner of the house, "your manner irrigitened that poor fellow so that he nearly forgot his name. He must think you a perfect tyrant.

"He remains long enough with us he will find out who is the tyrant," retorted Mr. Malcolm, jocularly. "Now, Lulu, my dear, if you have time, please read me a few items of news before lunc', and afterward you can ride to the village and see if there is a letter from young Moreland. It is about time for him to pay that long-promised visit."

While Lulu is engaged with her father, we will follow the new coachman.

When out of the presence of Mr. Malcolm and his daughter, his lips curved to a mischievous smile, which, gradually deepened into a broad laugh.

"Well, Fred, old boy," he said to himself, "this is a transformation with a vengeance. You have been turned into a coachman, willy nilly. A good joke on me, that will be polished exceedingly by the boys, if they ever get hold of it! So, that is Miss Malcolm, a very attractive young lady, indeed, and no better opportunity than this will ever offer itself for me to win the affections of a woman for myself alone. So here goes."

At a wing at the stables, Davis, as he was a spied by his employer, made friends with the horses intrusted to his care, and, understanding horses as well as he did, soon had them under perfect control.

Mr. Malcolm congratulated himself more and more each succeeding day upon the acquisition of such a valuable servant, for, as he he could learn, this man did not seem to have a single fault, and was a perfect gentleman in that class of men. When he had finished his duties for the day, he would take a book, and, straying away from the other servants to a large grapevine arbor that was on the side of the house near the music-room, where Lulu spent much of her time, he would soon appear to be deeply engrossed with his reading.

One day Miss Malcolm, strolling through the arbor, came upon Davis as he sat poring over his book. When he became aware of her presence, he arose hastily, and in doing so dropped his book, which fell at her feet before he had time to recover it. She was astonished to see that it was a standard French novel in the original.

"Do you read French, Davis?" she inquired.

"Yes, Miss Malcolm," he replied, respectfully. "I am ambitious of becoming something more than a coachman, and use all my leisure moments to improve my mind."

"Your ambition is a laudable one, Davis," replied Lulu, approvingly, her respect instinctively rising for the man. "We have an extensive library, and if the use of the books would aid you any in your desire to advance yourself, I know that papa will lend you any you may name."

"Thank you kindly, Miss Malcolm, for the interest you evince in one whose position is so lowly. If you would not feel offended at my request, I would like you to ch oose the books that you consider the most instructive for an inquiring mind."

"Why do I not come last night, as you agreed to?"

The stranger's face flushed hotly, and he looked from Mr. Malcolm to his daughter, with a puzzled air.

A good joke on me, that will be polished exceedingly by the boys, if they ever get hold of it! So, that is Miss Malcolm, a very attractive young lady, indeed, and no better opportunity than this will ever offer itself for me to win

"Thank you for saying that," he said, as he turned once more toward her for an instant. "Now, clasp my arm tightly, and keep as close to me as possible, for the road is bad here, and I need both my hands to guide the horses. Silently Lulu did as he bade, and watched, with admiration, the display of skill and strength which the driver used to subdue the maddened steeds. Suddenly one of the reins snapped in two, and the horses reared slightly. In an instant the carriage was upset and one of the petty vices composed among the ground.

Lulu was stunned for a moment, and on recovering herself found that she had been thrown upon the driver, and had been saved serious injury; while he lay insensible with an ugly gash in his forehead from a stone, which his head had come in contact with when he fell.

Lulu staunched the blood with her handkerchief and carefully bandaged his head. Then she made a successful attempt to restore him to consciousness by the use of sal volatile, which she chanced to have with her.

Davis opened his eyes at last, much to her relief.

"Thank heaven you are not dead!" she exclaimed fervently. "I began to think you were never going to open your eyes again. Do you think you could walk a little presently? for, if so, we will proceed toward home. I have no doubt we shall be met by some one that papa will send to find us as soon as the horses arrive with whatever may be left of the phaeton."

"I can at least try," he responded, as he attempted to arise, but a groan of pain escaped him, and he fell back half fainting, as he exclaimed: "My leg is broken! I cannot move it!"

"Oh, what shall we do? I shall have to leave you here while I go for assistance," cried Lulu, in great distress.

"No," said Davis, decidedly, "you shall not go alone in this dense wood. It would not be safe. We will remain quietly here until some one comes, which can not now be long."

"But you suffer, and the delay may do you harm," she remonstrated.

"I suffer less knowing that you are safe by my side," he returned. "A little while ago you thanked heaven that I lived. Lulu, darling, was it because you return the love which you must know that I bear for you? Trust me once again, darling, and do not let pride influence you against me because of my mental position.

"Am I less a gentleman," he continued, seeing her hesitate, "because circumstances forced me to accept the first position that offered itself? Will you not trust me, Lulu?"

"Yes, Fred, I will trust you, because I love you. But you must be prepared for unyielding opposition from my father, which I shall not promise to combat, for he would not have the same incentive for throwing aside Davis' social prejudice which I have."

Fred drew the fair face to his, and kissed the sweet lips that had answered him so fully, bravely and frankly.

"Believe me," he prophesied, "your father will not prove so obdurate as you think; and it will not be long before he will give you into my keeping."

For a while longer they talked, as all lovers will talk, and then there came the rescuing party they had expected.

Fred was lifted carefully into the big, roomy family coach that had been sent along, with pillows and blankets in case they should be needed.

He was made as comfortable as possible, and borne to Mr. Malcolm's home, where Lulu directed that a bed should be prepared for his reception.

The following morning Fred sent a request that he would like to see Mr. Malcolm and his daughter on important business as soon as they were at leisure.

They visited him at once, and found him bolstered up in bed and feeling much better than was expected. Mr. Malcolm, who was still half asleep and suffering from an prolonged attack of rheumatism, was amazed to see that he had, and, after kindly greeting the invalid, said:

"What can I do for you, Davis, this morning?"

"You can give me your daughter as my wife," Davis said, boldly, as he took Lulu's hand in his.

"Sir, you insult me!" exclaimed Mr. Malcolm, as he gazed angrily at the young man.

"And yet you invited me here for the express purpose of obtaining her as my wife," answered the other, coolly, and even smilingly.

"You are mad! I never saw you before in my life!" was the astonished reply.

"Is not that your hand-writing? and did you not send me that invitation? pausing the elder man a moment as he spoke.

"It is certainly my hand-writing, but I cannot understand how you come by this letter," was the answer, pleasantly.

"And I am Fred Davis Moreland, at your service," was the quiet reply. "The day I came I was not aware that I was in the right place, and before I could question you, you mistook me for the expected coachman, and would not allow me to explain matters; so, acting upon a whim of finding out if I could obtain favor in a certain lady's eyes without the advantage that wealth confers, I accepted the position you forced upon me, and for which I shall always be exceedingly grateful to you. It has enabled me to win the love of your daughter and her promise to become my wife, provided I could gain your consent.

"You Fred Moreland! How could I be so stupid as not to recognize you by the strong resemblance you bear to your father? Can you forgive the ill-temper that prevented your explanation? Lulu, what shall I say to him?" continued Mr. Malcolm, turning helplessly to his daughter, who was just as much surprised as he by the disclosure.

"I think the only course left is to accede to his request," was the demure reply, "it is only a just indemnity for his pains."

That the advice was acted upon was proved by the wedding which followed a few months later. If the promises are fulfilled it will be an unusually happy one.

The Instinct of Mothers.

At present there are mothers who are not mothers. In the true sense they have never borne the children they read of maturity, have had no care to bear, have never learned what life means nor do they know themselves. Walking as in a dream, they take the show of things for reality. Unwinged butterflies, they flourish their feeble silk and leave no impress upon their surroundings.

On the other hand the unwedded or they who have never known a mother's fruition, often stretch out the arms of their spirits to take in all the said, sick and weary that desolately walk the earth. The mother instinct is then not narrowed selfishly to one family, but grows broad as the heavens from which came a love so wonderful. It take in whoever needs "mothering" to shelter on the great breast that waits not for the human to be born before accepting that of the spirit. Is not this truly the highest and holiest motherhood to which woman can attain?—Hester M. Poole, in Good Housekeeping.

OUIDA ABHORS TROUSERS.

Who Advocates a General Reform in Men's Dress.

Have been told, I know not whether truly, that in the United States of America footies smock and blouse are clothes unseen, unknown; and that the old breadcloth of Sunday-going suits, when worn threadbare, is the singularly inappropriate garb in which the American husbandman goes to the plough, his mother earth. The picture of him thus attired at the tail of his plow is so melancholy that even the fact that it is probably a steam plow which he follows does not cheer the heart of the lonely spectator. I, and it is companioned in melancholy by the information (already known to me) that there is no such thing as a peasantry known in this land of black coats; there are only "hired men." The superior manhood and civil status of the hired man to the peasant may be a knotty political question upon which I do not pretend to dogmatize; but the superiority of breadbare broadcloth to whole and clean fustian or linen seems to me a proposition which nobody in land of senses can care to maintain. The one supreme excellence in any kind of clothes is their fitness for the occasion on which they are worn. Nothing can be more unsuitable for field work or any open air work than broadcloth or any cloth, and nothing is so uncleanly and so unlovely as a slit of clothes which has been worn and outworn as a "test" and and has passed into working use with all its stains and spots of the past upon it.

There is no working dress so clean, so convenient, so manly, as fustian and so the house of France. It is an ideal dress. When made in velvet for a man it pleases it is charmingly picturesque and simple; when worn in linen by the artisan or the laborer it lends dignity to every movement of the limbs and body; in belt braces the loins, and in the long winter any quantity of wool can be worn beneath it, its washable qualities make it exceedingly suitable for a working dress, and its lightness and convenience in summer are beyond question. Why is not this charming and most sensible garb universal? For the rich it would be capable of an infinite variety of adornment from embroidery in silk or in bouillon thread, while for the poor it combines cleanliness and comfortiness as no other dress does.

The present fashion of men's dress has no single quality to recommend it; it is awkward, ugly, confounds the shapely limbs with the unshapely, and is the most grotesque and repellent costume in which the human frame has ever disguised itself. If any of the states which have been made of public men in this dress endure to a remote posterity, that posterity will certainly call in question either our sanity or our civilization. There is no other age which has possessed a costume so utterly absurd and so entirely hideous, unsuitable for every purpose for which it is worn, ill-adapted to any single season of the year, and destroying every line which makes the human form harmonious. The trousers alone in an articled such fearful hideousness that it is hard to understand why a world which is not wholly bowlegged or equal-shanked can ever have submitted to its tyranny. The only piece ever heard advanced for it is that it covers deformities; but if deformity be so general, of what use are modern gymnasia, games, and sport? To what is hygiene made the A B C of modern education? There have been ill-shaped men from the days of Socrates to those of Prince Eugene; but that can be no reason to sacrifice the well-shaped multitude to them; Quasimodo is no law for Phoebus. The proper office with a statement of the whole business, I'll give you a check for the amount.

"AH," said Mr. Scoundrelo, grimly, as he adjusted his necktie, "we are to put hup with the airs and graces of people hall day; but when evenink comes, me boy, they show wot the truly genteel is by ponsinh on the dress that we wear all day!" "That's so," replied Mr. Crumbleloth with a grave nod. "You two a gentlemen, and the waiters be the real leaders of fashion."

HOSTESS—I must apologize for the salad to-night. My parlor maid usually makes the dressing, and is an adept at it, but she was taken suddenly ill this afternoon and couldn't make it. Mrs. Asinine (sympathetically)—How very provoking. Hostess—Yes; I tried to dose her well, but it was of no use. She was quite hors du combat. Mrs. Asinine (more sympathetically)—Is that so? My unfailing remedy for that is peppermint.

THREE ASTERS,
Near her sash, graceful, dainty,
Pretty touching, here and there,
Fair as dreams, and fair as poetry,
But, ah! the unmeaning fair!
And she painted last and fairest,
At a golden China Aster.
Oh! he came and stood beside her,
While her blushes came and went
And—he took his word to guide her—
Gave her—what? a Parlor Tent!
Whereon stars on stars he set her,
He, descendant of an Aster,
Christmas came; but little token
Was a clump of golden flowers
On a canvas. Love unspoken
Swift recalled their happy hours,
Heart and pulse alike he fed them,
So he just opened up and set a bee.

Made It White as Snow.

Mr. Popsy (ruefully examining his pipe)—Why, has been blacking with my old meerschaum?

Mrs. Popsy (a young bride)—Oh, darling, it was so old and black and dirty that I put it in the kitchen fire and watched it carefully until it was burned to this lovely snow-white.—Texas Siftings.

The Toothpick Industry.

A toothpick factory is one of the flourishing wood-working establishments at Harbor Springs, Mich., and it is one of the largest factories of the kind in the country. White birch is exclusively used in the manufacture of the toothpicks, and about 7,500,000 of the handy little splinters are turned out daily. The logs are sawed up into bolts each 28 inches in length, then thoroughly steamed and cut up to veneer. The veneer is cut up into long ribbons, three inches in width, and three inches, eight or ten of them at a time, run through the toothpick machinery, coming out at the other end, the perfect pieces falling into one basket, the broken pieces and refuse falling into another. The picks are packed into boxes, 3,500 in a box, by girls, mostly comely looking spaves, and are then packed into cases and finally into big boxes, ready for shipment to all parts of the world. The white birch toothpicks are very neat and clean in appearance, sweet to the taste, and there is a wide market for them. The goods sell at the factory at $1.90 a case of 150,000 picks, or 100 small boxes, each containing 1,500, and "small" boxes retail at 5 cents each, or 100 picks for 1 cent, at which rate almost everybody can afford to take a fresh toothpick after each meal.—The Timberman.

A Novel Swimming Dress.

A swimmer dress, resembling a driver's dress, and made of black India rubber, has, according to a foreign journal, been adopted in the land of German'nay. On the chest is a valve through which air is blown into the interior of the dress, which covers the whole body and leaves only the face free. To prevent the dress from being too much tossed about by the waves, it is provided with a strong ballast, which divides the dress into two parts, and to prevent a too great heat in the dress were torn about the legs, and consequent difficulty in swimming.

The swimmer wears shoes with caden soles to so into his equilibrium, and for his defense a dagger, which is fastened to the girdle. The swimmers are to be employed for the blowing up of mines and hostile craft, and are provided with a box containing an explosive charge, which they have to fasten to the mine or craft, and ignite. Before the mine or craft, and ignite, they out of the reach of danger. The swimming dress has been already tried in Germany. During the attack on the harbor of Kiel on Aug. 29 swimmers were dispatched from the ironclads to destroy the mines closing the port.—Scientific American.

Are We to Have Another War?

Some political prophets aver that we shall. Be that as it may, the battle waged by medical science against disease will never cease until we shall see that the utopian epoch when the human family shall cease to be afflicted with bodily ailments. One of the most potent weapons with the arsenal of medicine furnished is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is of special utility as a family remedy, as it is adapted to the immediate relief and ultimate cure of those disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels which are of a nauseous, occasion. Indigestion, biliousness and constipation are inseparable companions, and these ailments are greatly stimulated by the bitters. But the stomach, liver and bowels are not the only organs of the system acted upon by this invigorating vegetable tonic. Rheumatism, kidney troubles, the ailments of the nervous system, debility, are characterized by unequaled thoroughness.

The Americans of Asia.

The Japanese call themselves the Americans of Asia, and they are to a certain extent right. They are like the Americans, in their restlessness, in their energy and in their being ready to risk the present for the future. They are quick-witted, and they want to be up to the times. They lack, however, I am present to believe, the American's desire of accumulation, his industry and perseverance, and yet they are wonderful creative faculty. You will find a patent office at Tokio, but you can number the patents issued and inventions upon your fingers. Up to this stage in their career the Japanese have been an imitative rather than a creative nation. What they have and what the past has been adopted from other nations. The civilization which prevails in Japan is now one which was largely Chinese.—Frank G. Carpenter's letter.

A Radical Cure for Epileptic Fits.

To the Editor. Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease which I warrant to cure the worst cases. So strong is my faith in the virtues of this medicine that I will send free a sample bottle and valuable treatise to any sufferer who will give me his P. O. and Express address. My remedy has cured thousands of hopeless cases. R. G. Root, M. C., 183 Pearl street, New York.

Ladies of the White House.

Some distinctive quality has always been associated in the public mind with the lady of the White House. With Mrs. Grant it was interest in national affairs; with Mrs. Haves, temperance; with Mrs. Garfield, literary taste; with Mrs. Cleveland, beauty; and with Mrs. Harrison it promises to be domesticity. Nearly all the items about her tell of her fondness for marketing and praise her skill as a home keeper.

Catarrh Cured.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from dreadful disease, discovered a remedy, at last found a recipe which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren street, New York City, will receive the recipe free of charge.

Statistics Explained.

Mr. Biffers—See here, Jane, the paper says that French statistics show that there are over so many more lunatics among unmarried men than among married.

Mrs. Biffers—Well, you see, my dear, when a married man acts crazy people don't call him insane. They just say to themselves: 'Poor fellow, what a life he must lead with that wife of his,' and think no more about it."—Philadelphia Record.

The Population of the United States

Is about 60,000,000, and we would say at least one-half are troubled with some affection of the Throat and Lungs, as those complaints are, according to statistics, more numerous than others. We would advise all our readers not to neglect the opportunity to call on their druggist and get a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs. Price, one dollar; large Bottles 50c and $1. Sold by all druggists.

Food for Consumptives.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, is a most marvelous food and medicine. It heals the irritation of the lungs, and gives pure blood and strength quicker than any other remedy known. It is very palatable, having none of the disagreeable taste of the crude oil.

Helpless 40 Days

"For 3 years I have suffered with sciatic rheumatism, and for the last year it has been worse than ever, and was unable to get out of the house. I was helpless 40 days, and I am suffering great agony all the time. In December, I commenced using Hood's Sarsaparilla. After the second bottle I was able to be out and around and attend to business. My sciatics are entirely gone, and I am free from rheumatism that only occasionally I feel it slightly on a sudden change of weather. I have great confidence in Hood's Sarsaparilla." A Diamond Weighing 68 Carats.

Joseph B. Mayer, a diamond expert, received from the cutters a diamond which, he believes, is the largest in the United States. It is named the "Buffalo gem," weighs sixty carats, is a cushion shaped stone the size of an almond and perfectly pure. Uncut the diamond weighed ninety-five carats and was bought in Amsterdam for $20,000. It is like an electric light compared with a gas jet in comparison to the famous Cleveland gem of forty-two carats, for which Miss Minnie Palmer paid $30,000 several years ago. Large stones usually contain flaws, but the Buffalo gem is absolutely perfect.—Buffalo Express.

A Princess' Menagerie.

Princess Marie Theresa of Bavaria combines an uncommon taste for traveling with a passion for domestic pets, and as she insists on taking quite a menagerie of them about with her the two things do not go very well together. She is unmarried and is attended in all her wanderings by a maid of honor and a chamberlain. The care of the princess' cherished animals devolves on the latter functionary, whose position is no sinecure, as he has no fewer than fourteen of them to look after, including seven dogs, two magpies, an enormous rat and a diminutive bear.—St. James' Gazette.

A carpenter, while demolishing a house at Black Point, N. Y., knocked down a wasp's nest. The nest fell on his neck, and several of the wasps, which were benumbed with cold, went down his back. The heat of his body soon warmed the insects into life again. The remarks of the carpenter will not be given.

Jan. 7.—Our people generally had a good time New Year's, and hope everybody else did.

Mr. Willis and wife had an enjoyable visit with their daughter at Mancelona.

Tax time, and people visit A. B. Steele and go away with lighter pocket books, but with the satisfaction that their taxes are paid.

Frank Ake, a former towesman, is in town on a visit from Grand Rapids. He is on the invalid list, having received injuries by falling from a building on which he was at work. He still uses a crutch.

The Ladies Aid Society met at Mrs. A. B. Steele's last Wednesday. They will have a bazaar soon, at which several beautiful bedquilts and other things will be disposed of, the proceeds to be used in building a church.

Miss Anna Rodgers entertained a large number of her friends from Wilson and Advance on the occasion of her 18th birthday. She was the recipient of several fine presents, among which was a nicely ornamented cake.

The other day your correspondent met John Hayden, but he had changed so much that we scarcely recognized him. For a few months past an air of abstraction and deep anxiety had been upon his face. Now all was changed. He looked supremely happy and seller than ever. Making inquiries we learned the cause. His wife had made him a New Years present of an eight pound boy.

THE CAMPAIGN OF 1892.

An Address From the Associated Democratic Clubs.

The executive committee of the associated democratic clubs of the United States sends out a report in which the causes of the recent democratic defeat are discussed and a set of principles to govern the campaign of 1892 are laid down. The report says that the national association was formed too late for the most effective campaign work during the past presidential contest.

"The workingmen stood firmly by the democracy," the report continues, "as may be seen by a careful examination of the returns from manufacturing centres. Had the active club organization of the democracy permeated the agricultural districts as well, Cleveland and Thurman would have had an electoral as well a popular majority. The intelligent farmers who suffer the most and gain the least from the present excess of taxation would have come forward in blocks of fifty to assist the mercenary and unpatriotic floaters in their blocks of five."

The committee warns the democracy that the admission of territories into the union and the change in the representation of the states consequent upon the census of 1890, will "change the relative power of each state and group of states and will broaden the national contest." The committee declares that the democratic party proposes to fight from Maine to California, and upon the same issues as in the past campaign, upon the principles of Thomas Jefferson, its objects still being:

"To preserve the constitution of the United States, the autonomy of the states, local self-government, and freedom of elections; to resist revolutionary changes and the centralization of power; to oppose the imposition of taxes beyond the necessities of government economically administered; to promote economy in all branches of the public service; to oppose unnecessary commercial restrictions for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many; to oppose class legislation, which despoils labor and builds up monopoly; and to maintain inviolate the fundamental principles of democracy, equally before the law."

The report says that the democratic party will endeavor to "bring about the necessary reduction of the revenues and the necessary reduction and the simplification and reform of the tariff, without harm to the business interests of the country, and without injury to any workingman.

"The two arms of monopoly—bribery and intimidation—must be struck down." The democratic defeat was due to "republican misrepresentation and the effect of enormous sums of money handled by the most corrupt and efficient partisan organization ever known in this country." But the republican party "lacks the moral power necessary to continued success."

The committee reminds the party that "the next struggle for control of the national government will begin, not in 1892, but in the congressional and legislative elections of 1890."

The association hopes that there will be a club in every country in the union. All clubs are requested to report fully to the meeting of the general committee, which will be held at an early day. Until that meeting the executive committee will maintain its business office at 52 William street, New York City, and will attend to all communications. The report is signed by Robert Grier Monroe, chairman of the executive committee.

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a great revival of trade at F. G. Specimen Scotch Humor.

Dr. Scott, of Greenock, used to tell of a minister who came to be married, but when asked if he would take the woman to be his wife, looked blank and said: "I would like to know first what you are going to say to she." At another time, when the woman was asked if she would obey, but did not answer, the man—also a sailor—exclaimed, "Leave that to me, sir."

In those days people that felt sleepy during the sermon used, as now in Germany, to shake off drowsiness by standing up; but poor human nature made this at times an occasion of display. At Old Monkland a man who had on a rather gaudy vest stood up more than once, and threw back his coat, apparently to let his vest be seen. Mr. Bower, the minister, at length said: "Noo, John, ye had better sit doon. We have a seen your braw waistcoat."

It was to Mr. Bower that the grave digger once said: "Trade's very dull the noo. I been a buried a leevin' creatur for three weeks."

The people seem to have had a dislike to sermons being read. They used to say: "Hoo can we mind the minister's sermon if he canna mind it himsel?"

What are we to think of the lady who sent to her minister, Mr. Risk, of Dalserf, a polite message that "he should clean his teeth," and received the answer that "she should scrape her tongue?"

When his people sent a deputation requesting him to tell them more in his sermons about renouncing their own righteousness, he tartly replied: "It is the first time I heard that you had any righteousness to renounce."

Mr. Thom, of Govan, maintained a great warfare against the Glasgow magistrates. One day, while he was standing with the provost in the street, a ragged urchin came up begging, and was sternly driven away by the provost, who had himself risen from nothing. Mr. Thom interposed, and said: "Hey, laddie, there's a penny for you. Ye'll maybe provost of Glasgow yourself yet."

One of the magistrates saw him one day riding a good horse, and said: "You're better than your Master, Mr. Thom, for he rode on an ass." Mr. Thom retorted: "We would be willing enough to ride on asses, too, but they're not to be got nowadays. They've made them all magistrates."—Scottish World.

A High Rate of Interest.

A novel system of money lending is being practiced in many large downtown business houses, and, though done on mutual benefit plan, the interest level would put the ordinary pawnbroker to the blush. The employes of a large establishment, employing perhaps twenty-five or fifty clerks, form a "mutual benefit association." For two months each employe pays to the treasurer 1 cent a day, and this forms the lending fund on which the whole system is founded.

In the larger houses, where the salaries are paid monthly, the clerks often find themselves in the middle of the month without the money they need to carry them through. Then they borrow from the treasurer, say $5, and until the loan is paid they are expected to hand to the treasurer 1 cent for every dollar borrowed, and at the same time to give to the treasurer an order on the cashier for the amount of money they have borrowed.

The clerk who borrows the money does not, of course, feel the payment of the small amount of interest which is collected daily, and even when he returns the loan at the end of the month he does not realize that he has paid interest at the rate of 365 per cent. Of course each month the amount of money in the hands of the treasurer increases until, at the end of the year, he has much more than enough to cover the demands of the clerks for loans.

Then he sets aside a certain amount as a fund, and the balance he divides into equal parts, to be paid to the clerks as dividends. This is done once a year. The result is obvious. The clerk who is saving and apportions his salary to his necessities has no need of becoming a borrower; that is, in the year is only pays to the association his due, amounting to $5 65, or 1 cent a day, and yet he draws as a dividend his share of the exorbitant interest that his impecunious fellow clerks have paid monthly.—New York Herald.

A Grave Curiosity Historic.

There is a little hillock, overgrown with grass and weeds, in the cemetery here which has a curious history. Georgia voted for William Henry Harrison in 1840. This state was one of the most closely contested battle grounds in that campaign. The people of Laurens county were ardently for Harrison. When the president died in 1841 a casket was interred in the cemetery in honor of William Henry Harrison, and for many years it was visited annually and decorated by the ladies of the place. Since the war the grave has been neglected, but the election of the grandson to the presidency has revived interest in the little mound.—Dublin (Ga.) Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Cheboygan is infested with burglars. One night last week several houses were entered, and from one a watch and $478 in cash were taken.

Small-pox was brought to Cheboygan by a stranger from Seattle, W. T., who has since died. One child has also died, and the child's mother was stricken, but recovered.

The bank of Mancelona has given notice to take effect Feb. 1st, that no more money will be received on deposit at any rate of interest, alleging that they have lost $700 in twelve months on their deposits.

The Cheboygan Democrat says one drug store in that town sold 25 pounds of camphor gum in five and ten cent lots, one day last week. It is pounded up and put into bags and hung around the necks of children and grown people to ward off disease.

The Cheboygan Democrat sums up the small-pox scare in that village as follows: "The fact is there are two cases of small pox nearly three miles away, which are quarantined, and one case in the village and one doubtful case. They are all improving, and there is little danger of a spread of disease or cause for alarm."

To Avoid Contagion.

A doctor in St. Louis Globe-Democrat says: "Contagious diseases generally cause a great deal of unnecessary furor in neighborhoods which are unfortunately visited. While it is a good idea to remain away from the danger, a great many persons who are probably compelled to visit the sick chamber can in almost every case avoid the disease by learning how to approach it. A person should never enter a sick chamber in a state of perspiration, as the minute you become cold the pores absorb. You should never approach a contagious disease with an empty stomach, or sit between a grate fire and the sick person, as the chimney leads contagious influences in that direction. In all cases let the current of air be from you to the couch of the sick person, and not from the couch to you." It may be proper to add that visitors should be kept away, in all cases, as much as possible. It is not right to endanger the health of the community for the sake of paying one's respect to the sick by promiscuous visiting.

Lester Wallack's Great Memory.

Some time after my father's death I was requested to play Don Cæsar, a character he had made peculiarly his own, and of which he was the original in the English language. It was fourteen or fifteen years since I had played it, and I said to Mrs. Wallack, "Before I look at this part again I want you to see if I remember anything of it." I not only recollected the words, but I did not miss a syllable. She laid down the book in perfect astonishment. It seemed to come upon me directly, as though I had performed it the night before. This gift of memory has been always of inestimable service to me.—Lester Wallack in Scribner's.

A Squirrel Hunting Cut.

Cornwell Whitmore, a Coxsackie farmer, has a remarkable cat which seems to be an unusual and valuable one. It not only catches rats, mice, birds, etc., but slaughters such game as chipmunks, gray squirrels, rabbits and muskrats. The cat has been named "Mike." The other day Mike brought to the house a large live snake about three and one-half feet long, handling it with apparent ease.—Albany Journal.

Test of Death.

Facts have been suggested to determine whether or not life is extinct. Death has appeared to occur in the most recent, and held to be the most reliable, is called the hypodermic test. In using it the operator injects one hypodermic syringe of strong solution of iodine under the skin of the arm or other convenient portion of the body. If the body be not dead—if life, the faintest circulation—the iodine will produce on the skin, at the point where it was injected, a red patch, on the surface of which small red spots will appear; but if there be absolute death, there will be produced a brown dark blotch, it definitely conclusive against possible vitality.—Boston Herald.

Polluted Ice.

A paper read up on the investigations of Keelie, Pengelly and Belden, showing that ice taken from polluted streams is not purified by freezing. Keelie tells us that if from streams containing nothing but mere matter or sawdust it will be diarrhœa. In 1873, at Rye an epidemic broke out in a hotel, and was traced to a block of ice from an adjacent pond. The water of this pond in summer was foul and teeming with putrescent matter, the matter, as well as bacteria, eliminated by any ordinary degree of cold. Too many of our rivers are the recipients of sewage. In the ice age of civilization we must have it pure.—St. Louis Democrat.

Burns masquerade to celebrate the birthday of the poet is an annual fête in Lodle, Pitcairn. At the celebration twenty-four prominent merchants and farmers, mounted and dressed to represent the principal characters in Burns' works, paraded preceded by a volunteer band and accompanied by a crowd of people. Filibustering Law-Makers—Bill to Regulate Congressional Elections.

But little progress was made on the tariff bill in the Senate on the 8th inst. The feature of the day's discussion was the tax on bagging for cotton. A resolution passed the Senate calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for special Office-seekers in the Senate and Congressional sugar claims in New York. Senator Sherman introduced a bill to regulate Congressional elections. It authorizes the President to appoint, with the approval of the Senate, five Commissioners of Elections, who, with the Judge of the Board of State Canvassers, and three voters in each Congressional district to serve as an external board, the appointees to hold office during good behavior. The Electoral Commission, an impartial tribunal, shall appoint a register and three judges, but all of the same political party. The Commission, when convened, to hold office for six years, expires however to removal for misconduct. The bill confers the power of the board, on No. 8 which was taken. The House deadlock on the resolution to pay the clerks of the committees for extra days, was broken. The pressing question was ordered on the resolution by a vote of yeas, 167; nays, 76. Tom Mr. Holman tried, moved to recommit the resolution, and upon that motion the yeas and nays were ordered, and after a fine-sounding speech the motion was defeated. The sundry civil bill was reported to the House.

STATE SOLONS.

Meeting of Various Legislatures—Their Political Complexion.

The Ohio Legislature met in adjourned session at Columbus, and received the Governor's message. Gov. Foraker said in the recent alleged White Cap outrages in Ohio were the doings of practical jokers or evil-minded persons hiding their identity behind the assumed name of White Caps. He recommended that the law be so changed that White Caps and such malefactors may be indicted in any county in the State.

The Dakota Legislature organized at Bismarck by the election of Smith Simpson, of Fargo, the farmers' candidate, for President of the Council, and H. E. Keith, of Sioux Falls, a corporation attorney, Speaker of the House. A great kick by the farmers was the result, and a reorganization is expected. Gov. Church's message scored the management of all the public institutions, recommended the abolition of the trustee system, and advocated a Territorial Board of Charities in lieu of same.

The California Legislature has been permanently organized at Sacramento, with the Democrats in control of both houses. R. M. White, who was temporary Chairman of the National Democratic Convention at St. Louis in June last, was elected President pro tem. of the Senate. Robert Howe was elected Speaker of the assembly. The latter made a short address in which he called attention to the necessity of revising the registration and election laws of the State.

Gov. Fleming, of Florida, has been inaugurated at Tallahassee. The occasion brought together the largest gathering of civilians and State troops ever seen at the capital. A prominent feature was a column of Union and Confederate veterans, the latter including members of the Confederate regiment in which both ex-Gov. Berry and Gov. Fleming served.

Gov. Cooper, of Colorado, has been inaugurated at Denver. His address was short, the principal feature being recommendations to the General Assembly to pass a fair but stringent railroad law and a law for the arbitration of difficulties between employers and employes.

The Kansas Legislature met at Topeka. The House elected Capt. Henry Booth, of Larned, Speaker, and Col. H. T. Millard, of Sterling, Chief Clerk. In the Senate Senator Harkness was chosen President pro tem., and August Stacey Secretary.

The Minnesota Legislature convened at St. Paul, and organized by electing the Republican caucus nominees in both Senate and House.

The New Jersey Legislature was organized by the Democrats without notable incident.

QUARRELING NEIGHBORS.

A Kansas Farmer Shot and Killed by a Stockman.

A terrible tragedy occurred ten miles from Topeka, Kansas. An old feud existed between James Stewart and George D. Beach, prominent farmers and stockmen. The children of the two farmers got into a quarrel while returning from school, and Beach handled one of the Stewart boys quite roughly. Mrs. Stewart assaulted Beach with stones, and he threw her to the ground. Mr. Stewart then appeared and attacked Beach with a knife, cutting him badly in the arm whereupon Beach drew a revolver and shot Stewart three times, killing him instantly.

DEATH OF TASCOTT'S UNCLE.

He Was a Former Resident of Chicago, but Died in Louisville.

W. E. Tascott, uncle of young Tascott, accused of the murder of A. J. Snell, the Chicago millionaire, died at his home in Louisville, Ky. He formerly lived in Chicago, and while there young Tascott was under his charge. When he removed to Louisville, seven years ago, he brought Willie with him, but the boy did not remain long.

An Old Claim Revived.

A claim has been made by T. E. Patterson, of Portland, Oregon, that nearly all the land where the town of Stratford, Conn., now stands belongs to the heirs of Hezekiah Patterson, who died in 1762. An attorney is looking into the matter.

THE STRIKE ENDED.

Terms of Settlement Between the Railroad and Brotherhood of Engineers.

Appended is the official statement of the terms of agreement between the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway Company and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, by which the long-standing strike has been settled. The main point of the settlement is that the company agrees to employ its striking engineers if they are thought competent and to assist them in getting employment. Following is the correspondence constituting the agreement.

BOSTON, Jan. 3, 1889.

HENRY B. STONE, Vice President C. B. & Q., Chicago:

I am authorized and instructed to send you the following: "The company will not follow the policy of the Chicago Chronicle, but will protection those who were sent out in the strike; but, on the contrary, will cheerfully give to all who have not been guilty of violence or other improper conduct letters of introduction to other roads, and will assist them to obtain employment. The first duty of the company is to its employes, and it will in the company's employ, and we must necessarily be the judge of the qualification of our employes or of other men seeking employment. Beyond this, it will should not be necessary to go. It is our intention to select the best men among Boston and Mary and Ben Jolly, of Bayou Paul, cabin passengers, are known to have been seen. CONDITION OF TRADE.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review—A Bright Outlook.

The review of trade for last week, as report R. G. Dun & Co. is as follows:

A hopeful feeling everywhere prevails. In addition to manufacturing reports of the condition of business are generally favorable. The stock of manufacturing at many Western points is a notable feature, and especially in the Southwest, where the failure of crops last year and loss, moreover, have caused a much larger increase in amount of business last year. At many cities the record of holiday shows a surprising increase, especially at the west. The Pacific coast reports a very large increase in business. At Chicago, Milwaukee, Omaha and Sioux City, the volume of currency practically unchanged during December, is now $1,400,000,000, and in Kansas City, Denver and Leadville, the total of the year is $1,000,000,000, and in Duluth, in July, 1887, only $2,000,000, and in July, 1888, only $4,000,000. Wheat and corn markets have not been active, except for land, which has been higher. Wheat has gone up 2 cents per bushel, with sales of 20,000,000 bushels for the week. Corn is by lower and wanted by bigger. Crude oil is nearly 10 lower and refined 20 per 100 gallons lower. The production of pig iron in December was 2,000,000 tons, or a little more than 100,000 tons per month. Iron is lower, and the prices for the coming year are lower than those of the original schedules. Cotton is lower, and the prices for the coming year are lower than those of the original schedules. A Navy of Itself

The trial trip of the dynamite gunboat Vesuvius resulted in a new triumph for the American navy. If the future use of it and of its dynamite gun sustains the expectations thus raised, the vessel will again put the United States at the head of all nations in establishing epochs in naval warfare, as it did when the Monitor seamed out into Hampton Roads more than a quarter of a century ago. Moving with the speed of an average express train, and carrying a gun that will annihilate the most formidable citadels of the European navies two miles away, the Vesuvius is a navy of itself.

It's a Way They Have.

The amiable and trustworthy correspondent of the Detroit Evening Journal intimates that Lieut.-Gov. McDonald has declined to promote Senator W. J. Babcock to the head of the committee on railroads for the reason that the senator two years ago championed the 2-cents-per-mile bill and also the bill applying the interstate commerce law to Michigan railroads.

This is an important piece of news. It appears that the railroads have begun pretty early to fix things in the legislature. They usually do.—Lansing Journal.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in state convention at GRAND RAPIDS, on THURSDAY, FEB. 28, 1889, At 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating one candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court, and two candidates for Regents of the State University, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the Convention. Each county is entitled to one delegate for every 200 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 100 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: one vice president of the convention, and one member-at-large for the committee on resolutions, subject to the organization and order of business and precedence.

J. M. WESTON, Chairman.
FRANK H. THOMAS, Sec'y.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates.

A COUNTRY editor closes his financial review with the remark, "money is close, but not quite close enough to reach."

IT is announced that under the regime of Mrs. Harrison as mistress of the white house the decollete dress must go.

THE sundry civil appropriation bill as reported to the house contains items for a fog signal at Beaver Island, $5,500; Manistee fog signal, $5,500; Cheboygan fog signal, $5,500; Old Mackinaw point light station, $5,500.

How It Works.

A "Michigan lumberman" talks tariff to a protection organ in this wise: "It prevents the competition of Canadian lumbermen, who would drive our own from the market, and it enables us to use our forests to the best possible advantage."

That is one side. This the other. The tariff does not protect American lumber workers from Canadian competition. Congressman Ford's committee discovered that large gangs of Canadian choppers and sawers are engaged every winter by the protected American lumber lords at low wages without the slightest regard to native workmen's interests.

The tariff has made a dozen lumber millionaires, some of whom pose as statesmen in congress to "look after their interests," while all contribute liberally to the campaign booths of the party that protects their bounties. The tariff has increased the cost of every dwelling-house, barn and woodon fences in the country; it has benefited the destruction of our forests by putting a premium upon their devastation. And it has subjected 60,000,000 of the people to the greed of perhaps 600.

This is the way that the tariff on lumber works.—New York World.

A Navy of Itself

The trial trip of the dynamite gunboat Vesuvius resulted in a new triumph for the American navy. If the future use of it and of its dynamite gun sustains the expectations thus raised, the vessel will again put the United States at the head of all nations in establishing epochs in naval warfare, as it did when the Monitor seamed out into Hampton Roads more than a quarter of a century ago. Moving with the speed of an average express train, and carrying a gun that will annihilate the most formidable citadels of the European navies two miles away, the Vesuvius is a navy of itself.

It's a Way They Have.

The amiable and trustworthy correspondent of the Detroit Evening Journal intimates that Lieut.-Gov. McDonald has declined to promote Senator W. J. Babcock to the head of the committee on railroads for the reason that the senator two years ago championed the 2-cents-per-mile bill and also the bill applying the interstate commerce law to Michigan railroads.

This is an important piece of news. It appears that the railroads have begun pretty early to fix things in the legislature. They usually do.—Lansing Journal.

ONE OF THE FINEST.

A Four-Year-Old Joins the New York Police Force and Thinks It's Fun.

A street Arab found a little fellow wandering around aimlessly near Thirty-fourth street and Broadway. He took him in charge and handed him over to the sergeant of the Thirtieth Street Police station, saying that he thought "the kid too well dressed and too young to be about the streets."

When the sergeant asked the boy what his name was he said that it was Charley Smith.

"Where do you live?" asked the sergeant, kindly.

"Don't know exactly; somewhere near Central park, I guess. I'm Central Park Charley. Guess I am lost, ain't I?"

"Yes, I think you are," answered the sergeant, with a laugh. "What's your father's name?"

"Charley; same as mine. Say, mister, I like you. I don't mind stopping here."

"Well, you're welcome. Come into the back room and make yourself at home," and the man took the curly haired child into the patrol room. When Charley reached the room there were some sixty big policemen there, washing up, polishing their boots and getting ready to go before the captain and relieving the day force. They all shook hands with the little fellow and gave him so many pennies that the pockets of his diminutive shade were filled.

"This is a pretty fine place," he said to a red faced, smiling policeman.

"Oh, you," answered the other with a grin, "it's fine."

"I think I'd like one of those sticks," said Charley. "Would they care if I took one?" pointing to the rack of police clubs.

"Now, you're a policeman," said one of the men, wiping his dripping face and bending over the child. He marched gravely around, saluting all the men with his club almost as tall as he. The laughing fellows clapped their hands in approval and the child bowed low with great dignity. Some one mentioned the captain's name, and Charley said he guessed he'd go see the captain. They asked him to fall in line with the rest, and the little fellow did so, his stick over his shoulder. He marched by the side of a big roundman, whose knees almost came up to the boy's head. As the line filed out the door and before the captain's desk, the young policeman stamped time with his little boots, mawking proudly with the others. The men were all laughing at the boy's jaunty air and Capt. Reilly called out sharply, "Order." They could not stop laughing, however, and the captain rose from his seat and looked sternly at the fifty or more men. As he leaned over his desk he saw the rosy face of the boy looking up at him.

"Hello, captain," said Charley, nodding his little head at the grizzled one just above him.

"Well," said the captain, breathlessly, "who are you?"

"Policeman Charley, of Central park," said the boy knowingly, saluting with his big club.

"Well, Policeman Charley," said the captain, "just come in the back side of me. I will detail you on special duty."

The little chap was lifted up on one of the high stools next to the captain's. He looked over the register, pretended to read all the letters within his reach, brushed a thread from the captain's coat, and then began industriously to scrawl all over the papers before him with a pen. He and the captain had a friendly chat for half an hour. Then the two dined together, and afterward the captain hunted around until he found a smaller club for the boy. When he was taken away the next day, all the men gave him a hearty farewell and the captain gave him a watch charm and a quarter as a reward for faithful service. Charley said when he left the station that "being policeman was fun."—New York Tribune.

German Army Discipline.

Follow a company of German soldiers in the fighting line at maneuvers and mark the way in which every sight is carefully adjusted to any named distance and changed at each rush forward, even when the man are excited by a rapid advance. The present writer was a witness of a scene at the maneuvers where a company officer, who had noticed a man fail to change the sight of his rifle at a fresh distance, at once told him off for extra guard duty, this indeed being no light punishment after the men have been marching and fighting pretty well the whole day. Compare such fire discipline as this with what one but too commonly sees and hears at Aldershot field days—words of command for troops to fire and no distance named, or if named not attended to.—Macmillan's Magazine.

Soaping the Stockholders.

The stockholders of an Italian theatre desired a season of opera and signed a contract with an impresario to that effect. One of the conditions imposed on the impresario was that there should be two double basses in the orchestra. One was found, but a second could not be obtained, excepting from a neighboring city, at great expense. What did our impresario do? Procured an instrument and hired a "supo" to saw on it with a soaped bow. The season ended without any of the stockholders having "caught on."—American Musician.

Rewarding Employes.

The proprietor of one of the largest retail dry goods stores in the city, in whose employ are over 700 people, tells me that he keeps a clerk especially employed to figure up exactly what every person who stands behind a counter sells a day. This amount is placed alongside of the wages they earn and the relation of each considered. If it is found that a certain girl, for example, is not selling as much as she is expected to do it is quite probable that she will be reminded of that fact. If she can make sufficient excuse she will undoubtedly retain her position, but, failing in this, it is not unlikely that her services will be no longer required. Such a rule may seem to many a very strict one. But if an employe loses his or her position through neglect of duty they have no one to blame but themselves, and on the other hand when it is observed that they are attending strictly to business. The gentleman of whom I speak spends as much as $25,000, if not over, in various amounts among his employes at Christmas time.

"There is one lady in my employ," said he, "to whom I give a present of $1,500 every year. She is a buyer, and everything that she does buying is judicious are her selections, never fails to leave a ready sale."

Accordingly I should say that if my friend is more or less strict in certain directions he is quite lenient in others, and I am sure that no people who work in retail stores in this great city are as well treated as those who work for him.—New York News.

The Invalid's View of Things.

The invalid, like the poet, and like all acute sensitive beings, is remarkable not for seeing differently, but for seeing more than do the rest of the world. He endows everything about him with personality. Cold, hard substances are his avowed enemies. The soft, the yielding, the woolly, fill him with gratitude and delight. The arm chair invites and embraces him. The tiny teapot and ever are eager to do him service and the gruel bowl displays a fourly manner of solicitude. His cane is a Fidus Achates, his pet willow a Nancy or whatever his childhood's nurse was named. As to the bottles arranged on his table only the doctors who prescribed them can surpass their marked and individual interest in their charge. A glow of genuine affection fills me when I glance at Tonic, so many times has he proved worthy of the confidence reposed in him when the "lamp of life burned low." Liniment's nutrious sides are nearly bursting with oblivious good nature. Fine Old Bourbon has an irresistible bacchanalian leer. Scout Camphor needs only spectacles and a flap to make an old Pickwick of him. Sly little Morphine, hiding behind the rest, has a sinister, suggestive, Mephistopelian look, which at once attracts and repels.—Harper's Magazine.

To Whom It May Concern.

The cleverly devised machines that cut into checks the numerals representing the amount for which these checks are drawn, do their work well, and so prevent any tampering with the figures by the bold, but "miser" of checks. But the cut out figures come in the way of the indorsement. This could be avoided if the amount of a check in all cases, appeared in numerals placed to the right instead of the left of the useful and desirable bit of paper. Then the trio of important facts—the signer's name, the date and the amount of the check—would all appear at the same end of the check, and the work of the bank clerk and accountant be simplified and facilitated. As it is he must turn to the left end of the check to note the amount, and if the figures are cut out by the check protector, the openings interfere with a proper writing of the indorsement. The labor saving check appears occasionally, but only often enough to stimulate a desire for a general reform.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

Old Glass in New Windows.

As the art of making stained glass has been lost for ages, it has kept a more distinctly artistic character than in the Old World. In Europe, with governmental patronage and with museums ready to receive works of a large size which such encouragement creates, it is an inferior class of artists, as a rule, who engage in making stained glass. Here, on the contrary, almost every man who has the technical equipment to create large decorative work has been more or less engaged in designing for or making stained glass.—Scribner's.

A Cutting Reply.

When a member of the Boston Museum company, Mr. Le Moyne played Launcelot Gobbo to Charles Barron's Shylock. The relations between the two were not pleasant, and Mr. Barron seemed pleased when Launcelot's fine points failed to elicit any response from the audience. As Launcelot made his exit Mr. Barron, who was standing in the wings, said to him, "They don't seem to like your Launcelot, Mr. Le Moyne." To which the reply was "No; they don't think it half so funny as your Shylock."—The Theater.

The deadwood—that part of a railway freight car which projects and receives the shock of other cars in the process of "making up" a train, is the most appropriately named part of the train. It kills as many, if not more, than the gun store, though it picks them off singly.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a new method has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 10ow19

Epoch.

The transition from long lingering and painful sickness to robust health marks an epoch in the life of the individual. Such a remarkable event is treasured in the memory and the agency whereby the good health has been attained is gratefully blessed. Hence it is that so much is heard in praise of Electric Bitters. So many feel they owe their restoration to health, to the use of the great alterative and tonic. If you are troubled with any disease of kidneys, liver or stomach, of long or short standing you will assuredly find relief by use of Electric Bitters. Sold at 50c. and $1 per bottle at F. G. The complaints for lack of snow during December and the first ten days of January, demonstrate that this country must have snow to do business, and that an excess of that article is of less disadvantage than a lack, or none at all, as has been the case this year up to Jan. 10th.

A dispatch from East Jordan to the Grand Rapids Democrat says that F. J. Cutler, grocer, has yielded to hard times, small capital, small stock and big chattel mortgages. The mortgagees took the stock, but it will not go far enough to pay the mortgages. Other creditors must wait. His creditors were mainly Grand Rapids men.

The board of supervisors, of Lake county met last week and decided to allow the county seat to remain at Leland for five years more, in spite of the liberal offer made by Sutton's Bay. Leland agrees to furnish free buildings as long as the county seat remains there, and as the town has recently purchased the town hall building it can well afford to do so, as Leland has nothing to put into it.

These are many things which should be taken into consideration by advertisers when they are selecting a journal in which to place their advertisement. It is not always the paper with the largest circulation that makes the best advertising medium. It is the paper that is circulated among the class of people who use the articles you wish to sell. The JOURNAL reaches a class of people that no other paper does.

The walls of the new Baptist church are planned, and the wood work is nearly finished. When you enter the audience room, direct your attention to the newel posts at the bottom of the stairway. They are the handiwork of Mr. Henry Wade, and are a credit to his skill as a wood worker. They are of birch trimmed with black walnut. The new reflector or in the audience room is in place, and was lighted last Friday evening for the first time. The one reflector lights the entire audience room.

There is a very dangerous 25 counterfeit bill in circulation, and those fortunate enough to handle money of this denomination are very liable to be caught if not on the alert. The bill is of the new department' series of 1886 and is almost perfect in its execution. It can be detected by the fact that in the out of Gen. Grant the engraving on the right lapel of his coat is rough, the studs are missing from his shirt bosom and there is a distinct, but very small white mark in the right hand corner of his mouth that does not belong there.

Imitating Jack Frost.

A new Parisian industry is the manufacture of hoar frost glass, which is covered with feathery patterns resembling those naturally produced upon window panes in cold weather. The glass is first given a ground surface, either by the sand blast or the ordinary method, and is then coated with soft varnish. The varnish contains strongly iridescent crystals of frost work. A single coat gives a delicate effect and several coats yield a bold design.

Do Not Suffer any Longer.

Knowing that a cough can be checked in a day, and the first stages of consumption broken in a week, we hereby guarantee Dr. Acker's English Remedy for Consumption, and will refund the money to all who buy, take it as per directions, and do not find our statement correct. G. W. Beaman, druggist. 3

How Gladstone Reads.

Mr. Gladstone usually has three books in reading at the same time, and changes from one to the other when his mind has reached the limit of absorption. This is a necessary corrective to the tendency to think only of one thing at one time, which sometimes in politics leads him to neglect that all round survey of the situation which is indispensable to a prime minister. During the beginning of the Irish question in 1880 he was so absorbed in the question of the coercion of Turkey that he could hardly be induced to spare a thought for Ireland; now it is just as difficult to get him to think of any political question but that of Ireland.

He complains sometimes that his memory is no longer quite so good as it used to be, but, although that may be true, it is still twice so good as anybody else's, for Mr. Gladstone has an extraordinary faculty of not only remembering those things he ought to remember, but for forgetting those things it is useless for him to remember. His mind is thus unencumbered with any unnecessary top hamper, and he can always, so to speak, lay his hand upon anything the moment he wants it. This retentive memory was no doubt born with him, but it has been largely developed by the constant habit of taking pains. When he reads a book he does so pencil in hand, marking off on the margin those passages which he wishes to remember, underlying those about which he is in doubt, and putting a cross opposite those which he disputes. At the end of the volume he constructs a kind of index of his own, which enables him to refer to those things he wishes to remember in the book.—The Writer.

Opera hall was crowded last Monday evening, with people of all ages and creeds, to greet the old soldiers at their annual reunion. The program announced last week was followed, and all seemed to enjoy themselves, especially the old soldiers. The addresses by Dr. Chamberlin, Byron See, and E. H. Green were listened to with marked attention.

After hot tack and coffee, the younger element of the audience cleared the floor for a dance.

Each recurring installation seems to draw a larger crowd than the previous one.

Eclipse of the Moon.

This event came off as advertised, and may or may not have had anything to do with our very eccentric weather. Rain fell nearly all day yesterday, but during the evening the clouds broke away and the moon could be plainly seen until nearly 11 o'clock. Lester has sky clouded, the wind rose, and by morning a genuine blizzard was on. Today the streets and sidewalks are frozen hard, and very slippery.

WIDE AWAKE

The JANUARY num—is the second beautiful issue of Mrs. Lucy Larcom's Wide Awake for the season. It contains a charming social novelty for the young folks, called "Pleasant Evenings for Cricket Folklore." The month's recitations are by Clara Doty Bates, the music with each verse for the violin is by Julius Eichberg, and the funny little orchestral crickets are by L. J. Bridgman. "Mopsy's Mistake" by Mrs. Sarah Barnes Cooke is a charming "Brownie Book" story, entitled "Good Luck." Another Christmas story "Just a Little Thing" is by the popular English writer Mrs. L. B. Walford. Mrs. Jonathan Fenno Jenkins has a sketch of early California, called "My Grizzly Bear." The serial stories are "Ballyrogan, a Love Story of the Green Midway," by Margaret Sidney, in full of delicious home-fun and young life, while the Tewkesbury serial, "The Adventures of David Vane and David Crane," swings along in a jolly way. Mrs. Jackson's "Nelly Norman" shows the genuine pluck of the soul, and those in this story are real Yankees. "The Legend of William Tell" gives some excellent reasons for claiming that popular episode of Swiss history among folk-lore. Mrs. Sallie Joy White tells in "Experimenting" how the girls are taught so well a lesson that they never forget it. There are nearly a dozen poems, including "Christmas in the Kitchen, Prof. Starr writes in "A Queer Business." "Bird of the Bible" describes the interesting birds mentioned in the Scriptures, with descriptions and "short talks."

Wide Awake is $2.40 a year. D Lothrop Company, Boston.

Belford's Magazine.

Hands, hearts, what a foot I am for neglecting to get BELFORD'S MAGAZINE for JANUARY, in which MRS. CLARK RAYNE gives a complete novel, entitled "The Lion's Share" that is as pleasing as one of GEORGE ELIOT'S. "The Infancy of It." "The Polyot Cult" and "A Beautiful Life" are the subjects DON PIATT, the Editor, handles with consummate ability and makes interestingly readable. EVERY SOLDIER, every comrade-in-arms, will read with profit, CLINTON FURBISH'S article, "Wicked Legislation," proving how Congress has deliberately robbed the heroes of the late war. In four lines JAMES MCCARROLL tells of Uncle Sam's present degenerated condition:

"We have no longer Uncle Sam,
But yet not Yankee Doodle,
The first is but an Uncle Shrub,
The last a Yankee Noodle."

A very amusing story is "Andy's GIFT" by T. C. DE LEON, he who so mirthy burlesqued "THE QUICK AND THE DEAD." The Root of the Spoil System, by EDWARD V. VALLANDIGHAM, goes to the bottom of that subject. A Laughable Contribution to that nefty neglected "Condition," want of free trade, is D. THEW WRIGHT'S "Silk Culture." "Going, Going Gone," is a pathetic touch by ALBERT R. HAVENS. The belles and corners are artistically filled with poems by George Parsons Lathrop, John James Piatt, Charles L. Hildreth and James McLeod; and the book is crowned by a sweet story, UNCLE SCIPIO, by CELINE MCCAY. Now is the time to subscribe. Price 25c., $2.50 a year. For sale most everywhere—if your dealer can't supply you, remit direct to BELFORD, CLARKE & CO., PUBLISHERS, New York.

Test of Death.

Tests have been suggested to determine or not a person is dead or alive. Death has appeared to occur in the most recent, and held to be the most reliable test is called the hypodermic test. In using it the operator injects one hypodermic syringeful of strong solution of morphia under the skin of the arm or other convenient portion of body. If the body be not dead—if life be the faintest circulation—the morphia will produce on the skin, at the point where it was injected, a red patch, on the surface of which red spots will appear; if there be absolute death, there will be produced a brown dark blotch, which is definitely conclusive against possible vitality.—Boston Herald.

Pollutant Ice.

Cases of ice must read up on Chemical investigations of Kedzie, Fanning and Sudden, showing that ice taken from polluted streams is not purified by freezing. Kedzie tells us that if from streams containing rotting vegetable matter or sewage it will cause diarrhœa. In 1878, at Rye on epidemic typhoid was in a hotel, and was traced at last to ice from an adjacent pond. The use of this pond in summer was forbidding with putrescent matter, and manure, as well as bacteria, eliminated by any ordinary degree of cold. Too many of our ponds are the recipients of sewage, which is the sign of civilization, and may have it place.—St. Louis Democrat.

THE GOVERNOR'S VIEWS.

SUBSTANCE OF THE ANNUAL MESSAGE TO THE LEGISLATURE.

The Governor Directs Attention to the Question of Ballot Reform—Need of Greater Care in Enacting Laws—The Swamp Lands Controversy.

Gov. Luce opened his message to the State Legislature by congratulating it upon the favorable auspices under which it assembled, and referred to the general prosperity which has prevailed since the meeting of the last Legislature.

The first question touched upon by the Governor is in regard to purity of elections. He recommends the Legislature to adopt a new or different system of voting, if it is possible, thereby to more securely guard the ballot box, and counting.

The open charges made in so many quarters that our elections are controlled by the corrupt use of money in plain violation of law are painful to hear and alarming if true. If false, the contradiction of them should be made public. Unfortunate as true and baleful as false, if the fact is established that men are elected to positions of public trust because of their wealth or ability to use or command money for illegitimate purposes in secure places. What is known as the Massachusetts system is worthy of consideration, if it is not a mere illusion. From that commonwealth we hear of little or no complaint against corrupt influences at the polls. To this important subject you best thought is invited.

CONSTITUTIONALITY.

A growing evil has been developed in more than one State, and it is not improbable that it confronts with the Constitution of the United States. This has caused very serious embarrassment in many cases. It is very important that efforts should be made to secure the passage of laws which shall be unassailable when tested by the Constitution itself. Too failure of so many laws in recent years for the reason suggested somewhat weakens confidence in the wisdom of the Legislature that enacts and the Executive who approves these measures to be law constitutional. Various methods have been suggested for the remedying of this evil, which very seriously encumbrance the appointment of a joint committee, composed of three of the most eminent lawyers in the two houses, whose duty it shall be to carefully examine proposed legislation with a view of determining its constitutionality.

A committee, whose especial work it shall be to look up decisions of our own and other courts, can at least avoid some of the mistakes in legislation. If the proposition made in the last Governor's message, that it ought to be based on a mistaken. The Constitution provides that no new bill shall be introduced after the first fifty days of a session shall have expired. Sometimes bills are introduced for one purpose, and after the expiration of the time limited for the introduction of bills, are amended so as to be made to do the original one. This seems to me a violation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and should be prevented by some enacting qualifying.

CONSTITUTIONAL SENTENCES.

In the closing years of the service of 1867 a bill was passed entitled "An act to provide for individual assessment, and disposition, management, and release of criminals under sentence." Its provisions may be in part, or wholly, repealed by subsequent enactment, if the Legislature shall see fit. Its provisions are in substance as follows: Any person convicted of a felony shall be sentenced to the prison for a term which shall be the maximum penalty imposed by the law for the offense committed. I did not and do not believe that any man or woman should be clothed with authority to impose such sentences, and, consequently, my veto of this statute.

THE BRANCH OF THE STATE PRISON AT MARQUETTE.

This building has ample provisions for the care of convicts, and, if properly managed, it does not seem to me that there should be any difficulty in outgrowing completed, but largely because of the reflexes in our prison population. December 1, 1868, there were in Jackson and Detroit prisons, 1,000 convicts, and, December 1, 1869, it had increased to 1,054. He thinks the number for coming year will be. If the increase from December 1, 1867 to December 1, 1868, had continued we should now have a prison population of 1,322, pretty near the estimate of the Warden of the Marquette prison.

The reduction the Governor attributes in part to the act passed in 1867 relative to the confinement of convicted persons in the Detroit House of Correction. He says: "I hope that the Legislature in connection with sentence, will empower the Justices of the Peace the right to sentence persons convicted of offenses to the House of Correction at Ionia. He recommends the repeal of the act of 1867, and the enactment of a well-guarded law that will authorize Justices of the Peace to sentence persons convicted of offenses against the laws, to the House of Correction at Marquette. It seems fitter that we should send our prisoners to that institution. If good conduct, our female State prisoners, of whom there are now twenty-five, should be sent to the House of Correction, which is provided for such institutions. It is possible that our princess may be of advantage to the Legislature, and convicted criminals in one institution. Then make the House of Correction a House of Industry, and the State school and the prisons, the penitentiary taking those of a more median character between these two extremes. In asking to adjust this question, the advisability of reorganizing the Board of Control, and making it a bureau of the Executive, and authority to transfer from one to the other such inmates as may be found to be improperly placed. The board should be non-partisan phrase that a board should be non-partisan, and should be composed of the State boards has for years been composed of gentlemen of the highest character and ability in the State. Any proposition to change the direction of this board are found to be strictly non-partisan in their character. So with the work of all our boards. Political favoritism never enters into their deliberations.

Unusual efforts have been made during this biennial term to secure houses for the boys sent to the institution, and these efforts have been crowned with success. It is hoped that the time will come when they are to the Reform School, yet it is a matter of doubt if it is not better to retain it active, industrious and honest citizens. The management in every respect is satisfactory and harmonious. It is hard to answering the expectations of its founders, and is a source of pride to the people of the State. It is a portion of the institution to our prison population.

INDUSTRIAL HOME FOR GIRLS.

This is one of the youngest of our charitable institutions, and, considering its age, it is one of the most successful with which we are charmed. This class of girls have been solved. Instead of being sent to the prisons, they are taken by them by the home, and many of them have been sent to good homes. The Legislature has shown a very great interest in this institution, and, if it is not a mistake, I think that it will be found to be a very great benefit to the State. Its management is in the hands of a Board of Control

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Alvanee.

Jan. 14.—Jack Willis is boss on a furnace wood job,

P. B. Newton has been quite lame, but is now on the gain,

Mitchell LaCroix is getting out furnace wood.

Will Hayes has lately returned from the upper peninsula where he has been prospecting for gold.

Robert Newson has a job of hauling logs on Peterson's land.

Sylvester Newson is at home on a short visit.

We understand that the Furnace Co. has bought the farm of Ira' McGee.

The winter term of our school commenced the 7th, with a full attendance of scholars.

F. E. Miller has been engaged to teach the Hillegas school a five months term.

People are taking advantage of the present run of sleighing and are rushing in the logs and wood. C. G. Von Platten is now buying all the logs that are brought in.

Saturday morning (12th) Pine Lake was covered with a thin coating of ice. One year ago it was frozen over Dec. 30, two years ago Dec. 18, and three years ago Jan. 6.

John Backenstose has had another runaway. This time he was with the team. His son Charles was driving when the team became frightened and ran, throwing both occupants of the wagon out on the frozen ground. The elder escaped with a few bruises but Charles was considerably injured —his feelings worse than all. The team ran a short distance, thought better of it, and stopped.

Wilson.

Plenty of the beautiful.

Miss Wilson, our school ma'am, Sundayed at the residence of James Thompson in Echo.

Rev. H. C. Scofield preached at Good Templar's hall in Jordan township on Sunday last.

Edward Thompson, of Echo, was seen on our streets on Friday last.

Wm. White, of Boyne City, called at the mill on business on Monday last.

Lumbermen are happy and sawlogs are going to the mill yards "adying" they say.

Miss Mary McMillan, of Echo, is stopping at J. R. Vance's for the winter season.

Chas. Knuttel is night-watchman at the mill this winter, while Willie drives the mill team.

Rumors of runaway couples and weddings, family feuds, etc., are in the air, but nothing definite at present.

The sawmill has started again with Joe Cooper, formerly of Charlevoix, as head sawyer, John Tremain, engineer, Wm. Saunders, setter, Albert Todd, edgerman, Jason Lewis, slab sawyer, while Will Holland and Dan Folson take care of the lumber.

Banks.

Jan. 14.—No services at the M. E. church S n ay on ac count of qua r ly meeting at Barnard,

Dan Flanigan has moved his sledgle mill from Kewadin to Atwood.

Clarence Stafford has gone to T a verse City for an engine for his patent saw mill.

Misses Emma and Ida Byers leave for Indiana this week for a visit.

Ellsworth.

Jan. 15.—Every one is busy and thankful that sle ghing is here at last.

Chas. S. Campbell has gone to Central Lake where he will remain a short time. He will also visit his old home before he returns.

Robert Gordon has another attack of rheumatism.

Rev's Wakely and DeWolf are holding a series of revival meetings here.

Mrs. Nora Bell is visiting at her father's.

Charles Gotham's wife was taken suddenly ill last Friday night, but is now improving.

Burgess.

Isaac Stauffer lost a valuable horse one day last week.

Daniel Durance and wife were visiting their friends in Hayes the past few days.

Peter Kane and family, and I. S. Webster and wife were visiting friends in Bay over Sunday.

A spelling school at Murray's school house next Thursday evening.

Hamlin boys are rushing the logs down to Lake Michigan these days.

The "Light Fantastic."

Since "Is Marriage a Failure" has been discussed and decided upon, it has been suggested that the next subject for discussion should be "Dancing." I would like to make a statement for the benefit of some really good moral and religious people who contend that dancing is not immoral, or contrary to christianity.

I can recall a neighborhood where one year ago, a Sabbath school was in progress with over sixty members enrolled, forty in regular attendance, and a dancing party could not be "got up" in the neighborhood, while other parties were quite common. Now the Sunday school is a thing of the past, while the brains that were used in getting up literary Sunday school exercises, are now inventing some new place to dance, even invading homes where some of the members of the family are opposed to it; while those members of the community who conscientiously regard dancing as an evil, are ostracised from social gatherings, for none are to be had without the inevitable "hop."

This is only one side of the question, you may say, but I await an article on the affirmative, which I hope will clear up some of the clouds which now are in the social sky. I hope the editor will give space for discussion on this subject, deeming it only secondary to the liquor and tobacco question, and responsible for much social evil. Yours for morality,

A MOTHER.

East Jordan, Jan. 14.

Not Particular.

Mother (to little Emma)—What are you going to do with that egg?

Little Emma—The teacher is going to tell us the history of Columbus, and asked every one to bring an egg.

Mother—But, my dear, I can't spare an egg.

Little Emma—Oh! that doesn't make any difference. Teacher told us to bring some butter if we had no eggs.—New York Sun.

He Get Away With It.

A short old man in a long gray beard put an armful of Christmas trees through Fulton market yesterday afternoon and slopped at a wagon of grapes were displayed.

"Here you are!" yell pointing to crates beaded Concords, Catawbas and Niagaras.

The small man stopped long enough to see his fruitedness pulled off a bunch in a basket of Concords and, he tried a bunch of Catawbas, and began on the Niagaras.

"Hey, you!" the fruit vender, who was with a customer, now in a short man's exclamation. "How much for grapes?" he asked, blandly, asking a bid. "Forty cents a basket." "Too much," said the man, as he walked away two more Concords. "Are you a wholesale dealer."

"No."

"Own a vineyard, sir?"

"No."

"Where did you learn 'Drive'n Jerry?'

"Well, see here, old man, I'll give you a dollar and a half for the lot, and then you get out, you don't want to go around here."—New York Sun.

A DAY IN CONGRESS.

But Little Business Transacted—Bills Introduced.

When the tariff bill was taken up in the Senate on the 16th inst., Mr. Allison, from the Finance Committee, reported two new sections which he proposed to offer as amendments. They provide for the payment of a bounty of 1 cent a pound until April 100, to the producers of sugar testing not less than 80 degrees, and to the producers of sorghum and the beauty is to be paid annually from the duties collected on imported sugar. Senator Dawes introduced a bill or the division of the great Sioux reservation in Dakota. It requires the consent of the Indians to be obtained to the opening of the reservation, and that the fund arising from the sale of the surplus lands be in trust for the six different tribes instead of being held in a lump sum for the whole nation. Mr. Hoar introduced a concurrent resolution for the counting of the vote for President and Vice President, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It provides that the two houses of Congress shall assemble in the hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday (Feb. 9 next, at 12 o'clock meridian, when the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer. The two persons shall be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate, and two on the part of the House, to make a list of the votes and to deliver the same to the President of the Senate, who shall forthwith announce the state of the vote and the persons elected. The tellers shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President of the United States, and shall be entered on the journals of the two houses. Under the call of States for bills for introduction in the House, Mr. Dockery introduced a bill for the taxing of votes; for the establishment of a national bullion reserve, and for the purpose of the refunding the interest-bearing debt of the United States. Mr. Cannon introduced a bill to amend the act to prevent the spreading of contagious diseases. Mr. Chickering, from the committee on commerce, introduced a bill to repeal the tax on tobacco and moved its reference to the Committee on War Claims. Lost—yeas, 100; nays, 117—and the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Mr. Bowden from the committee on District of Columbia, reported back the bill for the extension of Columbia.

PERISHED IN A WRECK.

Eight Persons Killed and a Dozen Injured in an Accident Near Tallmadge, Ohio.

A frightful wreck occurred on the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio Railroad near Tallmadge, Ohio, a passenger train colliding with one section of a freight which had broken in two. Eight persons were killed and a dozen injured. The list of killed is as follows: Robert Huntington, of Galion, Ohio, passenger engineer. William Walters, of Galion, Ohio, passenger fireman; J. F. Bushford, of Galion, freight brakeman; William Lundy, of Salamanca, N. Y. (Wells, Fargo & Co. express messenger); three Chinamen; Mary Ann Lyon, of Idaho, ticketed second-class to Cherry Creek, N.Y. The injured are: David Thomas, of Galion; Sam Dougless, of Galion; Robert Owen, of Kent; James Boyd, of Paterson, N. J.; George Shaw, of Galion; Thomas Fairfax, pointed, of Cleveland. Other passengers, whose names were not learned, received slight injuries, but none of them serious. Those in the two sleepers escaped practically unhurt. The greatest horror came when the baggage car and smoker, which telescoped with the commonwealth, took fire, the weak and helpless and wounded praying for succor from the flames that were fast enveloping them. One man, George Shaw, pinned in by the wreckage, managed by superhuman efforts to release his lower limbs, and escaped out and bruised. The last man to get out alive was able to grasp an ax-handle and retain his hold until he was drawn through a gap, half dead, but was quickly rescued. Two in the smoker were eight Chinamen. Five were pulled out alive, but half dead from fright. Three were never seen alive the crash, and bones and bits of charred flesh gathered up in a bag were all that was found of them. The express car carried a large quantity of fine silver and bank bullion and a treasure-safe said to be filled with fine gold, valued at $25,000. The company's direct loss is upward of $15,000.

In the Field of Politics.

Joseph Fifer has been inaugurated as Governor of Illinois, at Springfield.

The inauguration of Governor Hovey of Indiana occurred at Indianapolis. General Harrison being present at the ceremonies. The oath of office was administered by Hon. B. K. Elliott, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Indiana.

The Hon. D. R. Francis has been inaugurated Governor of Missouri.

Isham G. Harris has been renominated for United States Senator by the Democratic Tennessee Legislature.

The Hon. George F. Hoar has been renominated by the Massachusetts Republicans for United States Senator.

Senator Manderson has been renominated by the Republicans of the Nebraska Legislature to represent the State in the United States Senate.

To fill the unexpired term occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Hovey to become Governor, Col. Frank B. Posey has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the First Indiana District.

The Democrats of Massachusetts, at Boston, nominated the Hon. P. A. Collins as a candidate for United States Senator.

Cutting the Pre-Election Vote.

The Presidential Electors chosen at the election in November met on the 14th inst., at the State capitals of their respective States, and went through the legal formality of casting their votes for the candidates for President and Vice President whom they represented.

THE RECENT GREAT STORM.

The Suspension Bridge Wrecked at Niagara Falls—Loss of Life in Pennsylvania.

The Niagara Falls suspension bridge situated nearest the falls was carried away by the recent gale and deposited in the river. The bridge was completely rebuilt last season and enlarged for a double track. The material of which it was composed was iron and steel. It was owned by the Niagara Falls and Clifton Suspension Bridge Company. The stock is held in Chicago and Canada, and had always paid large dividends. The loss is about $500,000. The bridge will probably be rebuilt as soon as possible. All the points of interest along the river at the water's edge suffered more or less from the gale. The water was never known to be so high. The International Hotel was unroofed. Several buildings were blown down in the vicinity. The gale was the severest ever known there, and lasted about twelve hours. The total loss by the gale in that vicinity will reach $1,000,000.

THE PENNSYLVANIA CYCLONE

The total number of persons killed in the late cyclone at Reading, Pa., is twenty-four, and three badly injured. Search in the ruins of the silk mill has been abandoned. Several of those reported killed have been found. Fifteen dead bodies were removed from the ruins left by the cyclone at Pittsburg, and of the thirty-five injured three died. Rev. Dr. Reed, of Allegheny City, was among the victims. Three smaller companies at Pueblo, Col., have each given a fifty-ounce silver brick to be sold by the Stock Exchanges of the city of New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburg for the benefit of the cyclone sufferers.

STATE SOLONS.

Meeting of Various Legislatures—Their Political Complexion.

Gov. Fleming, of Florida, has been inaugurated at Tallahassee. The occasion brought together the largest gathering of civilians and State troops ever seen at the capital. A prominent feature was a column of Union and Confederate veterans, the latter including members of the Confederate regiment in which both ex-Gov. Berry and Gov. Fleming served.

Gov. Cooper, of Colorado, has been inaugurated at Denver. His address was short, the principal feature being recommendations to the General Assembly to pass a fair but stringent railroad law and a law for the arbitration of difficulties between employers and employes.

The Kansas Legislature met at Topeka. The House elected Capt. Henry Booth, of Larned, Speaker, and Col. H. T. Millard, of Reading, Chief Clerk. In the Senate Senator Harkness was chosen President pro tem., and Angus Stacey Secretary.

The New Jersey Legislature was organized by the Democrats without notable incident. In joint convention at St. Paul the Minnesota Legislature heard the final and inaugural messages of the outgoing and incoming Governors, and Governor W. R. Merriam was duly installed in office. Retiring Governor A. R. McGill dwelt at length on the question of the regulation of railroads, expressing the belief that the laws already enacted and enforced have settled the right every man to have equal privileges in dealing with common carriers. He thought a court should be established to prevent unnecessary building of new roads and the killing of thriving towns by railroads passing them by and endeavoring to build up rival cities. He says the high-license law has been entirely satisfactory and has benefited the State both financially and from a temperance standpoint. Gov.-elect W. R. Merriam was sworn in by Chief Justice Gilfillan and read his message, which covered about the same ground as that of his predecessor's.

The West Virginia Legislature met at Charleston, and the Democrats organized the House by electing Woods Speaker. In the Senate Gov. Fuller voted with the Democrats, which resulted in a deadlock. Carr and Minter (Dem.) were candidates for President. The Democrats control the House and the Republicans Minter.

At a Republican caucus of the Kansas Legislature it was unanimously agreed to re-elect Senator Plumb.

OATS, WHEAT, AND CORN.

The Agricultural Department Submits Its Report for December.

The December report of the Department of Agriculture, which publishes in detail estimates of some of the most important crops, makes the product of corn 1,987,790,000 bushels grown on 75,672,763 acres, valued on the farm at $677,561,580, or 34.1 per bushel, against 44.4 cents for the crop of 1887, a decrease of 25 per cent, the product of 1887 being 27 per cent. less in volume than that of 1886. The average yield of the commercial belt, or seven corn surplus States, averages 33.2 bushels per acre. The Atlantic coast, south of the Potomac, averages 11.2 bushels of comparatively poor quality. The wheat aggregate is 414,838,000 bushels, grown on 37,336,139 acres, valued at $384,248,000. The average yield is 11.1 bushels per acre, winter wheat 11.6, and spring wheat 10.3 bushels per acre. The average farm value is 92.6 cents per bushel, against 68.1 cents for the previous crop, a difference due more to foreign than domestic scarcity. The aggregate for oats is 707,737,000 bushels, grown on 29,996,924 acres, and valued at $195,424,240. This is 27.8 cents per bushel, against 30 cents for the crop of 1887. A comparison of aggregate values shows that the present corn crop is worth only $81,000,000 more than the previous one, wheat $74,000,000 more, oats $5,000,000 less.

DUN & CO'S TRADE REPORT.

The Influence of Railroads—The Sugar Trust, Etc.

The review of trade for last week, by R. G. Dun & Co., is as follows:

Not the least important feature of the railway Presidents' situation is the fact that bankers of large influence commit themselves, in case the company signs, to raise their contingency or aid to the negotiation of securities. Nothing more clearly shows the belief in the railway business in the company. The report of the Reading company is so much better than the time when it took, for the year ending June 30, 1886, the stock and bonds were at the lowest point, that the 10 per cent. on the stock to dividend was paid, and on the preferred income bonds 2 per cent. THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in state convention in Hartman's hall, Grand Rapids, ON THURSDAY, FEB. 28, 1889,

At 11 o'clock a. m. for the purpose of nominating one candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court, and two candidates for Regents of the State University, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the party. Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 200 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 100 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: one vice president of the state central committee, one member of the committee on credentials, permanent organization, and order of business and resolutions.

L. M. WESTON,
CHAS. H. THOMAS, SEC'Y. Chairman.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates.

Electric lights have been placed in the senate chamber at Lansing, each of the 110 ornamental cones in the ceiling being supplied with an incandescent lamp.

JAMES F. JOY charges the interstate commerce law with being the cause of the present depression in railroad properties, and consequent demoralization of other lines of trade.

In Big Rapids the mail is put on the regular passenger omnibus and is carried round from one place to another until the driver gets ready to deliver it. The business men kick—so does William P. Nisbett.

"Democrats die hard," one of our able contemporaries remarks. Dey hard? They do not die at all. The more they are whipped the harder they kick. If they could be killed they would be as Napoleon said of the Russians—after they are dead you have to knock them down.—Cincinnatti Commercial Gazette, Rep.

M. F. GUINON, of Petoskey, was elected circuit court commissioner of Emmet county last fall. Lately he sent to the governor his resignation in favor of E. C. Barnum, of Petoskey, if the appointment was agreeable. As soon as it was known that Guinon had resigned half a dozen applicants posted down to Lansing to obtain the place. Not caring to open a free-for-all, Mr. Guinon recalled his resignation, and, as the governor had not accepted it, will continue to act for the rest of the term.

A SERIOUS misunderstanding has arisen between the authorities at Washington and Berlin regarding the action of sailors from the German man-of-war Olga, in the Samoan islands, in firing upon the American flag floating over the American consulate, burning three houses belonging to an American citizen, and brutally maltreating another American citizen. To assist in the support of American interests and the protection of American citizens at the islands, the U. S. man-of-war Vandalia has been ordered to the seat of disturbance. The government at Washington acted promptly, and it is hoped that proper amends will be made by the offending government, and without further bloodshed.

THE U. S. man-of-war Vandalia, which was sent to the Samoan island to resent the insults of the German sailors to the American flag, carries a sixty-pounder breech-loading rifle on her forecastle, an eight-inch pivot muzzle-loading rifle forward of the foremast, and six nine-inch Dahlgrens in broadside in her waists. She also has a three-inch rifled, wicked little gun, a twenty pound breech-loading howitzer, and two gatlings. She also has Hotchkiss rifled cannon. To man, ship, and serve all these guns the vessel carries a complement of 240 officers, crew, and marines. Seven of the officers of the Mohican, who have not yet entered upon the three year's cruise, were transferred to the Vandalia. A number of long time men were also sent to the Vandalia.

Lieut. Gov. Macdonald Killed.

Last Saturday, at 1.30 p. m., by the breaking of a truck, a passenger coach on the Menominee River branch of the Chicago & Northwestern railroad, was thrown from the track, instantly killing Lieut. Gov. James H. Macdonald and Wm. F. Cochrane, of Escanaba, and H. H. Tuttle, the great iron man, of Cleveland, Ohio, besides injuring a large number of other passengers.

Messrs. Macdonald, Cochrane and Tuttle were going to Ashland, Wis., to establish some large rolling mills, and were to have been met by the Ashland Business Men's Association.

Lieut-Gov. Macdonald was 62 years of age and was born in Nova Scotia. He came to Wisconsin when 18 years of age and engaged in railroading. For many years he was was with the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, filling various responsible positions. These years he saved, retired, having realized handsomely on mining investments. In 1886 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor of Michigan and was re elected last November. He recently became interested in the Cochrane Mining Company and secured the location of mills at Escanaba. He leaves a wife, a son aged 28 years, and a daughter aged 20. His property is estimated at from $500,000 to $750,000.

Mr. Cochrane of Escanaba was inventor of the Cochrane rolling mill, and treasurer of the Cochrane Mining Co., of Escanaba.

Mr. Tuttle was a member of the firm of Tuttle, Ogdeday & Co., a prominent iron firm of Cleveland, and superintendent of the Commonwealth Milling Company, and who has extensive mining interests in the Gogebic district. He leaves a wife and one or two children at Cleveland.

The event casts a gloom over not only the cities interested in the business enterprises of these gentlemen, but the whole state of Michigan.

A Curious Breton Almanac.

Apropos of almanacs, to which we referred yesterday, a full Breton calendar may be found in the "Almanach des Traditions Populaires," issued annually. Here we learn that the 11th of June is still the longest day with that primitive people; while each of the first twenty days of the year infallibly foretellsws the weather of each of the twelve months. If the weather goes wrong there are many saints to apply to for remedy. St. Valentin and St. Marina replace Neptune, and order about the winds; Milault gives fine days; Hilion preserves from hail and drought; Nonna and Pern give rain; and Sylvestre—generally connected in Germany with red noses—prevents white frosts, while Eloi and Barba act as lightning conductors. No fewer than seventy-six saints divide the duties of Esculapius; among them Mark, who is supposed to pay special attention to scurvy and muscular itch; Ceros is represented by eight, and Lucina is the prototype of four. Fear and respect the holding of Rival, Aston and Kristina fatten pigs, and dill cures them when they are ill; mad dogs flee before the names of Tujon and Bienzi; Isidore destroys moles, and Herve is the declared enemy of wolves. Things must get mixed a good deal in Brittany, for three saints—Gouery, Fergat and Jean Darchem—have nothing else to do but look out for them. Since makes children grow fast; Eider and Glenda teach them to speak, and Lithubian, Tujon and Lijer sea that they walk early. The last is a saint (Leger) who makes horses run in England. Perhaps out of the whole calendar St. Yver Peter has his hands fullest; for he has to fill all the hives with honey and all the nets with fish, besides giving full breeds of chickens to the hens, and in his odd moments charming away rheumatics and tumbrosis. The "Almanach" also contains a collection of Normandy beggars' chants, with music; fairy tales, popular riddles, and the addresses of all recognized "folklorists" throughout the world.—Galignani's Messenger.

The Michigan Libel Bill

The Cleveland Leader quotes the bill relative to libel which has been approved by the Michigan Press Association, and says:

The substance of the above ought to be enacted in every state. The presumption of malice, and punitive damages, except in certain well defined cases, are relics of legal barbarism and ought to be abolished. Malice is not presumed even in murder cases. It must be proven. In no other action for trespass are more than proven damages collectible. The theory that retraction is simply a confession of guilt and a proof that damages ought to be paid, is abhorrent. The bill quoted reforms these manifest abuses of existing laws, and puts libel on the same plane of equity and practice as other torts. We commend its provisions to the consideration of the members of the Ohio general assembly.

WIDE AWAKE.

The January number is the second beautiful holiday issue of Wide Awake, and opens the year with a charming social novelty for the winter evenings, a yule-tide recitation called "The Christ Child," the words set to music by Clara Doty Bates, the music with each verse being a carol in itself. Mr. Stockton, and Mr. Cleveland, contribute long stories, and Mr. Bridgeman, The opening story, full of the Christmas-tide spirit, is by Brooksby Bouldrewith, entitled "Good Luck," another Christmas story "Such a Little Thing" is by the Polish Patriot writer Mrs. E. R. Sill[illegible] Mrs. Bishop, the famous traveler in Japan and California, contributes "An Adventure in Japan" Mrs. Wiggin's "Polly Oliver's Problem" is a very delightful comedy of the Revolutionary period. Mr. Stockton's "Rudder Grand" is a jolly story of a jolly way; Trowbridge's New England Legend "Jim" the genius people of the soil, and those in the city—and Mr. Cleveland's "The Legend of Wolf Mountain" is a strong story of Western life. Among that popular episode of recent history, Jacques Boyesen's "Boy Life in Norway" and "Boy Life in Iceland" have the girls are target to hunt—fire in the Boston Public Schools, which is enough to make fire should be built in everybody's kitchen. Prof. Scott writes in "A Queer Bird," about "Birds of the Gulf Coast" and Mr. Bishop in "Birds of Our American Sea, describes Oregon robins that build their nests in the tops of tall trees. Mr. Bishop's other contribution is "The Island of Shady Maidens's Saints Church," by M. S. Brooks, in one of the best Christmas stories of the season. There are poems by Mrs. Whitney, Mrs. Bishop, Mrs. Sill, Mr. Bridgeman, Mr. Lee, Mr. Bouldrewith, Mr. Trowbridge, and Mr. Stockton, and Mr. Cleveland, and Mr. Bridgeman, and Mr. Lee, and Mr. Bouldrewith, and

THE DRUMMER AND HIS GRIP.

BY F. M. GILBERT.

Though the rain and sleet are falling,
And the roads are "awful muddy,"
Though all men "hard times" are bawling,
Though the times are "tight" and tricky,
Though the times may be frosty,
And the frosts may bite and nip,
They can never stop the advent
Of the drummer and his grip.

Though the train may all to smashing,
Though the horses all go lame,
The drummer, like the lightning,
Will get there just the same.
And when his time is over
Will come smiling from his trip,
Will be welcomed home by lovers,
Does the drummer with his grip.

Ah, he teaches us a lesson,
With his energy and grit,
Teaches us how to "strike" most people
Don't accumulate a bit.
And he's ever bright and cheerful,
And a smile is on his lip,
He's a dairy from away back,
Is the drummer with his grip.

Give him a kind word always,
He'll give you back the same,
For the doings of some "black sheep"
Don't give the like while time blows.
For down, down down to Hades,
Will go the man who does the slip,
While along the road to heaven
Goes the drummer with his grip.

MARRYING A POOR MAN.

"My choice is made at last, sister Belle. Now I am ready for blame or praise from others, but I want your approval."

The elder sister looked at a couple of open letters lying on the writing-desk before which the speaker sat, her cold gray eyes softening a little as she replied:

"If you tell me which of the two you have chosen I can answer you."

"You ought to know without being told," Stella laughed. "Clarence, of course."

Bella Lawson look serious.

"Stella, I am sorry. Not that I bear Clarence Henshaw any ill-will, but, child, you are not fit to be a poor man's wife. Remember you are proud and have been reared in ease and comfort. Follow my advice and marry Henry Lakeman."

Stella shook her head.

"No Bella; I wouldn't marry Henry Lakeman if he was a hundred times richer than he is."

She slipped a picture into its envelope with a long glance at the view it imaged.

"It is a lovely place," she sighed, "and I would like to live there."

The sister was watching, and, stooping, kissed the smooth, white brow, while she said:

"Don't be too hasty, Stella. If you never this pretty home of Henry Lakeman's, accept it."

"But I love Clarence. I prefer a cottage with him to a mansion with Henry."

Miss Lawson turned to the window with a sorry look. Some sweet dream of her childhood was in her memory, perhaps, but she held it worse than folly to indulge in regrets. Love, in her estimation, was to be kept in the scale for wealth.

"Stella," she continued, very gravely, "I have acted the part of a mother for many years; my wish has ever been that you form a wealthy marriage. I know you love luxury, you enjoy display, and am I not saving too much when I tell that you worship beautiful apparel. Henry Lakeman can give you all of these. Clarence Henshaw cannot. As his wife you will be subject to all manner of privations, be obliged to live in a common way, stint and economize and manage the best you can. How long will that suit a girl of your tastes? Think well of it. I shall let you have your own choice in regard to this marriage."

"Have I not decided?"

Stella ran lightly up the stairs to her own room and touched the bell in great haste.

"You will oblige me by mailing this at once," she said to the servant who answered her call, handing him this very envelope. "And," she said, smiling and blushing, "be careful of this," placing another letter into his hand. "Leave it with no one but the person to whom it is addressed."

"There'll be no mistake, miss." And that night a perfumed note by an Clarence Henshaw's pillow, and he, foolish fellow, was transported to the upper heaven of delight.

Three months later they were married. They were a happy and hopeful couple. This life upon which they had entered was like a new and unexplored country, but Clarence meant to work hard and fill little or no doubt in regard to their future. He had been a head bookkeeper for many years and had the promise of something better yet the coming season. They rented a house in the pleasant part of the city, kept a servant, and Stella won the handsome clothes which had been provided at the time of her marriage. But toward the end of the first year of their wedded life his firm was said to be under heavy liabilities, and the anniversary of their marriage found the house bankrupt and Clarence out of a situation. They moved out of their house and took a cheaper place in another part of the city. By this time their funds began to run low and Stella wasted something new for her wardrobe.

"I shall find something by-and-by," the husband said bravely.

It was at this trying time that a little spark of humanity was put into Stella's arms, and its feeble cry told that the responsibility of motherhood was here.

"I'm the happiest man alive," Clarence exclaimed, caressing wife and baby boy. "Let pride go to the dogs, Stella," he said, remembering that now his responsibility was greater than before. "They are in want of workmen on the new city-hall. I'll take my hammer—it will give us bread."

She ought to have been contented—ought to have thought with pride of the man who would thus brave the world's opinion. He went out in the early morning and came home late at night, his handsome face glowing with love. But the very thought that her husband was brought down to the level of a common laborer hurt her.

Sister Belle had said that her tastes were luxurious, and she wasted a pretty home now and fine apparel for herself and baby. The people of the world in which she had lived had never to count their money to know if they could buy a new dress. She had lived amid luxuries made the most of circumstances, and why should she now? The little pretious she endured worried her, and in a little while the sweet-tempered woman became moody and down-hearted.

"Stella is homesick," the husband would say; "the care of the baby is too much for her. I must make some money," and his face would grow anxious and careworn, but Stella continued to sulk.

"How can you expect her to live among such surroundings?" was her appeal, when he begged her to cheer up. "It's cruel in you," she sobbed. "I want to go home to my own friends."

The warm glow came to his face, and he drew her tenderly toward him without a word, but there was a look piteous to see in his handsome eyes. Then came a day a little later when it did seem that matters had come to a crisis. The City Hall was finished, and Clarence must look for something new. Jennie, who had been Freddy's nurse, had to go, and all the household cares fell upon Stella. They had moved about a fortnight, and he had found a place in which the fretting girl-wife would be contented.

"These people are all alike, you know, and I may as well be in one place as another," was her reply to Clarence when he suggested that they move.

It was unwomanly in her to say this, she knew, and she thought to repent after her husband and begs his forgiveness, but at then Freddy caught her by her dress, causing her to spill the water she was pouring into the kettle, which only increased her vexation.

"Do you mean thing!" she exclaimed, impatiently. "Take that!" laying her hand heavily on the little bare shoulders. Then she sat down and went into hysterical weeping. Freddy, with the prints of her fingers still on his neck, tried to climb into her lap, but she pushed him away again.

"Don't do anything you'll be sorry for, Stella," her husband was coming into the room just then.

"I thought you'd gone to town," she replied, sharply. "O, dear! If I had taken good advice I would not have married a poor man."

"You are not yourself this morning, Stella," and his eyes were full of unshed tears as he saw the red marks on the baby's neck.

"Do you think I can endure everything?" she cried, hysterically.

"You are nervous and tired dear. Come here." And he put out his hand to coax her, but she turned away from him and left the room.

Something wet fell on the baby's head, and he pressed him closer to his breast as he caught the sound of her sobbing.

"I have heard of something new this morning, Stella, and I am going to New York by the next train."

"You are always hearing of something new," was her quick reply; "but what does it concern me?"

"I am hoping for something better, and think I've found it now."

He rocked Freddy to sleep, put him into the crib, then went to the door with his wife's room.

"Are you going to kiss me good-by, Stella?" he asked. "I may be gone a day or two."

"No," she replied, coldly; "you'll be back soon enough."

"But I might never return, you know."

"See if you are not back in a day or two, with the same old story."

Clarence turned quickly and left her. She heard him cross the room, and knew he bent over Freddy's crib and kissed the little sleeper again and again.

"He'll come back before he's really gone," whispered she to herself, gazing toward the door, but a turn in the street hid him from sight. He had gone, without bidding her good-by.

Stella sat still till Freddy awoke, then with a cry of anguish she ran across the hall to the nearest bedroom door.

"Please come, Mrs. Wilson. My baby is dying."

Mrs. Wilson came, for though rough in manner she was kind in heart.

"He is in a fit," she said, the moment she saw the child. "Bring me some water and help get off his clothes."

Stella obeyed.

"Hold him so till I run home and get some medicine," she added, putting him in the bath. "Such women as you ain't fit to be mothers," she continued, returning with her hands full of bottles.

"I have so many trials to bear," moaned Stella.

"Nonsense," replied Mrs. Wilson. "You have a pretty home if it was put in order."

"I'm used to better."

"Young people can't begin where the old one's left off. They must make their own homes."

"I never understood it so. My sister advised me never to marry a poor man."

"And so you keep finding fault and complaining, when your husband is trying in every way to make an honest living. It is a wonder you haven't driven him to drink long ago."

"But my husband is a good man," replied Stella, warmly, resenting the last part of the speech.

"He has shown himself to be a good man."

The woman said it in good faith, wrapping Freddy in soft flannels and administering a quieting potion. She had been watching the movements of the people ever since they came to live in the lofts.

"My baby will get well, won't he?" was said, pleadingly, and the poor thing sobbed again as if her heart would break.

"Yes, indeed."

"And you will stay with me through the night?" forgetting that she was one of "those people."

"I'd stay with you a whole blessed week," replied true-hearted Mrs. Wilson, "if I could make you a wife worthy of your husband."

"Tell me what I shall do and I'll do it willingly and without complaining."

All through the long night, while Freddy lay between life and death, Mrs. Wilson worked over him bravely, and tell the girl-mother chapters in her own life experiences. There were passages over which Stella wept bitterly, and when morning dawned, giving back the child from danger, in place of the feble, unreasonable woman, there was one ready to meet life's work with firm purpose and strong heart.

She tidied up each apartment, and instead of going about in a dowdy wrapper put on a fresh dress, arranged her hair becomingly, and changed the pucker about her mouth for her own rosy lips.

"Now's a pretty little thing," Mrs. Wilson told her when she had fastened a knot of blue ribbon in her hair. "See after baby now. I'll look in every now and then during the day, and maybe I will come back to you. Your husband will be here to-morrow morning."

"Yes," Stella replied, with a bright look in her eyes. "He'll be here by 10 o'clock."

After all, it was a long time to wait, she thought, as the slow minutes ticked out—and she would miss him as many times as he wished.

"Yes, indeed!" she exclaimed, joyfully, bending over Freddy with a kiss. He's papa a hundred thousand times, won't we, baby?"

"I do wish Clarence would come," she kept saying next morning. "What detains him?" she continued, when the clock was on the stroke of 11. "What if—and her heart lay like lead in her bosom as she recalled the look she had saw on his face—what if he never came back?" she murmured, going into her own room. "Mrs. Wilson, I'm so lonesome in my big husband!"

In an instant the door, good soul was beside her, resting a hand tenderly on the aching head. True-hearted woman! She shrank from saying it had been a dreadful night on the morrow, and that a steamer had collided with the New York boat. Her husband traveled by boat," had been her conclusion.

Stella stood at her urn, the sound of her voice answering Freddy, and with a cry she fell. Poor, tired, inexperienced wife and mother, the ordeal was too dread! With the help of a neighbor Mrs. Wilson had her on her bed.

"Run for the doctor," she said to Miss Williams.

"But you don't know——"

"I do," she interrupted. "Mrs. Henshaw will have a run of nervous fever, and your husband will be dead or alive, I can't say."

When Stella opened her eyes again it was nearly night. She knew no one about her bed, but she called for Clarence and Freddy, and sister Belle. She was going to help her husband now. She could earn money by teaching music or drawing, she might have a few pupils in dancing, she said. "But forgive me for my sickness," and her arms were put up as if to clasp something, when she dropped back.

Late that evening Clarence came in sight of home. Could he? Was Mrs. Wilson's conjecture, he came by a different route, he had thought to telegraph, but "the heart won't wory," he said, "if I am late." The light faded from his eyes and his face turned ghostly white when he looked into the room.

"Both gone!" he groaned, walking from the bed to the door.

"No, no," Mrs. Wilson said, comforting. "Baby's better, and your wife will come out of this. All she needs is good nursing, and that she shall have," turning to her and seeing the light come back into the corner of her across.

"What could we do?"

He rocked Freddy to sleep, put him into the crib, then went to the door with his wife's room.

"Are you going to kiss me good-by, Stella?" he asked. "I may be gone a day or two."

"No," she replied, coldly; "you'll be back soon enough."

"But I might never return, you know."

"See if you are not back in a day or two, with the same old story."

Clarence turned quickly and left her. She heard him cross the room, and knew he bent over Freddy's crib and kissed the little sleeper again and again.

"He'll come back before he's really gone," whispered she to herself, gazing toward the door, but a turn in the street hid him from sight. He had gone, without bidding her good-by.

Stella sat still till Freddy awoke, then with a cry of anguish she ran across the hall to the nearest bedroom door.

"Please come, Mrs. Wilson. My baby is dying."

Mrs. Wilson came, for though rough in manner she was kind in heart.

"He is in a fit," she said, the moment she saw the child. "Bring me some water and help get off his clothes."

Stella obeyed.

"Hold him so till I run home and get some medicine," she added, putting him in the bath. "Such women as you ain't fit to be mothers," she continued, returning with her hands full of bottles.

"I have so many trials to bear," moaned Stella.

"Nonsense," replied Mrs. Wilson. "You have a pretty home if it was put in order."

"I'm used to better."

"Young people can't begin where the old one's left off. They must make their own homes."

"I never understood it so. My sister advised me never to marry a poor man."

"And so you keep finding fault and complaining, when your husband is trying in every way to make an honest living. It is a wonder you haven't driven him to drink long ago."

"But my husband is a good man," replied Stella, warmly, resenting the last part of the speech.

"He has shown himself to be a good man."

The woman said it in good faith, wrapping Freddy in soft flannels and administering a quieting potion. She had been watching the movements of the people ever since they came to live in the lofts.

"My baby will get well, won't he?" was said, pleadingly, and the poor thing sobbed again as if her heart would break.

"Yes, indeed."

"And you will stay with me through the night?" forgetting that she was one of "those people."

"I'd stay with you a whole blessed week," replied true-hearted Mrs. Wilson, "if I could make you a wife worthy of your husband."

"Tell me what I shall do and I'll do it willingly and without complaining."

All through the long night, while Freddy lay between life and death, Mrs. Wilson worked over him bravely, and tell the girl-mother chapters in her own life experiences. There were passages over which Stella wept bitterly, and when morning dawned, giving back the child from danger, in place of the feble, unreasonable woman, there was one ready to meet life's work with firm purpose and strong heart.

She tidied up each apartment, and instead of going about in a dowdy wrapper put on a fresh dress, arranged her hair becomingly, and changed the pucker about her mouth for her own rosy lips.

"Now's a pretty little thing," Mrs. Wilson told her when she had fastened a knot of blue ribbon in her hair. "See after baby now. I'll look in every now and then during the day, and maybe I will come back to you. Your husband will be here to-morrow morning."

"Yes," Stella replied, with a bright look in her eyes. "He'll be here by 10 o'clock."

After all, it was a long time to wait, she thought, as the slow minutes ticked out—and she would miss him as many times as he wished.

"Yes, indeed!" she exclaimed, joyfully, bending over Freddy with a kiss. "papa's a hundred thousand times, won't we, baby?"

"I do wish Clarence would come," she kept saying next morning. "What detains him?" she continued, when the clock was on the stroke of 11. "What if—and her heart lay like lead in her bosom as she recalled the look she had saw on his face—what if he never came back?" she murmured, going into her own room. "Mrs. Wilson, I'm so lonesome in my big husband!"

In an instant the door, good soul was beside her, resting a hand tenderly on the aching head. True-hearted woman! She shrank from saying it had been a dreadful night on the morrow, and that a steamer had collided with the New York boat. Her husband traveled by boat," had been her conclusion.

Stella stood at her urn, the sound of her voice answering Freddy, and with a cry she fell. Poor, tired, inexperienced wife and mother, the ordeal was too dread! With the help of a neighbor Mrs. Wilson had her on her bed.

"Run for the doctor," she said to Miss Williams.

"But you don't know——"

"I do," she interrupted. "Mrs. Henshaw will have a run of nervous fever, and your husband will be dead or alive, I can't say."

When Stella opened her eyes again it was nearly night. She knew no one about her bed, but she called for Clarence and Freddy, and sister Belle. She was going to help her husband now. She could earn money by teaching music or drawing, she might have a few pupils in dancing," she said. "But forgive me for my sickness," and her arms were put up as if to clasp something, when she dropped back.

Late that evening Clarence came in sight of home. Could he? Was Mrs. Wilson's conjecture, he came by a different route. He had thought to telegraph, but "the heart won't worry

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Inwood.

Will Bolton is working with his team near East Jordan.

Dr. N. J. Perry of Charlevoix, spent Sunday at the residence of O. D. Hilton.

The farmers are all making good use of the light fall of snow by getting out logs.

A number of the young people at Smithson's camp indulged in a social hop Tuesday evening.

Henry Hilton leaves for Susan Lake to be gone an indefinite length of time, Wednesday.

J. Cook and J. Harrington are drawing logs to the beach for John Nicholls. The scarcity of snow prevents them from accomplishing very much at present.

Edwin Cook is feeling very gloomy over the necessity of doing his own chores, as his sons are away. O. D. Hilton is going over to assist him and to sympathize.

The youngest child of Alfred Van Duzen, which has been quite ill with erysipelas, is now quite recovered.

School commenced last week, in the McGeogh district, with Anna Metcalf as teacher.

Norman Wells, while hauling logs at Smithson's camp, last week, had his foot hurt quite seriously by the sleigh passing over it. He is improving.

Wilson.

Beautiful weather.

E. N. Tracy preached at the school house on Sunday last.

A few neighbors spent a pleasant evening at Supervisor Hudkins' recently. A good time was enjoyed as might be expected.

Mark Sedgman was kicked severely by one of his oxen on Friday last. He was laid up for two days, but we notice he is at work again.

A little son of W. H. Healey ran away last week. He was overtaken at a station south of Boyne Falls. Alleged cruel treatment at home is the cause, but reports are conflicting.

M. M. Burnham and Sam McCammon of East Jordan, were seen on our streets on Monday.

We hear rumors of a school exhibition in district No. 3 at the close of school. We wish the teacher and scholars success in their undertaking.

We hear that Mrs. Knuttel and daughter are getting homesick at East Saginaw, and will soon return home.

Banks.

Jan. 22.—It rained one whole day last week.

A snow storm on Sunday.

The outlook for sleighing here is bad.

John Jolliffe jr., sold his oxen last week to John Bell of Charlevoix.

Timothy Pearl has a cow with twin calves.

Mrs. Coulter is visiting her son and friends at Atwood.

Will Byers has gone to East Jordan to work with his team.

Burgess.

Thomas Sunderland had the misfortune to cut his foot one day last week.

Mr. Bartlett, of Charlevoix, was visiting with his friends in Hayes last week, Thursday and Friday.

Mrs. Wilks, of Charlevoix, is visiting relatives and friends in Hayes this week.

Spelling school at the Gibson school house Thursday evening of this week.

Barnard.

The sleighing is still poor.

Mr. Thorp moved to Ironton Monday.

Mr. Wilkinson of Atwood organized a singing school here last Saturday evening, and to be held on that evening of each week.

Mr. McLeod and wife were guests of Robbert Trimble Sunday.

Those who attended the party at Mr. Frances' last week report a good time.

Ellsworth.

Jan. 22.—C. S. Guile of Bellaire, visited our school last Thursday. He had one or two more schools to visit in this township.

Jeff Bears has given up fishing. He thinks he can make more money cutting logs.

E. H. Marshall of Antrim, was here on business last Saturday.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New and Home Cure.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured at from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B. For catarrhal discharges purulent in males (either) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully.

A Scrap of Paper Saves Her Life.

It was just an ordinary scrap of wrapping paper, but it saved her life. She was in the last stages of consumption, told by her physicians that she was incurable and could live only a short time; she weighed less than seventy pounds. On a piece of wrapping paper she read Dr. King's New discovery, and got a sample bottle; it helped her, she bought a large bottle, it helped her more, bought another, and grew better fast, continued its use and is now strong, healthy, rosy, plump, weighing 140 pounds. For fuller particulars send stamp to W. H. Cole, druggist, Fort Smith. Trial bottles of this wonderful discovery free at v. G. Hixes & Co's drug store.

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No other preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none give me relief as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in the course of my cold complaint."—Ernest A. Hopler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Consult Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Wadesboro, N. C.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in the chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying numerous remedies, without benefit, I, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I persisted in using it, and the first dose of this medicine, and after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Andrews, Springfield, Ill.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a mortgage by which the power of sale has become operative, dated the 1st day of June, A. D. 1887, executed by Oliver Cooper of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Albert W. Hutchins, and mortgaged by him, dated June 1st, 1887, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, in liber 14 of mortgages, page 538. There is now due of interest unpaid on said mortgage, principal and interest, $1,000, and said mortgage provides that if default shall be in the payment of the principal or interest, or any part thereof, that after the time of such default, the whole of said principal and interest shall become due, and be payable, and more than 30 days having elapsed since the said interest became due, and I still remaining unpaid, therefore the mortgagee hereby elects to consider the whole mortgage due and payable, and to foreclose the whole amount of said mortgage, both principal and interest, due and unpaid, and that there is no due under the provisions of said mortgage, or otherwise, to the mortgagee, or any person or persons claiming all due and unpaid, the sum of $1,000 principal, and $120 interest, and no action or suit having been taken to recover said sum or any part thereof. Therefore, said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises therein described, to wit: That certain piece or parcel of land situate and lying in the village of Charlevoix, county of Charlevoix, Michigan, viz: Lots one and two in block one, Dow's addition to the village of Charlevoix, according to the recorded plat thereof, at public vendue to the highest bidder, at the front door of the court house, in Boyne City, that being the place of holding the circuit court for the Charlevoix county, on the 9th day of February, A. D. 1889, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, at noon, with 7 per cent costs and an attorney fee allowed by law.

Dated Nov. 9th, 1888.

ALBERT W. HUTCHINS, A. D. CRUICKSHANK, Attorney for Mortgagee.

Better Than Ever.

It did seem as though the seedsmen could themselves last year in the line of elaborate catalogues, but here comes Vick's Floral Guide for 1889, from Rochester, N. Y., better than all previous issues. "Better" hardly expresses it—rather, we should say, far superior. It has been changed in every respect; new cuts, new type, enlarged in size (opening like an old-fashioned singing book); contains three elegant lithographs (8x10½ inches) of roses, geraniums and melon and tomato; besides a very fine plate of the late James Vick and the new one who now owns and Conducts this large business. These feature must make the Floral Guide valuable to their many thousands of customers in this country.

We also notice that Vick returns to the plan started by the founder of the business years ago, of offering cash prizes at the state fair. One would think they were a little out of of their hands to offer to the public such a work as the Guide free, for that is what it amounts to, when they say it will be sent on receipt of fifteen cents, and that a certificate good for fifteen cents worth of seed will be returned with the Guide.

Oriental Economy.

The old Mussulman justifies the practice of the "Arabian Nights," was administered by a cadi according to his innate notion of the fitness of things modified or confirmed by a more or less appropriate text from the Koran. In criticising native justice we must bear in mind that this system existed in Egypt within the memory of a middle aged man. In Bowring's report upon Egypt, published in 1840, he gives various instances of this, and exemplifies Oriental notions of justice by a conversation he relates between a Mohammedan and an English traveler: Governor—Is it true that you in England send your thieves and rogues to a distant country? Traveler—Yes. Governor—And what may be the cost of sending each? Traveler—Perhaps $100, or 10,000 piasters. Governor—And what is the cost of a sailor? Traveler—About £10, or 1,000 piasters. Governor—And what is the cost of a bastonado? Traveler—Almost nothing. Governor—And you call yourselves civilized and an enlightened people, you who can get a sailor for 1,000 piasters and a rope for almost nothing—a saber that would behead many rogues and a rope that would hang many thieves—and who pay 10,000 piasters to get rid of one! This is your civilization.—The Fortnightly Review.

How Doctors Conquer Death.

Doctor Walter S. Hammond says: "After a long experience I have come to the conclusion that two-thirds of all deaths from coughs, pneumonia and consumption, might be avoided if Dr. Acker's English Remedy for consumption were (only carefully used in time." This wonderfull remedy is sold under a positive guarantee by G. W. Beaman, druggist.

Masterfulness.

The masterful person will always seem to be at leisure. Its can stop, drop one thing, take up another, explore in this way or that, return again, all without loss of energy or disturbance of mind. This is because he is masterful, and, therefore, his affairs run smoothly, no one jostling another and interfering, but all parts fitting together.

Three main facts may be seen in masterful management, that there is no friction, that there is quiet, and that processes are hidden. Friction is a great difficulty in affairs. How much work so ever be done, if there be friction of parts, one rubbing against another, or one in another's way, there is loss of power, the whole is slovenly. The masterfulness of an able director is shown most delicately when many different agents or servants are to be managed, for mostly it is friction of minds and disagreement of persons that disorder affairs. Quiet is a searching test of masterly power. Noise is vulgar and a great waste of energy. As with a machine, so with the organization of business, if it be noisy beyond need it is botchery. The masterful manager permits no rattle from his people and as little as may be from his materials. Concealment of processes also is important. In the administration of a master results roll forth one after the other, but the means are hidden. Especially his own processes, the manner of his mental grip, the sources of his influence, the moments of his decisions, the beginnings of his plans, the first steps of enterprises, the multitude of his observations, his quickness of sight, his tact in little matters you will never explore.

These three signs of mastery, that there is no friction, or noise, or process observable, appear in any exercise of mind filled ably. Observe them in the three theaters wherein the most of life is transacted—the store, the school, the home. In the store, the master the business the more it should be a "wide quiet," where, as in nature, everything goes on a grand scale, but nothing seems moving. But if there be friction of men, times, appointments, departments, interfering and noise, of commands loudly issued and much calling back and forth, with bustle and hurry, and if the machinery be visible, and subordinate parts thrust themselves in view, and the establishment appears a mass of processes, though there be profit, there is waste and no true master comes among. In the school a real master teaches quietly; no details interfere; there is no unquiet straining; conduct, curriculum, and instruction agree in one still discipline.

The home is the most important sphere for masterly management, because it so nearly concerns our peace, and because there is no way to make up for ill success in it. An ill-managed store may still yield a profit; an unmastered school may yield information; and, at least, neither has to do with the heart. But an illmanaged home is pain, often misery. The tests are the same as before. If there be friction between the departments, the servants, the hospitalities, the many different requirements, if the house be noisy with orders shouted abroad, scolings, complainings, disputes, and if the little difficulties of the machinery, the processes, plannings, troublesome questions, occasions for tact be brought to view, and not rather kept out of sight as they should be, there is no mastery. Housekeeping should have a large meaning. A woman may be a notable cook, very shanly, and yet no housekeeper, however she may think herself one. To be masterful in that business is to bring the details of the home into proper subordinations and into their true relations to one main purpose, and to keep all moving without friction, noise, anxiety. In fine, a big storekeeper may be not a merchant and a big schoolkeeper may be not a teacher, and a notable housewoman may be not a housekeeper or a homemaker.—Free Press.

FROM NEW MEXICO.

A. D. Cruickshank Gives His Opinion of That Country.

San Marcial, N. M., Jan. 18.

I have just returned from a long ramble up to what they call here the Mesas, a high table land surrounding the extinct volcano. It is a mountain of itself in height and extent, formed of lava that has run down from the summit of this mountain. The rocks are all broken and look like the stuff thrown out at the furnace, all full of holes and can easily be determined to have once been molten matter. Some places they have run all together and then cooled. They have been formed into all kinds of shapes and curiosities. When you reach this table land there is a splendid view, the whole country unfolds under your feet and you see mountain, valley, table-land, snow covered mountains, and foot hills, and the valley of the Rio Grande at your feet far below. We did not get to the crater, but will go there to-morrow, perhaps, where we can go on horseback by a circuitous route from the east side. Yesterday, we rode on horseback to Fort Craig, and had a splendid ride over the plain through great herds of cattle. In the way they ride here is a caution. The horse knows it all; all you have to do is to sit on the saddle and the horse brings you out all right. I think I am getting to be quite a rider. I shall not remain here much longer. I like this country, and I like the climate. For three weeks we have been here we have not had a cloudy day. We had one nice warm shower, but the sun came out nice and warm after it. The nights are frosty. Frank seems almost well, and is as lively as a jack rabbit. He coughs a little nights but he can climb the foot hills as well as I can. I am going back to Albuquerque as soon as I return from El Paso. I want to remain there some time with a view to business. I like that place and it is bound to be the city of New Mexico. I tell you that there is business there. While there I saw men who last year cleared $3,000 off five acres of land in fruit and vegetables, and saw and examined a field containing about eight acres that two Americans rented for $35 per acre for three years and cleared in that time $10,000. They have rented it for five years longer. It is the finest land I ever saw,—no stone or even gravel,—sort of a clay or mould. I think I shall have some before I come home. There is a table-land just out of the town about 150 feet above the river, reaching back 12 miles to the mountains and extending for miles up and down the valley, the most beautiful piece of country I ever saw. It needs only water to make a perfect garden. The government has surveyed a ditch through this for the purpose of supplying this need, and when it is done it will be a beautiful place to build. Of course, I think A quequerque like other towns also, the river needs some attention as regards their sewerage, but they are new towns as yet, and are not in all as bad Chicago, or even Detroit, was a few years ago, and that defect will be remedied as the place advances. I may not locate there, but I shall look it over well and know what I am doing. Everybody seems to be busy there and satisfied with their business, and land suits me.

Why Women Fade.

Women lose their beauty because colds undermine their life. Dr. Acker's English Remedy for Consumption is an absolute cure for colds. Sold by Geo. W. Beaman.

Opportunity.

There is an old proverb that says that Fate knocks but once at every man's door. Perhaps it is true that the supreme chance in a life time comes but once, but he is a sorry individual and an exception who cannot look back and see where his kind Fate knocked more then once at his door. Fate is not lock. Nine times out of ten when opportunity comes she finds the one she calls for unready, he has not made the most of his time, and opportunity only makes conspicuous the lack of preparation, of ability to grasp the chance, and show that it is deserved and the chosen one capable of going on. The tenth one called is ready. "Through long days of labor and nights devoid of ease," he has struggled upward in his sphere. If he is a clerk, he has been diligent and appreciative, he has studied prices, become familiar with the best methods, he has saved—a trifle perhaps, but still has saved. If he is a lawyer he has studied, he has observed, he has stored his mind with every fragment of knowledge that he could get hold of. If he is a mechanic he has been a good one, a thorough master of his trade. He has fought his passions, appetites and bad habits, and is ready to catch on. Fate is not lock to him. His lock lies in his pluck and his perseverence in little things—he has made his Fate himself. Fate only makes a person ridiculous who is not equal to it, who has not made the sacrifices necessary to success when his opportunity comes, as it comes to all. Perhaps the opportunity that might be his is not to become a millionaire, a merchant prince, a world-renowned lawyer, an Edison or a Horace Greeley. Yet the man who works and studies and saves, pluckily, hopefully, will get the chance to be something better then he is, to make his mark on life's pages and to leave behind him a record that will help others.

We have no sympathy with those pessimists who are always growling about their Fate, hard luck and want of success. It is their own fault. They have not been willing to prepare for a chance. Every young man—yes and young women, too, should take this lesson to heart, and always look to the chance that is sure to come, but ever be preparing for it. Success lies in the preparation and not the chance.—Selected.

Fashion Notes.

The following are culled from Gody's Lady's Book for February:

Plain cloths and vicognes are popular, totally untrimmed or braided.

Large buttons for fastening redingotes and corsages are a great feature in the winter's fashions. Many of them are very elegant.

Plaids are still very fashionable, whether arranged on the straight or crossways. Frequently they are combined plain material with good effect.

Cloth caps with fur brims are very pretty for children to accompany costumes of the same cloth trimmed with the same fur. Astrakhan and beaver are the favorite furs for children.

The hat most in favor at present is the flat, wide brimmed hat of felt, with a large ostrich feather round the brim. Others have the long feather to be worn around the neck as a boa.

The long ostrich feather, after a long banishment in favor of bows, wings and stuffed birds, has regained lost ground, and is more popular than it ever has been.

White, green and rose are the colors most fashionable this season for evening toilettes, and in many dresses all these colors appear together. Gros grain ribbon with very thick cords on its edges, or else watered ribbon is used for the sash.

Antique brocades of colors on white or light ground, usually in stripes of flowers are chosen for the Directoire toilettes that are made with a long coat back and skirt of plain Sicilienne or of velvet that is only demi-trained in length.

Polluted Ice.

A vice must read up on the investigations of Kedric, Pengri and Sudden, showing that ice taken from polluted streams is not purified by freezing. Kedzie tells us that if from streams containing rotting vegetable matter or sewdust it will be unwholesome. In 1878, at Clyde, an epidemic broke out in a hotel, and was traced 1 last to ice from an adjacent pond. The ice of this pond in summer was foul smelling with putrescent matter. The matter, as well as bacteria, is eliminated by any ordinary degree of cold. Too many of our readers are the recipients of sewage, as the ice age of civilization, we must have it pure.—St. Louis Democrat.

In Honor of Burns.

Burns masquerade to celebrate the birthday of the poet is an annual item in Leslie, Fifeshire. At the celebration twenty-four plowmechanics and farmers, accoutered dressed to represent the principal characters in Burns' works, carried a sweet handed by a voluntee lassie, accompanied by a procession of the poet's friends. Burns himself appeared in a coat, vest, buttons and knee breeches of the period, and the lassie, Jean Armour, Burns' wife, Highland Mary, Tam O'Shanter, Souter Johnny, and Tam and Kate Kennedy, Dominie Sampson, Dandie Dinmont, Meg Merrilies, Dominie Deposit, Cutty Sark, Tam Glen, Bonnie Lesley, Bonnie Jean, Bonnie Doon, Bonnie Brae, Bonnie Dundee, Bonnie Prince Charlie, Bonnie Lady Anne, Bonnie Bell, Bonnie Mary, Bonnie Kate, Bonnie Jamie, Bonnie Jock, Bonnie Peg, Bonnie Nell, Bonnie Nancy, Bonnie Annie, Bonnie Bess

THE NATION'S CAPITAL.

What the Solons Are Doing—No Interfering Liquors at the Inaugural.

MR. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported to the Senate, on the 21st inst., the Senate bill to authorize the Omaha, Fort Dodge and Northern Railway Company to build its road across the military reservation in Kansas, not exceeding one hundred feet in width, and on motion of Mr. Plumb the bill was passed. The Senate occupied the balance of the day on the Inter-State Commerce bill. Mr. Payne (R.), for introducing dynamitical bills and demanding their reading in full, succeeded in the double object of forcing the friends of the Oklahoma bill to yield to certain amendments they had long resisted, passing the bill, and in extracting from the friends of the Union Pacific funding bill a promise that they would not call up that measure. Mr. Hoar (R., Mass.) introduced a bill prohibiting the sale of liquors at the inaugural ball. It was referred to the Committee on District of Columbia. Two years and nays were ordered, and resulted—Yeas 16, nays 36—so the motion was agreed to, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The call of States was concluded, and then Mr. Warner (Mo.) withdrew his pending motion to recommit the bill for the relief of the Oklahoma bill, and in lieu thereof moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution providing for a final vote on the bill on Thursday next, with permission to Mr. Payne to offer his amendment, and on the question relative to town sites. Agreed to—Yeas 155, nays 76. J. D. Taylor (Ohio) introduced for reference a preamble and joint resolution directing the Government officials in charge of Sioux City and Pierre to cease from all interference with the Missouri River, or, or other interesting legislation to hold over the bill to say prayers on the occasion of the ball.

DENVER'S SMALL-POX PLAGUE.

Facts Regarding It Held Back by Officials and the Truth Not Known.

An Omaha telegram says: "A private letter to a resident of this city from a friend in Denver, dated Jan. 20, confirms the report that the latter city is badly infected with small-pox, and that every available opportunity is being taken to prevent the facts reaching the public. The writer says that seventy houses are quarantined by the authorities, and that there are prospects of a serious epidemic resulting from the ravages of the disease. He also says that the newspapers of that place and the leading merchants are doing all within their power to keep the matter quiet. He says that there is great danger of the disease being conveyed to other points by travelers who are not aware of its extent in Denver. In the letter certain instances are cited where several inmates of a house are confined to their beds with small-pox. He estimates the total number affected at 140 persons. He also says that there are several houses within which small-pox is known to exist where no signal of warning is displayed.

IS IT PRELLER'S GHOST?

Room 144, Southern Hotel, St. Louis, Shunned by the Public.

A ghost story of grisly proportions is radiating from the Southern Hotel at St. Louis, Mo. In Room 144, in April, 1885, Maxwell chloroformed C. A. Preller to death. Then, after robbing the body, he packed it in a trunk, where it lay for two weeks. Since then the guests who have occupied the room have had strange experiences. The hotel people at first laughed at their fears, but the laugh soon turned to a sickly smile when some of the hotel employees tried to sleep all night in the apartment. Groans and frightful noises, alternating with the opening and shutting of wardrobe doors, created a panic among the employees and guests. Finally the horror of room 144 spread to such an extent among the travelling public that the room could not be assigned. Then the hotel man changed the number and called it No. 135. This had no effect on the circus. One of the best known men in St. Louis occupied the room for three nights recently and was then forced out by the strange noises, and opening of bureau drawers, and falling brick in the fireplace.

DOING PENANCE FOR SINS.

Strange Story of an Old Man Who Must Travel 2,000 Miles on Foot.

An old man halted in Louisville, Ky., recently, to get a shave. While the stranger was undergoing the operation he told a very remarkable story about himself. He said that five months ago he started out from a distant point in Eastern Canada to walk to the Abbey of Gethsemane, near Bardstown. So far he had safely accomplished his journey, which, he said, was a distance of 2,000 miles. In his long tramp he had worn out nine pair of shoes. "I am very weary," he said "and wish I were at my journey's end, where I I will find sweet rest for the remainder of my already numbered days." These words, spoken in a very earnest and pious tone, aroused the curiosity of the barber naturally. "Why did you not ride?" "I belong to a certain holy order of the Catholics, and this is the penance imposed upon me for my sins."

Political Dodge.

The Senate deadlock has been broken at Charleston, W. Va., by the election of R. S. Carr, Union Labor Senator from Charleston, as President of the Senate, on the 126th ballot. He received sixteen votes, nine of them being cast by the Democrats, who claim that it was their victory.

The New Jersey Democratic legislative caucus renominated Senator McPherson for United States Senator. The Republican caucus nominated Hon. William J. Sewell, of Camden.

THE AFRICAN EXPLORER.

Henry M. Stanley Writes to Tippoo Tib Requesting a Conference.

The following letter has been received at Brussels:

BOMA OF BOMAIVA, MUSSITA, Aug. 17.
To Sheikh Hamed Ben Mahomed, from his good friend Henry M. Stanley:

Many salutations to you. I hope that you are in good health. I am well, thanks be to God. I am anxious to see you, but hope I shall see you have to face before many days have passed. I have sent this morning with 130 Zanzawara, three Wangwana, and Ali Bin Omar, to Kabinda Falaka. It is now twelve days since I left Emin Pasha on the Nyanza. I only lost three men on the way from Wadelai to Kavalli and the other deserted. I found the white man Tippu Tib, Selim, Ali, Ali Bin Omar, and Ali Bin Nasib, and Ali Bin Hamed, all well. I miss Pasha has lost many thousands of cattle and sheep, and goats and cows and fowls and food of all kind. I found him a very good and kind man. He gave me all our wanzas and lent me some members of things. His liberality could not be better. He is very good to me. He has been very kind to me, endeavoring to cause me to show them the way. Many of them were ready to follow me out of the country, but I would not stay to wait a few months that I might return with more men and more goods, and more baggage. They were ready to follow me, but would give me strength to finish my work. May they prosper in their work. And now, my friends, what are you going to do? We have gone the road to Yambuya, and we have found that the road is good, where there is plenty of food and where there is none. Some of the road we did not know and we did not know. I am waiting to hear your words. If you come to Yambuya I will be very glad to see you. I shall stay some ten days and will then proceed slowly down the Nile to meet Emin Pasha. I have come down from above this place. There are plenty of houses and plenty of food in the land, and it astonishing from the Stanley of the Union Pacific funding bill a promise that they would not call up that measure. Mr. Hoar (R., Mass.) introduced a bill prohibiting the sale of liquors at the inaugural ball. It was referred to the Committee on District of Columbia. Two years and nays were ordered, and resulted—Yeas 16, nays 36—so the motion was agreed to, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in state convention in Hartman's hall, at Grand Rapids

ON THURSDAY, FEB. 26TH, 1890,

At 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating one candidate for Justice of the Supreme court and two candidates for Regents of the State University, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 100 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 200 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: One vice president of the convention and one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business and resolutions.

T. M. WESTON, Chairman.

FRANK H. THOMAS, Secretary.

Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates.

Democratic County Convention.

A democratic county convention will be held at G. W. Crouter's office, Charlevoix, on

FRIDAY, FEB. 22, 1890,

At 2.00 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating four delegates to the state convention to be held at Grand Rapids, on Feb. 26th, and for the transaction of such other business as may be brought before the convention.

Each township is entitled to delegates to said convention as follows: Bay 2, Bear Lake 1, Boyne Valley 2, Chandler 1, Charlevoix 6, Evangeline 3, Eveline 5, Hayes 3, Hudson 1, Marion 2, Melrose 1, Norwood 2, Resort 1, South Arm 6, Springvale 1, Wilson 2.

G. W. CROUTER, Sec'y. Chairman.

MICHIGAN is still holding her own in the line of brutal murders. Three the past week.

THE men who come out of the woods now are paid off at $10 per month. The campaign of education goeth on. It will be complete in 1892.—Cheboygan Democrat.

SOMEONE has written a pamphlet entitled "How to Live on $20,000 a Year." We must get that book and learn how it is done. Editors might use a little more economical without being niggardly.

AS THE clouds about Samoan affairs begin to lift it will be found probable that there is little to fight about and that much of the noise made at Washington is simply a shameful attempt of the republican partisans to make a little more political capital, if possible, out of an attack upon the administration.—Detroit Journal.

THE republican tariff measure in the senate is slowly progressing to its finish. The interests of the rich are being carefully guarded. Allison's motion to reduce the duty on pearls carried on a party vote over a motion by Vance to increase the duty. The people who buy pearls cannot afford to pay a tax on them. Let the tax be paid by people who buy iron kettles tin pails and woolen shirts.—Grand Rapids Leader.

DURING a recent speech by Prince Bismarck, before the reichstag, while discussing foreign relations, he referred to the Samoan troubles in the following language: "In Samoa we are in fullest accord with England and advance hand in hand with her. [Cheers.] We are absolutely resolved to be one with the English government and to uphold the unity we have shared with English in Africa. [Cheers] The only unpleasantness that has arisen has been with subordinate officials for whom the government neither cares nor will be responsible."

THE official report of the imports of wheat and flour into Great Britain for the 11 months ending Nov. 30th show a great falling off in the receipts from the United States. For the corresponding period in 1887 the imports of wheat from this country amounted to 28,700,000 bushels. During the past year they aggregated only 14,720,000—a decrease of over one-half. The Russian imports of wheat into Great Britain in the same periods were 3,877,000 bushels in 1887 and 13,000,000 bushels in 1888. These comparisons show two things—the blighting effect upon our export trade of the gambler's corner in September, and the fact that England is looking to other and more friendly markets for her bread supplies.—Lansing Journal.

It was a and sight the other day when a few democratic senators voted with the republicans to keep up the tax on coal. An analysis of the vote shows that nearly every democrat with corporate leanings, or connections, or sympathies, voted with the majority. However, eleven democrats had the courage to stand up and be counted for the people. If coal should not go upon the free list there is no logic for exempting anything from taxation. It is a necessary of life, an essential to manufactures, to transportation and to commerce. To tax the fuel of the people in the interest of a few mine-owners and railway companies when the government has $100,000,000 of surplus revenue is an unexampled abuse of the taxing power.—Lansing Journal.

JACKSON and Lansing are greatly excited over two atrocious murders, in each of which a young man has been detained on suspicion of being accessory to the murder of his mother. At Jackson Mrs. Lettimer was found dead in her room, with two bullet holes in her body, the circumstances indicating that her son did the wicked deed himself. Near Lansing Mrs. Stachel was shot by someone outside the house, and her body nearly filled with fine shot. Her husband, and grand daughter also received a charge of shot in their bodies, but not fatal. When told of the old lady's death the son appeared very unconcerned, and was arrested on suspicion. The officers believe they have a good clue to the one that did the shooting, circumstances indicating that it was done by a young man named August Tanto, and with the knowledge of the son. It would not be surprising if the legislature now in session should take advantage of the occurrence to pass a law requiring capital punishment for some of these aggravated cases.

A LANSING dispatch on the 25th says: Representative Wachtel's bill to protect fish prohibits the catching of speckled trout or land locked salmon from September 1 to May 1 following; grayling or California trout from November 1 to June 1 following; maskalonge, black, strawberry, green or white bass from March 1 to June 15 following; whitefish from November 20 to March 1 following. The bill forbids the purchase or sale of fish out of season. The spearing of fish, except mullet and suckers, is prohibited in the months of March, April May and June of each year in any waters except those of the great lakes. The section which makes it unlawful to use any species of nets except in the waters of the great lakes, is amended so as to permit the use of dip nets in catching mullet and suckers. In prosecutions for infraction of this section it is made sufficient for the people to show that nets were used to catch fish, and the burden of proof is upon the defendant to make it plain that some but suckers and mullet were caught in the net. It is unlawful to catch speckled or brook trout, grayling or any species of bass, except with a hook and line. This bill is one of four prepared with the advice of the state game warden, somewhat modifying the laws about fishing. No changes are made in the regulations regarding nets, the size of meshes or other features of the existing laws.

Free Voting.

The "free and independent" voter is a better citizen than the voter who is dazzled or intimidated by banners, badges and words without meaning. There is no security in the partisan abuse showered upon such a voter. The abuse is meant to produce the effect of trepidation upon the man who sees clearly and votes straight to the mark every time. But year by year the trepidation is less apparent and the partisan scolding more of a sham. The greatest scolds are notoriously partisans who have themselves scrutched and bolted whenever it was their interest or pleasure to do so. The time appears to be approaching when he will be regarded as a poor creature indeed who is governed in his voting for municipal, state or national candidates by the good or the ill opinion of some other person rather than by his own conscientious convictions. If the "whipper in" should permanently succeed, and voting at all elections should be a matter of precedent, habit or domination of mere party names, it would be time to despair of the republican experiment in this new world. The caucus and the boss would have supplanted free, representative government.—Century.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. Chinese Flogging.

This punishment is as peculiar as most Chinese punishments are. The man is seized by four or five stalwart attendants, thrown on his face, his loose pajamas rolled up so as to expose the fleshy part of the back of his thighs. He is firmly held outstretched in this position by men at head and feet. Two operators then squat down opposite one another on each side of the victim. One takes a strip of seasoned bamboo about three feet long and one inch wide, and begins lightly spanking the backs of the thighs. He gives twenty of these apparently harmless spanks, and then hands the bamboo to his vis-a-vis, who gives his twenty, and then hands it back; and so on, turn about, until the two hundred blows are administered.

At first the punishment looks ridiculously light; but by the time the first fifty blows are reached the skin of the parts beaten begins to assume the appearance of thick wash leather; and before the hundredth blow the skin begins to fly off in loose white flakes; by the time two hundred blows have been struck, the whole of the back of both thighs looks like a mass of swollen raw liver, though not a drop of blood flows from the parts. It is said that a man would expire under the excruciating torture of two hundred and fifty of these blows. I have never seen anything like the exquisite agony depicted in the man's livid, quivering features, when he was carried into the prison to recover.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

Where the Timber Goes.

Iron cross ties have been tried on the Pennsylvania railroad and found less desirable than those of good, honest white oak. This will be unpleasant news for tree lovers. The most relentless consumers of the forest trees are the men that must have trees for cross ties, and nice, straight young trees for telegraph poles. Two thousand ties for every mile of steel rails half mean a fearful gap in some fair forest, and a mile of telegraph poles means a goodly grove cut down. Not until railroads can find a substitute for oak ties, and can lay their attendant wires underground, will the forests of this country stand any chance against the woodman's ax.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

Congregational College Convention.

Rev. A. O. Downs returned last Thursday noon from Cadillac, where he had been in attendance at the convention to establish a college in the interests of christian higher education at some favorable point in northern Michigan. The work of the convention is embodied in the following report of the committee on resolutions which were thoroughly discussed and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That, in the judgment of this convention the time has come for the Congregational churches of Northern Michigan to unite in the establishment and support of a college somewhere north of the south line of Bay, Midland, Isabella, Mecosta, Newago, and Oceana counties.

That a committee of fifteen be now chosen by ballot, whose duty it shall be to receive sealed proposals from any towns or cities that may offer them, and to determine the question of location as shall seem best to them, considering all the facts which ought to be regarded in fixing the location of a Christian school.

That in case two-thirds of said committee do not agree in respect to such location, they shall call a convention of ministers and churches to consider and determine the question.

That this convention shall be called to meet, if practicable, at some place not competing for the location of the college. In such convention every Congregational pastor north of the line above named shall be entitled to membership, and every church to one delegate for each 50 members or largest fraction thereof. Every church, however, shall be entitled to one delegate. In the vote, the delegates of each church not represented by its full quota of delegates may cast the full vote to which the church is entitled, if they shall have been authorized to do so by vote of the church.

The proposals received by the committee or by such convention shall set forth the following things:

First, the amount of land for use of the college, and its location.

Second, the amount of subscription available for building purposes—payable within two years from the time the location shall be determined.

Third, the amount of subscription available for endowment—such subscription to be due and payable within five years from the opening of the college to students, and the interest thereupon due and payable semi annually at six per cent from the date of such opening.

These proposals shall be opened on the 5th of March and the committee shall then visit the localities in their discretion and the decision in regard to location shall be reached as soon thereafter as practical.

That it shall be the duty of the aforesaid committee of fifteen to have prepared proper articles of incorporation for such college, which shall be submitted to the convention proposed in the third resolution. If such convention shall be called, otherwise they shall be fully empowered to incorporate the college in such manner as shall seem to them best.

The following committee referred to in the resolutions, was named:

D. P. Breed, Reed City,
A. Beck, Traverse City,
O. S. Walker, Benzonia,
E. S. Tappan, St. Ignace,
R. R. Hudson, Manistee,
A. G. Fuller, Cadillac,
E. S. Fairfield, Manistee,
J. Ingersoll,
A. O. Powell, Charlevoix,
C. H. Cate, Cheboygan,
J. R. Reed, Gaylord,
J. S. Woodruff, Ludington,
J. M. Barnes, Reuben,
Leroy Warren, Lansing,
T. G. Baxter, Kalkaska.

A meeting of the committee of fifteen was held, at which Mr. Breed was chosen chairman and Mr. Miller secretary. It was decided to meet at Mancelona March 5, to receive bids and hear arguments of committees favoring locations for the college.

A Submerged City.

Lough Neagh, Antrim, enjoys a celebrity for a marvel that both historian and poet have commemorated—that of flowing over a submerged city. Caxton thus records the fact, if such it be, though to the judgment of sober reason it will seem but a legend, which we give, merely modernizing the orthography: "There is a lake in Ulster and much fish therein. The river Bann runneth out of the lake into the North ocean, and men say that this lake began in this manner: There were men in this country that were of evil living. And there was a well in the land of great vyrtuey of old time and always covered; and if it were left uncovered the whole would rise and drown all the land. And so it happened that a woman went to the well for to fetch water and bind her fast to her child that wept in the cradle, and left the well uncovered; then the well springed so fastly it drowned the woman and her child and made all the country a lake and fish pond. For to prove this it is a great argument that when the weather is clear fishers of the water see in the ground under the water round towers and high shapen steeples and churches of the land." This tradition is mentioned by Giraldus Cambrensis. Who knows not with what exquisite pathos and poetic skill Moore has used this legend in one of his sweetest songs, "On Lough Neagh Banks as the Fisherman Strays."—Our Own Country.

In Consumption Incurable.

Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle, and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jessie Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by the doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 3

SOME DAYS.

Some days are black, and clouds hang low
Frowning heavily a sullen gray,
And chilling blasts around us blow,
Bearing the leaves of hope away.
The pulse lies in the brown lea,
The voice are sluggish streams,
The breast at the cay house cries,
And starts in sight—more or sunn;
Between friendship, physic, food,
Fresh air, high spirits, health;
Between the sunshine and the cloud
This fearful balance doth
Oh, what shall raise him from the dead
And strip the door of care
And banish ghosts of mortal dread,
Leaving the soul in peace?
Never open the windows toward the east,
The hungry soul sighs;
And send it forth into the feast,
Where sparkles Bacchi-bun's star?
Then come, Love and Fury, stand
To inspire the soul with fire,
To feed with sunshine life's fair land,
And fringe with gold life's shore.
Oh, Love, sweet miracle divine!
Light up the lamps of clay!
In every nook and corner twine
Your rays of hope and joy.
Then shall the sunbeams kiss the hills,
The valleys green and fair;
And music run like rippling rills
Through all the fragrant air.
The sweetest music of all is the lark or bird,
We hear it its voice the call,
The harmony triumphant heard
In its heart's great mount hail.
O, Duty, handmaid of the Lord,
Make thy summons!
Life's lowly toward once allotted
Be thy sweet voice.
With peace and comfort in its breast,
And words of glad surprise,
To bless the poor with wealth unguessed,
To make the foolish wise.
Then shall the sunbeams kiss the mourners
And flowers and fruits shall grow;
With plenty, peace, and happiness
The land shall overflow.
The darkened chambers of the soul
Shall grow with holy light,
And truth the stone of error roll
Before the dawn of light.

TRAVELING DAYS OVER.

Morgan had been on the road for one house about twenty years. This is a long period of travel. It has been time that almost men work up or work down. No man can continue on a dead level as a salesman during that time, even if his habits are good. If he has ability he is sure, with rare exception, to work himself up the road. If he is mediocre no one has any afraid to carry him for twenty years. Morgan was the rare exception to mentioned. He was an excellent salesman, and his ability and success but served to weld him the closer to his work. The house had made him a partner long since, but the business he strolled was so large and so profitable that they all knew, and he best, that to withdraw him and experiment with a new man would be but playing with fire over a magazine of powder. So he went on his way year after year, making no plans for the future that would change his work or his life.

But his family consisting of his wife and their one daughter, Mary, a romping girl of twelve, was not of his disposition. The two could not see husband and father start off without a protest. The wife had grown to be more a burden of anxiety about him; of dangers on railroads, of his possible robbery and murder; of the discomforts of hotels, and the fear of his falling sick among strangers. She was naturally a timid woman, and the responsibility of the house weighed upon her. The whole burden of Mary's growth in body and mind, her training, her companions, and her pleasures were matters the mother would gladly have shared with the father, but she was generally compelled to decide them alone.

The father's continued absence was a constant pain and grievance to Mary. There never a week but that she felt deprived of some special outing because he was not at home to go with her. Saturday night and Sunday, if he was where he could run home, was many and many hours of happiness to them all, but to Mary they were full of perfect bliss.

Morgan was known to all the boys as a man who never vexed. If a train was late he sat down and waited; if a restaurant failed he always signed a compromise; if he didn't get the best room in the hotel he took what he could get; and he is no ever in pitching for his competitors to get out ahead of him. He always left his wife in the assurance that everything would go on all right until he returned, and when he went away he thought of the two he loved as being happy and well.

But as he started on the trip he could not shake off a slight feeling of anxiety that had possessed him all the night, and had grown since he awoke. Their talk the previous day had been about the entrance of diphtheria into the neighborhood, and of the fatal case but two blocks away from their door. Mary had complained of a slightly sore throat, but on Monday morning declared it was entirely well again, kissing him good-by with more spirit than usual, as if trying to convince him of the truth of her words, and a sad him away smiling and happy.

When he was seated in the cars the shadows cause over his spirits again and began to torture him with doubts and possibilities. It might be, he thought, that her spirightliness of the morning was due to fever, rather than health. He wished he had looked into her throat, and he regretted that he had not cautioned his wife about her. He nursed these fears until he felt himself becoming wild with apprehension, and then he resolutely put the thoughts aside, declared he was foolish and would have no more of it, and devoted himself to a companion and to his papers.

Men cannot always govern their minds. These are kingdoms that frequently rebel against all government. Several times during the day Morgan caught himself going back to his morning thoughts and he resolutely changed the current. But at night, as he would be could not conquer them. Even his dreams took up the foolishness of the day, exaggerated and intensified them, and tortured him.

Next morning found him out of sorts, nervous and misspoke. He had a long drive to take in the country, but he shrank from it as if he saw danger in the track.

All his intentions seemed to be crying to him to go home, but what he thought was his common sense kept insisting that he should go on with his business, and not cross the bridge of trouble until he came to it.

The day was one of the loveliest October days he had ever seen. His drive was through twenty miles of the best corn land in Illinois. The black road was as dry as a board, and as level as only a prairie can be. The first effect of the beautiful day and pure air was invigorating. He enjoyed the drive through the street into the country road. Then the broad fields, the pleasant farm houses, the herds of horses and cattle, the long Osage hedges, the perpetual but always surprised rabbit at the road side, all these attracted and entertained him, and his ride was successful in driving away his blues. His customer seemed especially glad to see him; took him to his house to dinner; talked with him of important personal matters, and gave him a large order for goods. He turned back to the railroad feeling as happy as he had ever done; took out his order-book and figured up the amount of the bill and the profit, as was his custom, and then began to sing.

Suddenly there came across him a wave of anxious worry, and all his thoughts flew back to the daughter and home, and the funeral he saw last Sunday. He could not drive these away. They clung to him; they whispered to him; they unfolded themselves like a panorama, and on the canvas he saw Mary sick, then worse, and then dead. He saw the longest twenty-mile ride he had ever taken, and his old friend, the landlord, crowded from his face that Morgan had met with bad luck in sales that day.

He had a night run to Decatur and determined that he would immediately go home, and quiet these nervous apprehensions that were so cruel, though probably so absurd. He would count but little, he reasoned, and though foolish, it was wiser than to continue the torture longer, so before going to bed he gave the operator a half rate message, for morning delivery, as follows:

To Manning, Morgan & Co., Chicago, Ill.:

Is my wife or daughter sick? Answer, care Gilney.

He felt easier having done this, and passed a better night than the previous one, although there was in all his sleeping and waking thoughts an under current of solicitude over impending danger to Mary.

Over Utah still hung the storm, and, for twenty approximate at heart, he tore open the telegram that lay under his about 9 o'clock:

To Morgan, care Gilney & Co., Decatur:

Come home first train. MANNING.

"Good God, what was this? Were forebodings indeed true? If so he was all New York of misery. Is this time that his constant comfort had been that his wife was one of the slightest fearers of rest upon, and the more they crowded upon him the more he felt that they were firmer than dreams. But here staring him in the face were those four ominous words:

"Come home first train."

Why had not he given him the whole story? He started for the telegraph office to inquire further, but he hesitated. Suppose Mary was dead! Did he want to learn it here, so far from his wife? No he would wait. Such a story would until he reached home. There were some hours before a train went his way; the sleeping of twenty years seemed lost and he attended to his business.

He did not remember one that can be described in its depths only by those who have been similarly circumstanced. The train seemed to creep. The minutes were like hours.

Yesterday, and every mile came home seemed to be proportionately longer than the day before. It seemed to him that he never had been so long from his home at dark. The store was closed. He had expected to find Manning there, but he only remembered that he had not telegraphed back to the time of his arrival. As he neared his home the first glance showed him there was a change. The lower part of the house was in darkness. There was a light shone in the front chamber, which was but rarely occupied. "Mary must be there," he said to himself, and all his soul cried within him that she was alive and well. Mary must have suffered, to have gone through all this alone! Had a brain he was to find Mary lonely, when she ought to have known, and did know, that something beautiful was going on in the house and door; it was fastened; he would go to the front door and ring the bell, and no one heard his step, and, opening the door, called him back.

"Is it Mr. Morgan?" The voice was that of a neighbor.

"Yes." He paused in, expecting to see or hear his wife. The friend closed the door and turned to him.

"Have you heard——" she began.

"I have heard everything," he interrupted. "Mary is dead."

"Oh, pap!"

Give him sir! What mystery was this? "Mary is well. Are you well? Where? I thought—I feared——Oh, darling, is it you?"

Yes, it was Mary. Oh, thank God! Thank God!

"Tell me again, dear, are you well?"

"Oh, yes, papa, but poor mamma!"

"Mamma. What about her? Is she sick? What is it? Tell me quick!" And again the poor mother was the heaven of happiness to the bottomless pit of doubt.

"Mamma sick? Why, no, papa."

"Oh, papa, the doctor says she is going to——"

"Hush," said the neighbor. "Step inside, sir; the doctor is with her now; he will soon be down. Prepare yourself, Mr. Morgan; your wife is very low. The servant's carelessness caused an explosion in the kitchen, setting herself on fire. Your wife ran to her assistance and saved her life, but, I fear, at the expense of her own."

"I must see her."

"No, sir, not now; be guided by me for a moment. The doctor will soon be down. He took Mary in his arms and she wept together. Oh, if his wife, his darling wife, were to be taken from him! It was the cruelest blow God ever struck him. And the saving mother's life, too! He cursed and raved, but it was in his own heart; and Mary, crying on his breast, only knew what comfort it was to have papa come more with you.

"The physician came down with manner so grave that it led to his own story. "There is scarcely a chance," he said; "you can go here; she will not know you."

"When did this happen?"

"Monday evening.

"Have you consulted others? Can nothing more be done?"

"Nothing except to help her to die easy."

But she did not die. She knew her husband. He begged her to live, as only a man can plead who has seen and loved in a woman's life, and whether love, or whether medicine, or whether care saved her, I do not know. But she lived. But Morgan informed Monday that his travelling days were over; that a new man must be engaged for that route. They found him, after diligent search, and much to the surprise of everyone connected with the House, he sold more goods for the firm than Morgan had ever done. The one who rejoices most at this is Morgan, who says he has made his last trip.—From "A Man of Samples," by Wm. H. Maker.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

DAKOTA'S FIGHT FOR ADMISSION—MR. SPRINGER'S BILL.

Cowles' Internal Revenue Maneuver—Gay Doings—New Dresses—Society Dameles—The Last Diplomatic Reception—Ben Butler's New Scheme.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 21.

Mr. Springer's "omnibus bill," omitting Dakota, Arizona, New Mexico, Washington, and Montana, passed the House and went to the Senate; and, with the flattering prospect of adding five new sisters to the family of Uncle Sam, the Democrats are nearly so happy as though they had elected a President. It is the first time in the history of the country where no one bill requesting the admission of more than two Territories has passed either branch of Congress. The objections naturally arising from such wholesale lumping of interests were greatly augmented by a proviso to the measure as first reported, providing that no more than two of the new States should be admitted at present. The Senate Committee made a great trouble in correcting this evident mistake, and he waded through abusive and scathing thoughts as under cursed of solicitude over impending danger to Mary. Over Utah still hung the storm, and, for twenty approximate at heart, he tore open the telegram that lay under his about 9 o'clock:

THE TROUBLE AT SAMOA.

WHITNEY'S INSTRUCTIONS TO ADMIRAL KIMBERLY AT PANAMA.

Will Protest Against the Subjugation of the Native Samoan Government by Germany—History of Germany's Scheme to Gain the Islands.

[Washington (D. C.) special.

The account of the outrages upon American flag by the Germans when the road here with absolute indifference, and proceeding from the outrages expressed against suffering the outrages to be perpetrated without an instant effort to protect American authority. The outcome is likely to be a free expression of the sense of both houses of Congress.

A San Francisco telegram states that the United States sloop-of-war Vandalia and the Trenton have started for the islands. It is believed that six weeks will be consumed by the Trenton and Vandalia in making the voyage. Thus the Nipsic will have to wait until after the 30th next March. The Trenton sailed from Panama about a week ago, but the Vandalia is a faster vessel and will take a more direct course than the Trenton and will probably reach Samoa about as soon as the latter ship.

Troubles have existed among the Samoan Islands since 1860. In that year the German commercial and Polynesian Society, or, rather, its predecessor, the firm of Godeffroy, of Hamburg, started in the side Malieton, a chief belonging to one of the most distinguished families in Samoa. Throughout the succeeding twenty years the Godeffroy, who employed no Americans, English and Germans—sought, by taking sides with Malietoa, Mulitoa, to strengthen respect for their representatives and thereby increase their commerce. In 1878 the United States, which had a commercial treaty with Samoa, was a neighbor and friend of the Samoan Islands and established a coaling station at Pago-Pago, in the island of Tutuila. The local government in 1879 being broken up by the rivalry of the Godeffroy Gordon, as Queen Victoria's Commissioner, and the Malietoa party, the Godeffroy Malietoa firmly on the throne and issued a proclamation that the islands should be followed by a treaty with Malietoa, dated Aug. 20, 1879. In the treaty Germany made a treaty with Malietoa. The treaties made with Germany, the United States, Great Britain, Germany, and Samoa were signed on the same day. The treaty agreed, for the purpose of promoting commerce, that Samoa should be open to the commerce of the world, and that no one should be disturbed in the peaceful pursuits of the Samoan people. The treaties provided that the independence and territory of the Samoan Islands should be never preserved. While America and England made no special concessions, and no treaty obligations, and have recognized Samoa as the independent nation, the policy of the Germans has been a wavering one. In the autumn of 1880 the German and Brandeis appeared in Apia. The public was in confusion and the Godeffroy, in advance of the German Commercial and Plantation Society, attempted to make a new firm, however, it was known that he had been ruined by the war. The German Commercial and Plantation Society at once began to study local conditions, and the result was that the German consulate, made himself familiar with the Samoan language and customs, and then went to the home of Tamasese, in the interior of the island, and, by secret and cocoa plantation of the German Commercial and Plantation Society, he found a house was built and furnished by the society. Malietoa, who was left in Apia, without it being publicly known, as straining his waist of Tamasese, drawing up the following list as fairly representative of feminine greatness in all ages:

Queen Esther. Queen Vashti.
Queen Elizabeth. Queen Sheba.
Catherine II. of Russia. Queen Mab.
Queen of Sheba. Queen Mary.
Queen Mab. Queen Bess.

The small man stepped to the basket, helped himself to a bunch in a basket of Concords, covered that, he tried a few Catawbas, and began on

The fruit vender, with a customer, saw a short man's actions with astonishment.

"How much you get facetiously, eating a bunch of grapes?

"Forty cents a basket.

"Too much," said the man, walking away two more Concords.

"Are you a wholesale grocer.

"No."

"Own a vineyard, sir?"

"No."

"Where did you learn "Over'n Jersey."

"Well, see here, old man, if you want to eat about a pound and a half of grapes, and I'll do that too, you know, and then you may; we don't want no grapes around here."—New York Sun.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

East Jordan.

From the Enterprise.

The note of the Michigan songbird will be heard in all directions in a few days. Palmiter Bros. started up for a short time this week, the Company's mill will be running before many days are over, and Parkes & Co. are ready to follow suit with their mill across the bay.

The Company's whistle took the bit between its teeth on Monday afternoon and went on a glorious toot of its own accord. For the first ten minutes or so, no one took any particular notice, but presently the populace came out on the street to see what the continuous blowing was for. No one knew, excepting those inside the mill, and just as curiosity was getting to be unbearable, a man was seen to crawl onto the roof of the engine house, climb up to the whistle and with two or three desperate blows with a club, knock the thing on the head and silenced it. Then the crowd heaved a sigh and went home satisfied.

Messrs. Shapton & Scroggie have purchased J. Williams & Sons livery stock out, and added it to their own in the Commercial Horse barn. This makes theirs the largest livery, feed and sale stable in the county of Charlevoix. They intend pushing business to the utmost, and their principal aim will always be to please their customers.

Wilber Long, of Boyne City, well known as Captain Long, while scuffling with Tom Trimble in Weikle's saloon on Tuesday evening, got thrown, and on attempting to rise found himself with a broken leg. Dr. Willard was called in and found the front bone broken clean across, six inches above the ankle. The fracture was reduced and the patient removed to the Commercial hotel where he now lies.

At the meeting of the Business Men's Association on Monday evening, the members expressed themselves generally as well satisfied with the new freight and express line. The extra mail route committee reported that the requisition to the Postmaster General would be circulated during the week, and forwarded.

Boyne City.

Jan. 28.—Logs are coming in lively.

The mercury registered 3 degrees below zero last night and 7 degrees the night of Jan. 18, the only times it has been below this winter.

Lots of fish houses on Pine Lake now, and the boys are telling whoppers.

The editor of the Citizen is in Bay City this week inspecting the dogs and fowls of the east coast.

F. M. Chase, secretary of Charlevoix, Emmet, and Cheboygan counties Mutual Fire Insurance Company informs us that since December 10, he has issued 226 policies. He showed us a blank book for recording just received from Illing Bros., which was made to order, a model of appropriateness, and whose dimensions indicate the expectation of a large amount of business.

George Beardsley of Stanton, was in town over Sunday.

Wilber Long of Bay Springs had a leg broken last week, the result of wrestling in an East Jordan saloon.

From the Cities.

W. J. Lewis of the Commercial House, will in the course of a few weeks have his hotel, store and hall lighted by electric light. He will also place a jet in front of his store for the convenience of pedestrians and to guide them to Boyne City market.

Rosco L. Corbett for village president. He'll make a good one and if he consents to stand for that office, will go in unapposed.

David Willis has bought a span of three year-old horses that, it is said, will throw dust in the eyes of all ordinary teams and not half try.

Mr. King's daughter Mabel is quite sick with congestion of the lungs. Dr. DeLacy is attending her.

John Lloyd's little child is quite sick. It had an attack of croup from which it does not rally as it should.

Miss Lottie Steele has been to Grand Rapids on a visit.

Will Hayes, Kansas real estate speculator, is cutting furnace wood.

Our town treasurer, A. B. Steele, has been to Grand Rapids to collect the taxes on the G. R. & I. land in this town.

P. B. Newton was out the other day driving for his health, with Mr. Willis' high steppers. From the way he handled the ribbons we should judge that he had been there before.

Jack Willis says he always supposed he had a good chance to live to a ripe old age, as he is from a long-lived family; but the other day he had a diseased tooth and went to a dentist, who succeeded in getting a portion of it. Jack has now a solemn looking countenance and says he is afraid he "will not live very much longer." Moral,—When a woman has the toothache it don't amount to much, but when a two hundred pound man wrestles with it, it means business.

Messrs. Allen, cousins of Wm. Greenman, are visiting him. They brought a heavy team with them, and will go to the lumber woods.

Miss Ollie Stebbins is on the sick list.

D. Flanigan will start his shingle mill this week.

Petoskey Notes.

From the Democrat.

A. A. Cox, of Harbor Springs, is enlarging his dock, adjoining the gristmill.

C. W. Caskey has sold the steamer Lou. A. Cummings, to Messer Webb & Amory, of Grand Traverse, who probably intend to run her on Grand Traverse Bay.

Men are already hard at work on the Cummings, fitting her out, and her new owners will take her to Traverse City as soon as her machinery can be put together.

Capt. Bundy, of gospel fame, is negotiating for the Cyclone, and it is quite likely that she will run next season as a floating chapel, under Capt. Bundy's management.

The bondsmen of Harper Talbott deceased, who was postmaster at Appleton, will be called upon to make up a slight deficiency, due no doubt to his sudden death, which left his accounts in an unsettled state.

The engine and machinery of Mohr's mill, burned about a year ago, was hauled to town last week, and Mr. Shay will repair it if practicable, in which case it will be taken to Fox Island by Capt. Roe, and used to cut the timber on his shorewashed farm.

Connable & Sons have just received a car load of new mill nets, and will have twelve or fourteen men employed for three weeks attaching the side lines, leads and floats. If the nets were stretched out they would reach over sixty miles. In other words, the front or whitefish that gets within sixty miles of Connable & Sons is a gone sucker.

The Season Will Open Early.

"I am going to open my grand hotel at Mackinac a week earlier next season than usual," said John H. Plank, of the Plankington, yesterday afternoon. "It will be opened on or about June 20. The reason? A good and sufficient one. The National Association of Passenger Agents have engaged the house for a week for the purpose of holding their annual meeting. They generally go off to some resort or other. Last year their annual meeting was held at the Mammoth Cave, Kentucky. They are a jolly lot of fellows, and believe in having a jolly time on those occasions. I told them that they might own the house for a week up at the island, big as it is. They can sit cross legged on the office counter or play hide-and-seek in the safe, if they feel like doing so."—Free Press.

No Poisonous Insects, Serpents or Plants.

While discussing venomous reptiles it will perhaps be not of place to add a little information which seems to are remarkable, and which will be news to nearly all who live east of the mountains. When I arrived on Puget sound I was informed that there were neither poisonous serpents, insects nor plants on the shores or islands of the sound. Having never seen a place entirely devoid of poisonous animal or vegetable life I was rather inclined to doubt the assertion, though assured by many old settlers, as well as new, that such was the case. However, a careful investigation since then has convinced me that it is true. In all my hunting and fishing expeditions I have never seen a specimen of poisonous reptile, insect or plant. I notice an entire absence of both poison oak and ivy, which I have heretofore encountered wherever I have been. As far as I can learn, what I have said in regard to Puget sound also holds true of all the country lying west of the Cascade range.—Forest and Stream.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that is the greater in its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or fading, or turning gray, will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in use market.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

"I am free to confess that 3 bottles of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has certainly caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance.—R. Britton, Chillicothe, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I can have no hesitation in saying to any one could wish for."—E. T. Schmutzer, Dubuque, Iowa.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

FROM NEW MEXICO.

Notes and Opinions of That Country by A. D. Cruickshank.

[We did not state last week that the letter from Mr. Cruickshank was an extract from a letter to Mrs. Cruickshank. We have this week a letter from Mr. C. direct to the editor of the JOURNAL.]

FRIEND STRANG,—I have now been enjoying the sunshine of New Mexico for three weeks and upwards, and I shall endeavor to give you something of a description of the country and climate. Our journey here was very pleasant. We were fortunate enough to meet some very fine people at Chicago who were journeying to the same part of the country; and they were in the same cars with us all the way. Some were going on business, some for pleasure and others for health.

We arrived at Las Vegas without accident or extraordinary incident, except the fine scenery and grand plains and prairies over which we passed, through eastern Kansas and southern Colorado, —but, I will not attempt to say anything about them, but confine my remarks to New Mexico. We enter the territory over the Raton range of mountains, up which we are drawn with two engines. The scenery is fine and wild. We arrive at the line between Colorado and New Mexico, and enter the territory through a large tunnel under the mountain, and when daylight appears you are in New Mexico. We soon arrive at the town of Raton, a pleasant place of about 2,000 people, situated among rich coal mines and other of different kinds. Soon we pass ex-Senator Dorsey's ranch, and then Springer, the county seat of the county where there is vast beds of cement equal in quality to the Portland cement, and they are mining and manufacturing large quantities at this place.

Near Wagon Mound there is a large sheep ranch, where the sheep are of the long wool breed,—Cotswold, etc.,—and are said to be well adapted to the country, or the country to them. We here saw a fine flock of antelope near the road.

Las Vegas is a very pretty town of 8,000. The new town is well built with brick brought from a place near here in great quantities. Brick also enters largely into the structure of the buildings, the same being made near the town. The old town, or rather one mile distant, is chiefly built of adobe, and is very old, and occupied by Mexicans. There are some exceptions to this however, as some Americans have invaded their sacred ground, and built some fine three story brick and stone buildings, a hotel that will compare well in size to the Sweet's in Grand Rapids, some fine stores, etc. Here is a fine court house of brown stone, some large churches of different denominations, (but the finest is the Catholic church,) some good school buildings. Street cars run from the old to the new town. Town is supplied with gas and electric lights, and water comes from a running river from the mountains. Near this city is situated the Hot Springs, which we visited, six miles up the valley of the river, and through almost a continuous Mexican village. The springs are very hot, so hot that you can hold your hand in them but a very short time. The scenery here is beautiful and the water, both cold and hot, is very good. There seems to be a good business being done by the merchants, and there seems to be a large paying trade from the surrounding country, mining localities, and stock ranches. A very pleasant class of people inhabit the town, and seem to be content. The climate is mild, and the atmosphere dry and bracing, but the altitude being so great (about 7000 feet above the sea) it is somewhat cold at nights, often freezing pretty hard, but there is no snow except in the mountains. From Las Vegas to Albuquerque is a fine run, most all the way in the valley of the Rio Grande. At Glorieta, a station in the Glorieta Mountains, is a good deal of pine lumber, and a saw mill is located cutting out the timber.

The valley of the Rio Grande varies in width from one mile to five and six miles, and then comes the mesa,—what we would call the terrace. This extends ten and 12 miles to the mountains, sometimes more, a beautiful level plain covered with buffalo grass. The river is very restless and hardly ever makes its bed in the same place for two seasons in succession. The water is thick and muddy, and about the color of the Missouri. The valley seems to be the deposit of the river and reminds one of the rich deposits of the Nile; so this is rich and only needs cultivation. Americans who have commenced the cultivation of this soil find it very profitable. They produce here very fine vegetables of all kinds (cabbage, beets, and in fact anything) to great perfection. Fruit grows with very little care.

Albuquerque is a fine city of about 15,000 people, including the old town. The city consists of new and old town, as almost all these places do, new town being where most all the business is done; composed of native Americans who are forcing natives out of improvement and are making a fine city. The town is well built of stone and brick, both of which is plentiful in the vicinity. The business are large, two and three stories high, in the modern style of architecture, streets wide, clean and good, the roads outside the city are fine and make very pleasant drives. Street cars are running, and the city is well lighted by gas and electric lights. I found some very fine stocks of goods here, and they have spleudid stores. One firm has a stock of $100,000, and many more are not far behind. Business seems to be good and every one busy, and I hear no one complaining, but all seemed contented with the town and prospects. A large wholesale trade is carried on with the surrounding country.

In the shops of the A. & P. R. R. is employed 600 men the year through besides those employed by the Santa Fe. Various manufacturing institutions are established here,—breweries, ice factories, flouring mills, and foundries and machine shops. A large scope of country is tributary to the city in the way of fruit raising, grazing ranches, farming, mining, etc. The valley is wide and very productive. The country is beautiful around the city. On the east side, after rising from the bottom land, a long and beautiful plain, twelve miles in width, extends to the mountains. Over this plain you may gallop anywhere, or drive with the lightest buggy. I believe it is the finest outlook from this plain I ever saw. For miles you see the valley of the Rio Grande, with the river. Beneath you is the city and the bustle of the busy inhabitants, with the smoke and steam of the many shops and engines ascending. To the westward, across the valley is another plain or mesa, extending to the mountains on the west, over which arises an extinct volcano, whose breath is yet sometimes warm. Around all this is the snow clad mountains as a background, glistening in the sunlight that shines every day through a clear, light atmosphere, that seems no resistance to its rays. The climate is something wonderful. Every day, sunshine; nights cool, in fact, frosty, (white frost, about like our October); the days warm and very pleasant. Men go about their work in shirt sleeves, doors and windows of dwellings open during the day. And there does not seem anything to the weather you could ask to have changed. There is no mud, streets are dry, and side walks are clean and dry. There is no particular boom there; everything seems to be going on in a business way. Property is not very high. Land can be had near the city for $25 per acre. City property is not out of the way; although I did not find much for sale. City lots for dwellings range from $150 to $200 or $300 according to location. The city is well supplied by a fine system of water works, the head of their system being about 300 feet above the city. I was shown a lot of five acres, from which the proprietor made $3,000 last year in fruit and vegetables; also another patch of about eight acres that a couple of Americans have gardened for three years, and it is claimed they have made $10,000 in the three years. From what I can see of this land and climate, I would rather have 10 acres of land in this valley, where it can be irrigated, than the best 80 acre farm in Charlevoix county, to make money from, and I shall own that amount, if not more, before I return.

As to this country being a good climate for persons afflicted with diseases and infirmities from a Siberian winter. I can say that I have met a good many who come here for the last effort to regain broken health and are well and doing business. You know how Frank Wood was when he left and for a year before he left. You will not believe me, perhaps, when I tell you that from the time we entered the territory, he began to breathe easy, his cough has almost left him, and he and I have climbed mountains and hills and taken long walks, and hunted jack rabbits, carried heavy guns, and he actually tired me out. And to-day we have ridden upon some horses to the mountains, a half days ride over the plain, and climbed a mountain to get a view, (and we got a splendid one) and we galloped home, and here he is, just tumbled into bed, as well as he was when a boy, strong and ready to sleep all night, without coughing. Tomorrow we will go for a 24-mile ride, to the crater of a volcano. He joins me in saying that it is a splendid country for any person having throat difficulty.

Now you will ask, What is the draw back in the country? Namely, two things, the old population, the Mexicans, and lack of rain, and a third, and perhaps not the least, the old Spanish grants, that makes it difficult in these rich valleys to procure title. But this is being remedied in a great measure in may ways. I find the citizens, even the Mexicans, law abiding, and thrifty, and there is no more danger to property and life than in Michigan. In some of the mining camps, as in the pine woods of Michigan, roughs do, to some extent, congregate, but the law is well enforced in most cases.

The old towns along the valley built many years ago by the Mexicans, are curiosities. One cannot visit and pass through them without having his mind carried back to the old cities of the east, and here he can find a counterpart for them in style of building, streets, manners of the people, etc. The towns are all built with adobe or sun-dried brick, about four inches thick, six to eight wide, and 15 to 18 inches in length. The soil is suited for their construction, and in many places they just cut them out of the ground as we would sods and place them in the wall. Others are manufactured in the regular way and straw chopped up and mixed with them. They make very comfortable buildings. The Mexicans build their houses so as to form a square. Some ten or twelve will build in this way, which will leave in the center a square or court. Out of this court the doors enter the houses, with only one opening to the outside. In this court or square all the children of the different families composing this group of houses, meet, play, sun themselves, and is the world to them until they are large enough to take care of themselves. And so the city is built by a succession of these squares; but they are built without any regard to regularity, so that the streets, or rather alleys, (for they are very narrow), are crooked,—simply an irregular path among the walls. Around these houses there is generally a wall, ten to twelve feet high, built from adobe, so that the whole appearance is that of one of those ancient cities. The roof is flat and covered with the same material, adobe. Inside they are plastered and papered and look neat and comfortable.

In the old town of Albuquerque stands an old church, said to be 300 years old, built of adobe. It is quite large, with two spires, and has a bell. In the church there are fine images and paintings, some of which are said to have been brought from Spain at the time of the building of the church. Here the adobe house where Mrs. General Sheridan was born, and also Gen. Sheridan's headquarters some time while here with the army.—A large adobe house with a veranda in front. Here a wealthy German has established himself and built him a castle in imitation of one on the Rhine, a beautiful place, surrounded with a fine vineyard from which he receives a good revenue every year, and enjoys himself in the beautiful sunlight. The land around the old town is fine, and there are some fine orchards and gardens. The outlook is pleasant and prospects good, and when I look over the opportunities for young and old men in this country, with this beautiful climate, where snow is enough to be thrown without an hour's care, except to brand them, so that you know them; where everything grows with very little care; and where the natural resources are only beginning to be known; where Americans are needed to aid in building up what will be one of the finest parts of this country, I cannot understand why it is that there has not been a greater immigration here, unless it is the mistaken idea that the Indian with the scalping knife and tomahawk still stalks at large, and that it is inhabited with a lot of roughs and knaves, both of which is a mistake. The day is not far distant when these valleys will be a garden, so to speak, from one end of them to the other, selling its produce to the mountains to feed the miners and ranch men, while the beef and minerals will be brought from the mountains in exchange and fortunes will be made by the men who take advantage of these resources.

We are going on in a few days, to El Paso and old Mexico, and may write you again.

The Army Nurse Pension Bill Amended and Passed.

THE Senate proceeded to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill on the 28th ult. The following amendments were agreed to: Inserting an item of $6,000 for a Consul General at Apia, Samoan Islands. Transferring the consulate at Nieuw Laredo, Mexico, from class four to class three, and the salary thereof for a consulate of the same class at Paso del Norte. The army nurses' pension bill was amended and passed. It allows a pension of $50 a month to all women nurses during the late war who may be found by a board of Surgeons appointed by Miss Dix, Superintendent of Women Nurses, or her authorized agent, or who were specially appointed by the surgeon General or other proper United States authority to be entitled to the benefits of this act, and who are now, or shall hereafter be, in need of such pension and who are now receiving, or may hereafter receive, a special acts are to be entitled to the benefits of this act. The Senate bill was passed by the House increasing the pension of soldiers or sailors who have lost both hands or eyesight in both eyes. The Senate concurrent resolution directing the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to have the joint meeting of the Senate and House of Representatives, on Jan. 15, for the purpose of counting the electoral votes. The House went into committee of the whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill. An amendment appropriating $50,000 for the relief of the settlers of school ages in Alaska, without regard to race, was agreed to. The appropriation for the Yuma Indians in Arizona was increased $15,000. Representative Springer introduced a bill creating a territory for an indefinite time, for the admission of the Territories of Arizona, Idaho and Wyoming, and the northern half of the Territory of Dakota. Introduced a bill providing for opening for settlement all that portion of the Fort Randall military reservation in Dakota lying east of the Missouri River.

ACCIDENTS ON THE RAILWAYS.

Several Indianians Injured by the Wreck of an Accommodation Train.

The Rockport, Ind., Canelton accommodation train was thrown from the track and turned over, between Lincoln City and Cyrimey, Ind. There were thirty-six passengers in the coach and all were well shaken up, but none killed. Mrs. Kann, of Evansville, was badly hurt. Her arm was broken and her spine injured. Rev. Ward, presiding elder of the M. E. Church, was badly injured. Mr. Bassoye, a druggist of Rockport, and several others suffered severe bruises.

A heavily loaded freight train was derailed and completely destroyed near Murph, N. C. The wreck was caused by an open switch, and resulted in the killing of Freman Adams and Brakeman Lee. These two were buried under the debris, and their bodies were burned in a mass of cotton with which the train was loaded.

DIE IN A BLIZZARD.

Dakota School Children Caught in a Snow Storm.

Two school children perished in the recent blizzard in Dakota, and a third was terribly frozen. Their names were French, and the party consisted of two little boys and an older sister, aged 18. The French family live about twelve miles east of Hitchcock, Dakota. The children were taken to school by an elder brother in the morning, and he expected to go for them at night. He did start, but could not make his team face the storm and gave it up. After waiting until dark the children started home, but lost their way and wandered in the deep snow until exhausted. When found in the morning the two little boys were dead. The girl was severely frozen and was unconscious. If she survives she will have to lose a large portion of her limbs and possibly one or both arms.

A VICTIM OF THE COCAINE HABIT.

Dr. J. W. Underhill of Cincinnati Committed Suicide While Under the Influence of Cocaine.

DR. J. W. UNDERHILL, at one time one of the most prominent physicians of Cincinnati, Ohio, is dead. He was a victim of the cocaine habit, and, although the immediate cause of his death was lockjaw, it was caused by his enfebbled condition. The doctor had all sorts of hallucinations, and his wife and children were compelled to have him. On several occasions he became violent and had to be confined. He contracted the habit about four years ago and could never shake it off.

Heard by Wire.

The Supreme Court of New York has affirmed the verdict of $75,000 for breach of promise secured by Clara Campbell, of Ironton, Ohio, against Charles Arbuckle, the millionaire coffee merchant, known since as "Baby Bunting."

Mrs. Hannah Burrows, who murdered her husband, has been sentenced to death at Philadelphia, Pa.

Frederick Perrin, the oldest and best known chess-player of Brooklyn, N. Y., died of pneumonia. He was 73 years of age.

Mr. Perrin was at one time professor of languages at Princeton College.

Served Him Right.

An Indianapolis, Ind., wife-beater named Patrick O'Neal was taken from his house by a crowd, led either by a woman or a man in woman's clothes, and after being given twenty-five lashes was rolled in the snow. He was warned that if he abused his family again the visit would be repeated and he would get a double dose.

Will Go on the Stage.

Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., has signed a contract at New York with Manager Daniel Frohman, engaging herself to play as an actress for three years.

BOULANGER IS ELECTED.

The French General Has a Great Victory Over M. Jacques.

A PARIS dispatch says: The most exciting election that ever took place in the Department of the Seine closed with the election of Boulanger by a plurality of 81,000 votes, and a clear majority of the total of 54,432. The complete vote is:

GENERAL BOULANGER.

Boulanger	244,059
Jacques	162,520
Chiche	44,627
Other candidates	10,858

The Boulangists predict the immediate fall of the Floquet ministry, the dissolution of Parliament, and a general election in March. They also forecast a rupture in the Radical party, and express the belief that forty Radical deputies will join the Boulangist ranks and thus give the General a following of sixty members in the present Chamber. Rets are freely offered that the ministry will resign. The members of the government are astounded at the result.

THE PULLMAN MONOPOLY.

The Control of Over 150,000 Miles of Road for Palace Car Service.

The negotiations between the officials of the Pullman Palace Car Company and the Union Palace Car Company, which absorbed the Mann Boudoir Car Company and the Woodruff Palace Car Company, have closed at New York City, and an agreement executed by which the Pullman Company obtained sole control of the opposition corporations. The purchase involved the expenditure of about $2,500,000, and leaves the Pullman in control of over one hundred and fifty thousand miles of road for palace-car service. As soon as the agreement was signed the holders of the Union Palace Car Company stock delivered their certificates and received checks at once. President Pullman says no increase of stock is necessitated by the purchase. After the consummation of the deal the following officers for the Pullman Palace Car Company were elected: George M. Pullman, President; T. H. Wickes, Vice President, and E. D. Adams, John H. Inman, John G. Moore, Edward Lauterbach, Lincoln Bennett, G. M. Dodge, C. Lutterbury, Job H. Jackson, John Jay White, and Howard Mansfield Directors. The purchase of the Union Palace Car Company leaves the Pullman Company with only one competitor—the (Wagner Company—in the field. That company has its cars on the Vanderbilt roads and is owned by the Vanderbilts.

DULLNESS IN TRADE.

The Transactions, Though, Are Unusually Large, According to Dun & Co.'s Report.

THE review of trade for last week, as reported by R. G. Dun & Co., is as follows:

The state of trade is unusually perplexing, for with great complaint of dullness there are evidences that the volume of transactions is large. The payments through banks last week were larger than in any week in December, being very well last year at New York and correspondingly large at all other cities. Railroad earnings do show that the traffic is large. The demand for money is sufficiently active at nearly all central points, however, to indicate that a large business is in progress. Yet it is generally feared that there will be a great loss of business done at the result of business since the new year began, and this is not wholly explained by the unusually declining prices of products. At Southern and Western cities business is said to be improving. In the Northwest trade is reported to be dull, and a clear and cold winter has greatly injured the supply of house wood for the coming season. The supply of house wood is by every wise maxim for legitimate demands, and speculation in it is discouraged by the fear of overstocking of commercial credits. In the great iron industry consumption for all other than railroad purposes appears to be larger than ever, but there is serious distraint, A decided, if not, if the spoke is considered, the most, the sentiment coal market continues weak, and the price of Pennsylvania anthracite has lately fallen 15 cents for the week. Corn has fallen a cent, and oats one cent. Pork product has also declined, mess about 30 cents per barrel, and lard, as compared with last week, is 5 cents a tierce lower, with sales of 42,000 tubs, and defer 5 cent higher with sales of 23,000 tcs. There is little activity in groceries, but the sugar market favors holders. The exports of domestic products from the United States for the past week fell 1 per cent, for three weeks. The stock market is nevertheless so firmly maintained that the average decline in prices has been only 0 cent per $10 of the week. The business failures number 224, against a total of 207 the previous week.

DEATH OF A PLAYWRIGHT.

A. R. Cazaurau Passes Away in New York City from Dropsy.

Playwright A. R. Cazaurau died in New York City, after a sickness of two years, from dropsy. For the last six months he had been confined to his bed.

Mr. Cazaurau was born in Rochelle, France, in October, 1811. He came to America in 1840, and soon became a citizen. He served on the Court of Sessions for the City and County of New York, was Supreme Court Reporter in Washington before the war, when he became a correspondent. He afterward went to New York City. Wi h Brisson Howard he wrote the "Banker's Daughter," "Ten Days," "Ten Days," "Ten Days," "Ten Days," and adapted "La Cigalle." Celebrated Case," "Mother and Son," "French Flats," etc.

VICTIMS OF THE GALLOWS.

Southern Murderers Expiate Their Crimes on the Scaffold.

A negro named James Seames was hanged at Eufaw, Ala., for murdering Deputy Sheriff Autrey of Tuscaloosa about six months ago.

Charles McGill was hanged at Cameron, Texas, for the murder of Willis Leonard. It was the first legal hanging in Milam County in thirty years.

John Yancey, colored, was hanged at Yanceyville, N. C., for murdering Bob Oliver, colored. Two thousand people witnessed the execution. Yancey confessed the crime just before the death warrant was read.

Charles Blackman (colored) was hanged in the presence of an immense crowd, at Ellaville, Ga., for murdering Stonewall Tondee (white) in 1885. Blackman had been convicted of the murder three times, and each time his lawyer secured a new trial. The people of Sumter County were so afraid Governor Gordon would interfere and stay Blackman's execution that the telegraph wires were cut to prevent the transmission of a message from Atlanta, the State capital.

SOME FIGURES ON CORN.

The Illinois Crop of 1888 Valued at Nearly $80,000,000—Acreage and Prices.

THE Illinois corn crop of 1888 has been reported to the State Board of Agriculture as yielding in the aggregate 277,726,431 bushels, valued at $79,241,111. The acreage for 1888, reported by the assessors, is 7,475,813 acres. The statistics of acreage and yield are prepared for the crop report of the Board, but from the tables as far as completed it is ascertained that the average yield per acre is thirty-nine bushels. Greene County reports the largest average yield, fifty-nine bushels to the acre, and the yield of fifteen bushels per acre in Jefferson County is the lowest. The average yield of wheat where raised was 28 cents per bushel. Stock and Alexander Counties report the highest average price of 36 cents per bushel, and the lowest price is 24 cents, which is the value of corn in Lawrence County.

A BATTLE IN EAST AFRICA.

The Position of Captured Missionaries Our Only Hope.

—A Zanzibar special says: An engagement took place at Kikoko, between Arabs in the defiant of the Arabs, many of whom were killed. During the fight the First Lieutenant of the German warship Sophie was killed by a sunstroke. The defeat of the Arabs renders the position of the captured missionaries still more dangerous. It is reported that the manager of the German Vita Company assembled the friendly natives and read an autograph letter from the Emperor thanking each native by name for his good-will and assistance, and promising protection and reward. The British consul is trying to arrange for the dispatch of a caravan to bring away the missionaries at Uyaupon and Mandoyo, their position being extremely dangerous.

STRICKEN IN THE HOUSE.

Congressman Burnes Attacked by Paralysis, and Dies in a New House.

Representative James N. Burnes of Missouri was stricken with paralysis at the JAMES N. BURNES.

National Capitol. The first symptoms of the approaching attack were experienced when Mr. Butterworth, in the House, called Mr. Burnes' attention to a passage of the annual River and Harbor bill then under consideration. Mr. Burnes remarked that his tongue appeared to be affected and he had great difficulty in speaking. He plored in the mill, were badly scalded. Very little of the building was left except the foundation. The disaster was caused by lack of water in the boiler.

Political Doings.

The Arkansas Senate has passed the House resolution instructing Senators and requesting Representatives from Arkansas in Congress to use their utmost efforts to defeat the Blair educational bill.

A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Pennsylvania Constitution prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors has been passed by the Legislature by a vote of 122 to 55.

The Hudson bill creating a labor bureau has been recommended for passage in the Indiana Senate.

The Kansas House has passed the Senate resolution favoring the opening of Oklahoma for settlement.

The Arkansas Senate has denied to grant C. M. Norwood's petition for permission to contest the election of Gov. Eagle until he gives a sufficient bond for costs.

Ordered to Panama.

The United States ship Ossipee, which recently arrived at Kingston, Jamaica, with the Harlem Republican club, has been ordered to proceed without delay to Aspinwall for the protection of American interests on the Isthmus. Her departure for Aspinwall will leave the United States unprotected on the north coast of Mexico, and leaves the Atlanta, which sailed from New York lately.

Women Elect Officers.

The Woman's Suffrage Association at Washington, D. C., elected the following officers for 1889: President, Elizabeth Cady Stanton; Vice President-at-large, Susan B. Anthony; Secretary, Rachel P. Avery; Treasurer, Mrs. Jane H. Spofford; Chairman of the Executive Committee, Mrs. May W. Sewall.

In Religious Circles.

The Rev. Wilbur F. Paddock, associate pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Cleveland, Ohio, has accepted a call to the Central Presbyterian Church of New York, salary, $7,000. The Rev. I. A. Crandall, of the Twenty-third Baptist Church of New York, has been called to the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church of Cleveland; salary, $5,000.

He Was Insane.

Thomas Conway, of New Suffolk, L. I., who disappeared Jan. 2, the day he was to have been married, was found in a barn near that city. He was insane and nearly starved, having lived in the shed without food since his disappearance. Physicians recently medical treatment he recovered. He can give no explanation of his conduct.

Wants to Be Governor.

A petition has been filed by C. M. Norwood in the Arkansas Supreme Court of Arkansas preliminary to contesting the election of James P. Eagle as Governor. Norwood, the Labor candidate, charges fraud, and claims that a fair count will elect him by over 5,000 majority.

He Assisted Lincoln.

Samuel M. Felton, President of the Pennsylvania Steel Company, died in his residence at Philadelphia, aged 79 years. He is said to be remembered as having enabled President Lincoln to pass unrecognized through Baltimore on his way to his inauguration at Washington.

Heathen Bodies Found.

Two headless bodies were found on the beach near Gloucester, Mass., by James Ward of the United States Life-Saving Station. They are evidently the remains of sailors of the wrecked schooner Norton, which went down in a recent gale.

A New Trial Refused.

At Geneva, Ill., Judge Wilson has refused a new trial to Bauserman, the alleged Q dynamiter, who was recently sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. His friends were much disappointed, and Bauserman called when the Judge read his decision.

Consecrated as Bishop.

In St. Paul's P. E. Church, at Cincinnati, Ohio, the Rev. J. Boyd Vincent was consecrated as Bishop of the Diocese of Southern Ohio with solemn services.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS AND WHAT THEY ARE DOING.

Proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives—Important Measures Discussed and Acted On—Out of the Business.

THE Senate passed the substitute for the Mills tariff bill by a strict party vote, on the 28th inst. The day's proceedings were largely devoted to disposing of various amendments. When these had been disposed of, a division was taken, first on agreeing to the committee amendment, which was agreed to—yeas 37, nays 25, as follows: Yeas—Aldrich, Allison, Carlisle, Chandler, Cockrell, Coke, Dawes, Dolph, Edmunds, Evarts, Farwell, Frye, Gorman, Hale, Harris, Hoar, Ingalls, Jones, Kansas, Lodge, Logan, Manderson, Morrill, Pasco, Palmer, Platt, Plumb, Sabin, Sawyer, Spooner, Stockbridge, Vance, Wilson (Md.)—32. Nays—Butler, Camden, Cullom, Davis, Gibson, Hawley, Jones (Nev.), Cole, Colquitt, Daniel, Faulkner, Gorman, Jones (Ark.), Kenna, Lindsay, Mahone, Pugh, Ransom, Sanders, Saulsbury, Spooner, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wilson (Md.)—25. Mr. Stockbridge gave notice of his right along with the Republican party and not voting in the last vote, which would have had no effect on the result. The Senate then took up the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate bill, and asked for a conference on the disagreement. The House then took up the Senate bill, and asked for a conference on the disagreement. The House then took up the Senate bill, and asked for a conference on the disagreement. The House then took up

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in state convention in Hartman's hall, at Grand Rapids

ON THURSDAY, FEB. 28th, 1889,

At 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for Justice of the Supreme court and two candidates for Regents of the State University, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 50 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 26 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: One vice president of the convention and one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business and resolutions.

J. M. WESTON, Chairman.

FRANK H. THOMAS, Secretary.

Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates.

Democratic County Convention.

A democratic county convention will be held at O. W. Crouter's office, Charlevoix, on

FRIDAY, FEB. 22, 1889,

At 2.00 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating four delegates to the state convention to be held at Grand Rapids, on Feb. 28th, and for the transaction of such other business as may be brought before the convention.

Each township is entitled to delegates to said convention as follows: Bay 2, Bear Lake 1, Boyne Valley 2, Chandler 1, Charlevoix 6, Evangeline 2, Eveline 3, Hayes 1, Hudson 1, Marion 2, Melrose 1, Norwood 2, Resort 1, South Arm 6, Wilmington 1, Wilson 2.

A. D. CRUICKSHANK,
O. W. CROUTER, Sec'y. Chairman.

AT a meeting of the Railway Association of Michigan, held at Detroit on the 17th, it was voted to give half fare rates for the democratic state convention to be held at Grand Rapids, February 28th, to all who desire to attend the convention, whether they are delegates or not. Tickets will be sold February 27th and 28th, and are limited to March 1st.

Wine in the White House.

Mrs. Harrison announces that she does not countenance wine in public. At the hotel her table is one of the very few where claret is never seen. The general has a fine taste for old wines and brown stout, and Mrs. Harrison, not being a crank, doesn't intend to interfere with his plans. The members of the W. C. T. U. who have been rejoicing over the expected repetition of the Hayes inaugural banquet are chagrined to learn that the affair will be lop sided. Mrs. Harrison, McKee, Mrs. Russell B. Harrison and the other ladies of the family will turn their glasses down, necessitating all other ladies following their example. Mrs. Harrison admits that it is not to be a Hayes affair, but she does not approve of ladies drinking. It is not the habit, but the example, that she fears. The gentlemen at the White house will, however, be allowed the utmost freedom.

The Issue.

The issue is tax reduction.

It will remain the issue between the two great political parties until it is settled in accordance with the lines of the democratic policy of tariff reform.

The republican party is distinctively a high protection party. It is for the monopolists and against the people. There can be no compromise with such a plutocratic organization.

The great federalist, Hamilton, would have been appalled at the audacity of the tariff advocates of to day. The tariff bill of 1789 was regarded as a protective measure. It averaged 8 per cent upon dutiable imports. A tariff of 25 per cent, was deemed ample by that illustrious champion of protection, Henry Clay. The tariff of 33 per cent, which was imposed during the war intended by the authors to be only a temporary measure. It became necessary to raise vast sums of money, and the tariff schedules were increased. This was the most direct means of securing the needed revenue. It was clearly a temporary expedient, yet now that the supreme exigencies which created that high tariff have long since passed away, that system of taxation is continued in a more oppressive form than ever before. The present tariff is the legacy of republican class legislation—averages 47 per cent, and covers more than 2,000 articles, 76 per cent, of them necessities of the people or essentials of manufactures. This tariff annually produces $100,000,000 of surplus revenue.

The democratic party has stood squarely against such a tariff for the past twelve years. It has never supported one-sided "protection" of this kind. In the late campaign tax reduction through tariff reform was the controlling issue. The question is an economic one. Upon it the parties have been divided in the past; upon it the parties will remain divided in the future.

Tariff reform is democracy, and democracy is tariff reform. That is the motto which the ablest and bravest spirits of the party have "nailed to the masthead."—Lansing Journal.

The Bill to Reduce the Surplus by Increasing Taxes.

The great surplus still thunders into the vaults of the treasury—over a million of extra taxes each week. The senate, loudly reading the title of its bill "to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue," votes, 32 to 30, to raise the tax on woolen clothing from 67 to 90 per cent—the highest tax ever levied on such goods; to increase the tax on metals, on lumber, on provisions, on cotton, on flax, on silk, on books and paper; and to reduce the tax on foreign tobaccos. Joined with the only real reduction on necessaries (sugar) is a plan to pay every man in the Union a cent of bounty for every pound of sugar he shall make—the essence of the foreign sugar-beet fiasco, which caused a half dozen panics in the old world.

The nimble liars of the war tariff assert that the present incredible demands of the senators are made with a view of compromise in conference committee between the two chambers, but the Herald has often shown how the same men, in March, 1883—Kelley Sherman, Randall and the like—went into conference to arrange the difference between $15 and $15.68 on the iron tax and came out of conference with $17 as the equation. The senators intend that a $20 suit of clothes shall cost $21, and no conference will disturb their intent.

In this belief, and on this showing the Herald asks Messrs. Allison and Sherman if this execrable bill of theirs be not in repayment of the enormous contributions which the Wanamakers Jacobses, Carnegies and other manufacturers made to the national republican committee in General Harrison's interest.—Chicago Herald.

A Weak Point.

We shall be able to prod with this little editorial barb almost every reader. We trust the puncture will serve as a suggestion only, and not cause pain. The weakest point in a man's storekeeping is frequently his stationery. The windows may shine with bright beauty; the store itself may be a model of neatness and utility; the whole machinery of the establishment may indicate the masterly control over business methods possessed by the owner, but his orders and correspondence may be committed to scraps of paper which should be consigned to the waste basket rather than be sent to represent the storekeeper at the wholesale house where he may trade. There may be some who may say this is carrying ideas of storekeeping quite too far, and that wholesalers care little what kind of stationery a man may provided his credit is all right. This view should be indulged in sparingly. A man's best introduction to a wholesaler may be the stationery on which his initial order may be sent. If it is neatly printed and of good quality, it will certainly serve better than an order written on a piece of plain paper. A good letter-head and a business-like envelope are great aids to commercial intercourse. They seem to give a man a certain standing and enable him to be identified. By all means, merchants, be careful ordering stationery to have it neat, tasteful and of good quality.—American Storekeeper.

President Cleveland's Plans.

The following official statement from the executive mansion has been given to the press: President Cleveland will return to the state of New York to reside on the expiration of his term of office and will, on March 5, resume the practice of his profession New York City, having associated himself as counsel with the law firm of Bangs, Stetson, Tracy & Macveagh.

SCHOOL HOUSE BURNED.

The Primary and Intermediate Departments Must Seek Other Quarters.

Soon after nine o'clock Wednesday morning, smoke issued out of the registers at the old school house, and a bright flame was seen in the ventilator register in Miss Stowe's room. Two rooms were in session, Miss Mason's and Mrs. Upright's having been dismissed on account of the extreme cold, but Mrs. Upright was still in the building. The alarm was given quietly to Miss O'Neill and Mrs. Upright, and the scholars were all marched out in good order, and without any semblance of panic.

The fire department responded promptly, but the peculiar construction of the building had enabled the fire to climb to the top and get beyond control before the flame could be seen from the outside. The building being very dry the flames spread rapidly and burned fiercely, and there was soon no hope of saving anything but surrounding buildings. In an hour there was nothing left but the blackened foundation walls, and a heap of smoking embers and ashes.

The building was erected in 1872, and cost about $5,000 on which there was $2,000 insurance,—$1,700 on building and $300 on contents.

Most of the pupils lost all their books, and a few their wraps and overshoes.

Much praise is due the teachers for their cool and deliberate manner of marching the children out of the rooms, and down the stairs which were then nearly burned through.

Before the fire had ceased burning the school board had a meeting to provide for continuing the schools. The high school and grammar departments in the village hall will go on as usual, and make room for the grammar grades from the old building. Other rooms will be secured in a day or two for the primary grades.

A special meeting of the district has been called for Wednesday evening, Feb. 13, to take the necessary steps for providing permanent rooms until a new building can be erected.

Another For East Jordan.

Thos. McGuire and Will Marrin lately with the Charlevoix Cigar Mfg. Co., decided to go into the cigar making business for themselves, and tried to get bonds and locate here in Charlevoix, but for some reason no one seemed willing to help them. We have not heard a word against their character in any manner, and cannot fully understand the opposition to them. After two or three day's efforts, Mr. Marrin went to East Jordan, and found not only the required bonds, but a willingness to furnish free rent for a year, and abundant promises to handle their goods, if they would locate at that place. They have gone to begin the business, and Charlevoix loses the money they would naturally bring into the town and spend here. Both are good workmen, Mr. McGuire having been one of the first workmen to come here with Mr. Phillips when the factory here was started, and East Jordan gains two or more good citizens at our expense.

Death of William Miller.

Wm. Miller 24, formerly of Marion township, died at his home in Rio Vista, Ark., Jan. 24, 1889, of pneumonia, in the 65th year of his age. Mr. Miller came to Charlevoix county in 1866 from New York. At the organization of the county he was elected surveyor, and held the office until 1876, when he went to Arkansas and remained seven years, returning in 1883, was deputy county surveyor in 1883-4, and the democratic candidate for county surveyor in this county in 1884, but did not "get there." In the fall of 1885 he again went to Arkansas where he has since lived. Mr. Miller was a staunch democrat all his life.

The New Discovery.

You have heard your friends and neighbors talking about it. You may yourself be one of the many who know from personal experience just how good a thing it is. If you have ever tried it, you are one of its stannch friends, ready to recommend that almost of it is, that when once given a trial, dr. king's New discovery ever after holds a place in the house. If you have never used it and should be afflicted with a cough, cold or any throat, lung or chest trouble, secure a bottle at once and give it a fair trial. It is guaranteed every time, or money refunded. Trial Bottles free at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store.

A Sound Legal Opinion

E. Bainbridge Monday Esq., County Atty., Clay Co., Texas, says: "Have used Electric Bitters with most happy results. My brother also was very low with malarial fever and jaundice, but was cured by timely use of this medicine. Am satisfied Electric bitters saved his life."

Mr. D. I. Wilkonson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, saying: He positively believes he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters.

This great remedy will ward off, as well as cure all malarial diseases, and for kidney, liver and stomach disorders stands unequaled. Price 50c, and $1. At F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 4

☞ We notice a new departure in the treatment of disease that promises to revolutionize the medicine business. It consists in the collection of the specifics used by noted specialists of Europe and America and bringing them within the reach of all. For instance, the treatment perused by special physicians for lung trout indigestion, stomach and liver troubles only, was obtained and preferred. The treatments of other physicians, celebrated for curing catarrh, were procured, and so on till then incomparable cures now include disease of the lungs, kidneys, female weakness, rheumatism, nervous debility and piles. Originated and used by specialists, being a positive cure for each disease, these preparations are the best remedies procurable. We advise all to send a two cent stamps to the Chase Medical Specialty Co., 178 West Adams St., Chicago, Ill., and receive by return mail their interesting hand book. 16cly

LOCAL NOTES AND NEWS.

Ben Weaver is deputy and acting county clerk at Boyne.

Lake Michigan is covered with ice as far as can be seen.

Wm. Harris is home from Lansing this week, during the legislative recess.

Mr. Richards, of Traverse City is looking up business in Charlevoix, and may decide to locate here.

Rev. J. J. Kanagy and wife have returned home from a visit to their son, the doctor, at Atwood.

☞ Good steady girl wanted at Weyburn's laundry. Permanent situation for the right person.

☞ C. H. Maddaugh, merchant tailor, has just received an elegant line of spring and summer samples. Call and see them.

Another letter from A. D. Cruickshank states that he and Frank Wood are down among the vineyards of old Mexico.

☞ Buckingham's dye for the whiskers is in one preparation, and never fails to color the beard a beautiful brown or black of a natural shade.

W. H. H. Bartram, an old Michigan newspaper man, whose later years have been given up to temperance work, died last week, at Lockport, N. Y.

Little Frankie Caffrey was severely scalded with hot water on the face and neck last week, and has been quite sick in consequence, but is now improving.

Mrs. H. H. Vannornum died at her late family residence in Norwood township last Thursday night, aged about 80 years. The funeral services were held on Sunday.

While cutting wood for Mr. Wakefield, Monday morning, Ben. Alexander was struck on the head by a falling limb, his skull broken, and he is in a critical condition, with very little hope of recovery.

S. M. See has returned from Wisconsin, where he and Chas. E. went to see their sick father. The old gentleman is still alive, but quite sick. Chas. E. has not returned.

Those who have rode in Geo. W. Cook's covered, heated stage, report it to be a very comfortable conveyance and Cook's drivers always try to make the passengers comfortable and happy.

Frank McGibery has leased the Lewis opera house, and will have the management of the same as soon as it is opened next spring. Mr. McG. will undoubtedly be able to secure a good list of attractions.

The lumber shipments of the Saginaw valley for 1888 were: By water, 43,291,000 feet; by rail, 304,362,500 feet. In 1884 only 67,728,000 feet was shipped by rail, against 734,928,400 feet shipped by water.

A cold wave struck this region Monday night, and on Tuesday morning the thermometer indicated 6° below zero, and held from that to 4° above all day. The wind was sharp, and part of the time the air was full of snow.

L. D. Bartholomew & Co have put in iron pipe, or smoke stack on the furnace chimney at the engine house, so as to use it above the hose tower, and thus give better draft to the furnace, and prevent smoking when the wind is in the wrong direction.

☞ A spring medicine is needed by everyone. Winter food, largely consisting of salt meat and animal life, causes the liver to become disordered and the blood impure, hence the necessity of a cleansing medicine. The best is Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Will Lamphear and Mattie Thompson were married at the residence of the bride's parents in Boyne on Monday, Feb. 4th. Will had provided a "cage for his bird," and they immediately commenced housekeeping in his new house on Mason street.

An exchange truthfully remarks: "Those who do not know the worth of money can never appreciate the misery they often cause in not paying their obligations promptly to those who are needy. One dollar promptly paid will in a day's time cancel many an obligation, and make many a heart glad, and do much good. It is not business to say "call again" when you have the money ready to pay a legitimate bill. Prompt pay makes better times. Misers are a curse to our land."

From a careful reading of Mr Cruickshank's letter from New Mexico, one would believe that to be a delightful country, and very likely it is at this time of the year. But we should like a report from there in midsummer when the sun gets in its work from overhead.

In response to a vigorous protest from Secretary Bayard, the German government has weakened on the Samoan question, and Dr. Knapp, the German minister to the island, has been ordered to withdraw immediately the military control of the island that was attempted.

☞ "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has given me great relief in bronchitis. Within a month I have sent some of this preparation to a friend suffering from bronchitis and asthma. It has done him so much good that he writes for more."—Charles F. Dunterville, Plymouth, England.

Farmers in this vicinity are warned to keep an eye open for a man who sells the "corn binder" and who is swindling farmers in different parts of the state by getting postal card orders for one binder and selling them to 100. The binder is a small wooden stick about 18 inches long with a brass ferrule on the end, on which there is fastened a string which binds the fodder.

The Lou A. Cummings blew her whistle for the Petoskey dock on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 27th. She was on her way from Harbor Springs to Traverse City, where some alterations are to be made by her new owners before she goes on her new route on Grand Traverse Bay.—Record.

The young lady who rises early, rolls up her sleeves and walks into the kitchen to get breakfast, or assists in doing so, and afterwards, with cheerfulness and sunny smile, puts the house in order without the assistance of her mother, is worth a thousand parlor beauties, who from want of exercise almost die of laziness.—Ex.

It is worthy of note that the law forbids a pensioner bargaining, promising or selling his quarterly pension before it comes due; and upon the other hand all persons are forbidden to accept the same in any manner, as security or otherwise. The fine is fixed at $100 for any violation of the act, and applies to both the soldier and the dealer.—Ex.

Mr. C. H. Whitford, of Undine, Mich., is stopping in the city. He has been all through the west and northwest, to Washington Territory, California, and several other states. Finding no climate to agree with him in that section, he comes to Tallapoosa. He is much pleased with our climate, city and its surroundings, and is in a fair way to make this his home.—Journal, Tallapoosa, Ga.

Just note it down that on Sunday, Jan. 27, a heavy train load of ice passed through this place for the north. Whether the ice came from Indiana or southern Michigan we are unable to state; the simple fact that they are shipping ice into this section of the state from points farther south is undisputable evidence that "there is a place that is colder than this," and you don't have to go north to find it either.—Mancelona Herald.

Among our exchanges we observe the following swindle, which is being worked to advantage by a number of ladies who claim to hail from Chicago and are engaged in canvassing for a new kind of soap. They call at houses and leave a cake of soap as a sample, saying that it is tried and the result noted. In a day or two the party will return and ask the lady of the house to sign a printed "testimonial" of its excellence, which is to be presented to grocers to induce them to handle the soap. These "testimonials" have been turning up as orders for from $3 to $10 worth of soap at big prices. It would be well if townspeople take unto themselves some of the advice they so often give the "unsophisticated farmer" and sign no paper for a stranger.

From the Traverse Eagle we take the following concerning the new building now being erected in Chicago by Hannah, Lay & Co.: "The third of Chicago's sky scrapers," is the way one of the city papers speaks of the new building in process of erection by Hannah, Lay & Co. It is a year since the well known Traverse City firm purchased 93 by 181 ft. covering the southeast corner of LaSalle and Washington. The purchase of this property on which stood the old chamber of commerce, was one of the largest real estate transactions of the year. The walls of the old building have been utilized as far as they could be. New foundations have been put in and the plans call for a 13 story building which will be when completed the highest office building in the city. Its cornice will be 182ft from the sidewalk. To persons not builders it may be interesting to know how such mammoth walls are supported. Bars of railroad iron are placed side by side with every alternate tier at right angles until sufficient base is formed. This is the especial support under the vaults. Like everything made by this firm it is the best of its kind and by all odds the largest. The building will cost $700,000.

Historical Society.

Last Friday evening was a nasty stormy night, with a good sized blizzard on from the northwest, but that did not prevent a large company from assembling in the parlors of Mr. and Mrs. O. S. Washburn. The program began with an instrumental duet by Mrs. E. H. and Miss Maggie Green; Miss Rose Smith gave a reading; Mrs. E. M. Clark and Dr. Carlstein gave a vocal duet; and Miss Alice Cochran read a selection setting forth the superior qualities of women and their eminent fitness for certain trades and professions, with reasons why they should not enter on the duties of certain other trades and professions. President Green very wisely announced a ten minutes intermission right here, the better to allow the merriment to subside before trying to call to order. After intermission, Mrs. Green gave an instrumental solo, followed by the paper of the evening, by Mrs. McCartney, discussing the history of the German states during a part of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. After the close of the regular order of busines, a part of the company engaged in social games and visiting for an hour before starting homeward. The next meeting will be at the parlors of Mr. and Mrs. Byron See.

A Daily Shore Route.

The following from the Elk Rapids Progress is a pointer worthy the consideration of some of our steamboat men:

"The steamer Cummings is looking up her route for next season and this is about what her owners, Capt. Emery and H. J. Webb have decided upon: Leave Old Mission mornings for Elk Rapids, Torch Lake and Traverse City and returning in the evening. Now if some steamboat man at Charlevoix will put on a boat to run between East Jordan, Charlevoix, Norwood and Torch Lake, first-class daily connections can be had between all of the shore towns. The closer connection Traverse City, Old Mission, Torch Lake, Norwood and Charlevoix can have the better it will be all around. We hope the Cummings will have a profitable season when navigation opens. Capt. Emery will attend to all business matters and manage the steamer.

WHITE HOUSE CHATTER.

WASHINGTON'S GAY SOCIETY CIRCLES AND LEGISLATIVE HALLS.

Entertaining Royalty—Mrs. Harrison Not to Be a "Reformer"—Mills' Committee Scores a Victory—Controversy with Germany Brewing—Serious.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 29.

The social tide has reached its full, and stages and swells with high teas, dinners, receptions, and cotillions. To miss a single entertainment now before Lent is suicidal to the career of a society belle, and already flagged chaperons and hollow eyes tell how severely their strength and time are being taxed. As illustrative of this, a Chicago girl, who sprained her foot on an icy pavement recently, wrenched it back again, exclaiming, "I can't take time for a sprain now."

The official entertainment of the week was the state dinner given by the President and Mrs. Cleveland to the diplomatic corps, it being resplendent with all the glamour of lights, flowers, and brilliant costumes incidental to such an occasion.

Mrs. Don Dickinson rather divides the honors with Mrs. Whitney as entertainers of the Cabinet, and their parlors are always filled whenever the occasion presents. A member of New York ladies in conversation with the latter recently spoke of the pleasure that New Yorkers felt in the prospect of having Mrs. Whitney once more with them. "Ah, my dear," said she, "I am going to lead a quiet life after I leave Washington. I am going to Lenox, and I shall do nothing at all, but read, embroider, and do just what I feel like. I dream of it." Yet those who

No Fears for a

It is claimed that a went and that waiters turn corncobs this wha encouraging to drugg Iowa, Illinois and Wis nothing but cobs thrown know her enthusiastically holding the gre sam for three long hours recently would hardly imagine her capable of enjoying quiet times.

Secretary and Miss Hayard gave the first of their card parties this week, but there were so many other entertainments which demanded the presence of their guests that the parlors were filled scarcely ten minutes at a time during the evening. A laughable incident occurred through the absent-mindedness of the Persian minister. He attended wearing his left glove on his right hand and vice versa.

Among the Senatorial entertainments, which were unusually numerous and gorgeous, Senator Stanford's dinner to Senator Vail, in honor of Miss Mead, of California, was a notable affair, the young lady appearing in the costume in which she was recently presented at court in London. It was of white, necessitate de soie, the overdrapery embroidered in pearls in a Louis XVI. border three or four inches deep. Down the left side, caught with bows of white satin ribbon, were rich clusters of white Scotch heather and harebells intermingled with green leaves. The low neck bodice was filled in with a tucked or mousseline de soie at the Vashaped opening, in color of delicate white, which crossed over the bosom. The bodice was finished in front with a pointed enclosure of silk embroidered with pearls.

Inclement weather had no effect on the crowds that gathered at Mrs. Cleveland's second public reception, unless perchance it was to make them doubly anxious to catch a glimpse of the fair face of the lady of honor. Hence, through the social and political season, showed signs of fatigue before the day was over.

As oft as each recurring inaugural claims the attention of the people so often are the inconveniences and incigance of the White House as a residence more and more discussed. Washingtonians in general and reporters in particular are again airing the threadbare topic. Mrs. Cleveland jokingly remarked recently that she believed she would send a message to Congress before March 4, written and signed with her own hand, asking for an appropriation for a new residence for the President, and that Mrs. Harrison would appreciate some one taking the initiative in that direction.

Events were for a time not interested in Mrs. Harrison's New York shopping expedition, and the contemplated change of leader only adds a feverish fervency to the whirl of entertainments. A New York reporter gives assurance that the bustle will still hold its own under the new reign, and dresses are not sufficiently decolleté now to make ample grounds for any revolutionary efforts attempted in this line. Mrs. Harrison will take no interest in the reform movement, but takes the ground that the lady of the White House is not ex officio a leader of fashion, which argues that her personal views regarding the use of wine, the wearing of the bustle, the morality of the dance and such like topics should have no weight with the public simply because her husband happened to be elected President.

Once again we have enjoyed the rare treat of a night's session of the Senate, the first which has been held in nearly two years. There is no such magnificent sight in Washington as the great Capitol dome flashing out its myriad electric sparks upon the surrounding city, and the sight of a score of gas-jets twinkling upon the snow and ice of the Capitol Park. The gay assemblage that congregated in the galleries to listen to the tariff debate were amply rewarded by the flow of wit, wisdom and repartee that fell sedately from the lips of America's Solons under the stimulus of the flights and brilliant things, notwithstanding the dryness of the topic under discussion.

The Senate tariff bill is now in the hands of the House Committee on Ways and Means, and Mr. Mills, its chairman, has won a victory over the Senate, which insisted upon a conference in relation thereto and hoped to secure it immediately upon returning the measure to the lower House.

Meanwhile the Southern Democrats are having a sorry time over their tobacco-tax measure. The Republican leaders deem it unwise to take any action in the matter during this Congress. As a result, Clowes' Republican assistants have suddenly discovered that it is a breach of legislative etiquette for such a bill to be considered by the Appropriation Committee, and committee work in that direction has ceased, to the great chagrin and astonishment of some, who thought the internal-revenue bill in the same condition it was before being referred to Mr. Randall's committee.

Interest is fast growing in the Samoan affair, and although the issue is, relatively speaking, little more than a brag of earth in mid-ocean, the Samoan mine from our coast, it has created a "bit of a flare" between two great nations that promises to become highly entertaining. Uncle Sam's claim to the island group is based on a treaty, which, it is stated, he is prepared to making grave apologies. That is about the way the matter now stands, pending the early action of Congress.

The army would no doubt be gratified for any break in the dull monotony of a quarter of a century of peace and welcome a bit of fighting as a sort of legitimate boom.

Day-by-day, Secretary Endicott continues patient order to restrict leave of absence to thirty days a year to creating no little comment in blue coat circles. Thirty days a year is the time allowed by law. If the thirty days are not used up each year the balance may accumulate, but they should be formed and no one can be allowed to absent himself from duty for a longer period of time.

Congressman Frank Lawler has secured an appropriation of $50,000 for repairing the Chicago postoffice, although Randall was piloted against him. The Senate has concurrent resolution directing that the Public Printer hereafter drop the letters "ne" at the end of such words as "epilogue," and the letters "ue" at the end of such words as "programme," the letter "ce" at the end of such words as "hypocrite," the letters "ce" at the end of such words as "monster" and "phantom." It is readily inferred that he is a graduate of an ordinary high school.

Mr. Springer's omnibus bill has sadly failed to meet the Senate's idea of perspicuity in language, a committee of that august body having reported back the bill to ask to write a new territorial bill that would be clear and precise. Clear and precise chiefly urged to the Illinois Congressman's bill is contained in New Mexico. It being intended that her admission is sought in the interest of railroads. Not openly, of course, but it is averred that two railroad men would be sent to the Senate from New Mexico as soon as were entered among the sisters of the Union.

Much note on the Chinese bill was referred to the adjournment of Congress in Congress in Congress. The Chinese Bureau of Missouri, who was stricken to death so suddenly and so recently, it looks and filibustering have availed him nothing in his.

A pet scheme of the ladies, under the auspices of the Woman's Relief Corps, is to have a portrait of Mrs. Cleveland hung in the White House. It is said she would receive universal commendation, has been crushed by the following:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, }
MRS. M. I. LUNDIN. }

DEAR MADAM—Responding for Mrs. Cleveland I myself to your note in relation to procuring her portrait for the White House, and fully appreciating the kindness of the ladies of the W. R. C. I am sure we correspond to the wishes of Mrs. Cleveland in saying that the proposed action in the matter should be an entire abandonment of the scheme. Yours, very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

The menu is out for the inaugural supper, not so the cabinet selection. Senator Allison begins to waver in his resolution not to accept the Treasury portfolio. Blaine's friends are still sure he will be President-elect upon the special occasion of the latter's retirement from the Senate, and Blaine is not susceptible of but one conclusion. It is said that the parlors of the Ebbitt House, every night for a week past, have been filled to the brim with the Pennsylvania contingent, and the Philadelphia supercargo has been transformed, a place the cabinet, gained the Harrison called Mr. Wanamaker off from his contemplated trip to Europe, and instead of having purchased his wardrobe in Chicago, he arrives here unannounced and proceeds to New York. Blaine is holding a continuous levee at the Normandie. Quay is in Florida threatening revenge on any intruding politician, and Harrison is at his Indianapolis wrestling with the office-seekers, of whom he is reported to have said, "I do not know how I shall get through with it." Yet those who know the Hoosier Schoolmaster, believe he says he never saw so many. What will he think when he reaches the White House?

BUSINESS OF THE ATCHISON.

Report for the Year 1888—An Estimated Net Income of $1,400,000.

Joseph W. Reinhart, Comptroller and General Auditor of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Road, has submitted advance sheets of the full report for twelve months ending Nov. 30, 1888, which show the following results:

Mileage, Atchison system proper, 3,093.78 miles; gross earnings, $12,267,000; expenses, $8,866,000; net earnings, $3,375,000; receipts from interest on bonds of said roads owned by Atchison and used as collateral, $99,000; total net earnings, $3,474,000; direct fixed charges, interest on bonds and rentals, $2,074,000; sinking fund requirements, $4,518,246; net profit, $619,—; balance on other sources, $46,000; total profit, $1,665,999; dividends, $2,625,000; deficiency, $1,959,001; gross debt original-ing in the period, $8,643,394; offsets, $3,057,—412; net floating debt, $5,585,982; supplies on hand as an offset to future operating expenses, $1,000,000; net floating debt, $4,585,982 was due and payable prior to Nov. 1, 1889.

Of guaranty notes subscribed for in 1887, payable in three, four and five years, Nov. 30, 1888, $3,000,000, leaving $6,000,000 called nor paid in. The total income surplus Dec. 31, 1888, was $7,940,000. The deficiency for the eleven months ending Nov. 30, 1888, and the net general income surplus to that date $6,381,022, but the addition of various sundry surplus accounts swells this amount so that the total general surplus Nov. 30 was $9,349,000. The estimated net profit from operations, after all charges for the month of December, is $350,000. The total net deficiency of the company for the twelve months ending Dec. 31, 1888, is estimated at $1,400,001.

From actual statements to Nov. 30 and approximates for December the auxiliary roads of the Atchison system, inclusive of those owned jointly, will show that they have failed to earn fixed charges of all descriptions by about $3,000,000. Of this they have contributed about $1,800,000, the remainder having been advanced by the Atchison company.

The Boston Advertiser says regarding the report, that it is considerably beaten out of a mileage of about 7,194 miles the report of last year showed, and the mileage of the present varies from that published June 3, 1889, in that gross earnings for the eleven months are $97,363 larger, expenses $55,719 larger, and net earnings $18,357 smaller.

STRANGE what queer languages are spoken in this country. A Western paper in a local item, recently told of "a regular old razooper, who, having got a skate on, indulged in a glorious razzle-dazzle."

JOHN W. ALEXANDER, the young portrait painter, does all his work with his left hand. He is thought to bear a striking resemblance to Vandyck, with his pointed beard and up-curling mustache.

VANCE'S LITTLE POEM

A Night Session of the Senate Enlivened by a Pungent Rhyming Effort on the Beauties of Protection.

[Washington special.]

The talk on the wood schedule was resumed, and the Senate at once became very belligerent. Vest, of Missouri, was the principal champion, and was joined by Eli Saulsbury and others, while John Sherman did most of the talking for the Republicans. Senator Vance set relaxation and good humor in the day by reading in splendid style the following pastoral, which he said was a part of the tariff bill, which was stocking: a protective pastoral composed and arranged for protectionists, and which they should be elevated to that devoted friend of protection and industry, the Hon. Benjamin Harrison from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich:

Our May bed a little more than kin
And her heart was most intent
To make its vest beyond its wont
Bring 50 per cent.

But a passer grit across the sea
Had one small lamb also
Whose vest for some time half that sum
Sheed whimpy six go.

Another grit said to sheep,
Nor stocking—wool nor flax—
Shall ever come to your house to
A pair without the tax.

Next to the nursery bed to grow
Some wool in small for'n'
Will make the stockings of flax.
But both of wool complete.

When Mary saw the grit's design
Her little heart was sore
Which made her pray her wool and tax
Or she would see no more.

So she cried out: "Protect reform!
Let my poor lamb be free
If it will keep both her legs warm
What will remain to me?"

So it was done, and people said,
Who saw that lamb go out
One leg was wanted with wool and one
With 25 per cent.

Now, praise to Mary and her lamb,
Who did this wonder
To clothe one-half a girl in wool
And one-half in flax.

All honor, too, to Mary's friend,
And all protective sets
That cheaply clothe the rich in wool
And the poor in flax.

The reading of this piece of degreed rare received with loud cheers from the Republican Senators leaning back in their chairs and giving unspeakable vent to laughter. As for the people in the galleries, they screamed and yelled frantically, and when Senator Vance sat down kept up their spontaneous applause until the North Carolina orator gravely inclined his head in acknowledgment.

Mr. Vest offered the following unique petition from one of his constituents:

To the Senate of the United States:

I, Henry K. Chase, a citizen of St. Louis, Mo., do hereby petition and other decists of the United States and claim as I do, respectfully ask you to grant a bounty of $1 per each tooth filled and extracted, for the preservation of those teeth in order to encourage the American industry, and thereby encourage competition among dentists, which will lower prices to patients, and, moreover, encourage immigration of dentists from all parts of the world to this country, thereby making a better market for home and foreign dentists and other products of home industry; the cash for this purpose to be taken out of the general Treasury of the United States for the purpose aforesaid.

The Republican Tariff Bill.

It is a blessed fact to the country that the measure driven through the Senate, according to its promises, and designed ostensibly to reduce taxation, will not be passed by the House without a releasing feature, and has as many iniquities as Mr. Randall's bill. It is not likely to be passed even the Senate—which has a majority in it made up of representative monopolists—if it were not for the knowledge that the Democratic majority would not and would not be assented to by the House. It is a fact, that if the unfortunate men in the country than the Senate, who fashioned and fathered it by our responsibility the country were compelled to pass under its yoke, and the Republican party would be made to feel the force of our dejection.

The policy in framing the bill was to put in everything the fat-yielding monopolies asked. It is true a schedule which was artfully postponed until the last hours—there was an irreconcilable difference between the protectionist woolmakers and the protectionist woolen manufacturers; and the only way the protectionist Senators could devise to "even up" things was to increase the tariff in many instances so as to make it operative to an extent hitherto unheard of the reason is a substitute which gives satisfaction to no one, and which, if it went into effect, would be a decree to the ruin of an industry of the United States, and be necessarily injurious to the wool-grower, although the value of his wool is increased, for the prosperity of the woolen manufacturer is essential to the life of wool-grower.

Possibly some Republican Senators are of the opinion that it was a good idea to load their bill with unpopular impositions, having in mind the possibility of a compromise between them and House on the basis of splitting the difference between the Senate bill and Mills' bill. If this were the idea they have overshot the mark by the enormity of their proposition, and have rendered it almost certain that nothing will be done at this session of Congress in the way of reducing taxation. If the bill had been framed with honesty of purpose—if instead of making a special effort to throw cheap sops to every protected interest, the sentiment of the country for tariff reform had been in the least regarded—there might be ground for hoping that some adjustment of the tariff question on the part of the House and Government of the Fifteenth Congress; but the Republicans in the Senate have set their way.

We have charged that the measure is a dishonest one, and that Republicans got a skate on, indulged in a glorious country if it represented accomplished facts in legislation. The tone of Mr. Vance's poem, and other decists of the United States and claim as I do, respectfully ask you to grant a bounty of $1 per each tooth filled and extracted, for the preservation of those teeth in order to encourage the American industry, and thereby encourage competition among dentists, which will lower prices to patients, and, moreover, encourage immigration of dentists from all parts of the world to this country, thereby making a better market for home and foreign dentists and other products of home industry; the cash for this purpose to be taken out of the general Treasury of the United States for the purpose aforesaid.

A DELIGHTFUL COUNTRY

AUTHENTIC STATISTICS IN REGARD TO DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Its Assessed Valuation, Banks, Newspapers, Schools, and Churches—Largest Yield of Any State or Territory—An Array of Facts for Home-Seekers.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

MANDAN, Dak., Jan. 21, 1889.

No section of the Union has received more attention in the last five years than Dakota, owing to its wonderful growth, and now comes the report of the assessors of the Territory. In 1885 there was not a town for a thousand miles west of the Mississippi and north of the Indian nations of Montana, except military posts, and towns and cities scattered along the railroads like pearls on a string, and the Territory laid claim to leadership in population and wealth. It has an assessed valuation of one hundred and sixty-two million dollars; twenty-five states have fewer banks; only fourteen have more newspapers, and the schools outnumber those of California, with three times the population. Instead of being entirely a wide plain, the Territory is cut up by a network of streams, many miles of navigable rivers, besides numerous lakes, and the surface is rolling, with veins of coal, and coal gives to North Dakota the boast of being called a "portable climate." Cold can be kept out, but not heat. A good many coal mines have already been opened up along the Northern Pacific Railroad, the veins varying in thickness from three to twelve feet. Farmers in many localities get their supplies from the outcroppings in the hill sides. The fifth congressional district of the Territory is in the Black Hills, where are some of the richest gold mines in the world.

AS LARGE AS THE EASTERN STATES.

Dakota, long famous as the land of milk and honey, is now beginning to be known as a country where the land is not excelled by the world for wheat, corn, and all the other products of the farm, and the cattle and sheep industry is fast growing into prominence. In the grassy slits of the Dakota hills are nutritious grasses, the soil of the broad slopes and valleys is rich, and the climate is the same as that of the North. The country is well watered by the Missouri, Cheyenne, Big Sioux, Jacksonville, Little Minnesota and other streams, along which there is considerable growth of timber and wild fruits. The climate is milder than in Eastern Dakota, owing to the hills, which break the force of the north winds, and to the influence of the Chinook breezes from the Rocky Mountains. Snow does not lie long in Minnesota. There is more water in Dakota, and more rivers than in Eastern Dakota, fuel costs but little, and stone is abundant for building purposes; but, more than all, tree lots and groves can still be had in abundance at the cars, an advantage not found anywhere else in the United States in a prosperous farming region. To open a farm on a frontier section of land means the creation of a property worth from $1,500 to $2,000, but it takes work. The chief town of Western Dakota, the Eden and Hills not be-yond, is Mandan, three miles from the Missouri, and the Northern Pacific bridge across the Missouri, the only place the big Muddy is bridged in Dakota. Mandan is county seat of Morton County, and to whatever degree the reader will of vastness of Dakota, we give a diagram of the county, which contains over 2,000 square miles of land, and large enough to allow the states of Rhode Island and Delaware to be spread over its ample bosom. The present population of Morton County is about 6,000, could be increased to 40,000 and yet two-thirds of it is still unoccupied land. Recent visitors from Dakota, what large is to Eastern Dakota, Sioux Falls to South Eastern Dakota, and Deadwood to the Black Hills.

Traveling in Comfort.

The old man had just arrived at his son's house from the country.

"Well, father," said the boy, "I hope you came through in the sleeping car, as I told you to, and had a good night's sleep."

The old man smiled a sickly, sarcastic smile. "O, yes," he said, "I had a good sleep, first-rate sleep; went to bed early."

"Did you wake up during the night?"

"Only twice; only went to sleep twice."

"Say, father!" said the young man, "you've got two great bumps on top of your forehead. What have you been doing?"

"Them's the two times I woke up; passed another train both times, and when I heard the big engine whizzin' by an' the bell ringin' I thought 'twas a fire an' jumped up plan agin the ceilin'. It's lucky I was awake one time, though."

"Why, how so?"

"The high an' mighty importer that lighted when I set to go to my room early in the evenin' was sneaking off with my boots."

"Why, he was only going to shine them for you."

"Oh, yes, he said the old man. "I never set him to shine 'em. Anyway, I took 'em to bed with me the night an' never slep' another wink. Say, Henry, you ain't got an old pair of suspenders, have ye?"

"I guess I can find a pair for you, pa."

"Busted mine tryin' to put my pantaloons on layin' down. Done it, though, got all dressed layin' flat—boots, pantaloons, coat, collar, necktie—hull business."

"Why didn't you get out of the berth to put on your clothes, pa?"

"Winmin in the car. Got a handy place where I kin wash up, Henry. There was a lady in the berth next to me an' I pumped some, but this morning you see I had to wash what I could in the sink. Say, Henry, what time's dinner ready? I'm so hungry I bin eatin' my knickers."

"Didn't you get breakfast in the dining-car as I told you to?"

"Oh, yes," said the old man, "O, yes, but I didn't want to do it, too expensive, so I told the fellow I'd just take a cup of coffee an' some buckwheat pancakes."

"Pretty light breakfast, that's so," said Henry.

"Yes," said the old man, "light breakfast; two pancakes."

"Well, come down stairs and we'll fix up something to eat right away. You must be ready for dinner."

"Charged me a dollar," continued the old man. "Feller set next to me eatin' grapes an' oranges an' oysters an' stewed chicken an' biled eggs, and I don't know what all. When we got back in the bedroom car I told him I calculated that breakfast to set cost 31. An' then he fell down an' made me a dollar anyway, whether you eat much or little. I wuld rather trade more about that, Henry."

"Well, father, a man can ride pretty comfortably nowadays after he gets used to it," said Henry as he started to the bathroom for a wash.

"Yes, ores, a man can rade all right now," replied the old man. And he smile lasted until he started to wash his face from the lavacre over the bath tub.—Detroit Free Press.

Jay Gould's Tricks.

Jay Gould at one time owned half the capital stock of the Western Union Telegraph Company. He started a short time ago he had about $30,000,000. It is stated that he has about half that amount at present. The way he came to decrease his holding was characteristic.

In the operation the "street" generally "landed" on a rise which stopped and became a decline before the figure that he was trying to reach was reached.

As those who were caught tell it, a pool in Western Union was formed, it is stated, and, of from 175,000 to 125,—000 shares, Gould was to take one-fifth of the stock in the pool. The stock was down at fifty-three when the first buying began. The point was that Gould was to get sixty-five.

The shorts began to cover and the "street" began to buy around sixty for a profit on the long side. Gould sold, through brokers, to both the pool and the traders. The pool did not know that it was getting Gould stock, but supposed that Gould was holding in, and that the clique was taking the "street" stock and would soon make it scarce.

The stock reached 65½, and before anybody could say Jack Robinson it was back to 50, and everybody was loaded—except Gould. He had got rid of a lot of stock at better prices than the market would have afforded in any other way, which he could, if he wanted to, buy back at a lower figure. This is one of Gould's tricks.

He will take an interest in a pool which is formed to buy locos lots in the "street" and thus make the stock scarce, and will secretly sell to the pool from his own holdings. He can do this without detection, for the reason that as established, the most of the stock is in other people's hands.—Jay Gould.

LEVOCHEO, a Russian peasant, has, after ten years' work, discovered a treasure upon land that formed a part of the estate of Prince Ostersky, whose ancestors were plundered and driven from their homes by the Tartars a long time ago. The discovery includes manuscripts and other articles of value besides the gold. The peasant gets one-third and the Czar the rest of it.

Encounter with a Lion.

Thrilling was the encounter of Lieutenant Frazer in his encounter with a lion in the base of the mountains of Lekinga, near Lake Bangweolo, where Doctor Livingstone died. He was told by one of his attendants that a wounded lion was lying apparently dead on the other side of the tree, and the men with his second gun back a few paces, and kind down to look. Just then the lion roared and came at him from a few eighteen feet off. He fired when the lion was within six feet of him, giving him both barrels. The first shot knocked out the beast's right eye; the second hit him on the chest. The first instant Frazer found himself lying in front of the lion, one claw hooked in his right leg, the other on his chest. Fortunately the blood from the wounded eye obscured the lion's vision, and for an instant he hesitated, and in that interval the attendant fired at him. The lion jumped for the man and caught him by the leg, and Frazer promptly sprang to the rear. The gun, containing one charge, was lying within a yard of the lion, fortunately on his blind side, and Frazer crawled toward it. It was about 5 feet, but he finally laid his hand on the gun. As he did so, the lion came for him again, and Frazer fired, with the muzzle of the gun actually in the lion's mouth. He fell on his back and shot the lion, and Frazer fainted on the body of his attendant.

The Chill Blast

That sets the naked branches a-quivering is not felt by the wealthy valetudinarian indoors, but by all other persons it is felt even in the bed, nor all the furnace heat that anthracite can produce, nor all the clothing and bed-clothes and fever runs its fury fingers along his spinal column. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the chief, every ready and sure resort for the chilled and aguish frame, to remedy the fever fever and exhaustion which accompany the chill. Dumb ague, ague cake, bilious remittent—in short, every ague, in its mildest form, disease is assignedly the potent, and at the same time, wholesome remedy. Constipation, biliousness, constipation, dyspepsia, sick headaches, loss of appetite and nervous troubles, rheumatism, fever and debility are also remedied by it. Use it with persistence to effect a thorough cure.

Household Economy.

"How to Live on a Thousand a Year," in Table Talk: Besides the purchase, care and preparation of food, there is another item that there are a hundred other ways of economizing in the matter of time. Time to the housewife, is money, consequently: purchase such material as will save both. Time is saved in the washing, eggs with a fork, when, for ten cents, a beater can be purchased that will do the work in one-tenth of the time. A Swiss roller will save much time in ironing. Time is of no danger of scorching and wasting food. A meat chopper and braising pan will save to use the cheaper pieces of meat. There are many other utensils which save time and strength to intelligent hands, but, as women are not machinists, so many excellent machines come to grief from lack of understanding. All unnecessary utensils should not be indulged in.

A Radical Cure for Epileptic Fits.

To the editor of the medical and dental records that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. I warrant to cure the worst cases. So strong is my faith in the virtues of the remedy that I will send free a sample bottle and valuable treatise to any sufferer who will give me his P. O. and Express address. My remedy acts like magic and cures fits. Address Dr. G. Root, N. C., 183 Pearl street, New York.

Keep to the Right.

A quaint sermon on temperance was given by an Englishwoman of wealth and position to an American friend. It related to the method of preserving a stair-carpet, and to keep it in its entirety as long as possible. She and her husband had agreed, the one to keep always to the right going up and down, and the other to walk only upon the left-hand side of the carpet. It was expected that the company would keep exclusively in the center of the stairway, and thus, by dint of the arrangement, the stair-carpet would grow old with equal rapidity.

Catarrh Cured.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a recipe which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence Warren street, New York City, will receive the recipe free of charge.

Sugar or Salt.

Experiments made for the French Minister of Agriculture indicate that sugar is a better preservative of meat than salt. It is more expensive, but the powdered sugar forms a coating retaining the juices of the meat without loss, while the nutritive qualities of the meat are considerably lessened by the salt.

Worth Remembering.

That in all cases of croup delays are dangerous. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is almost certain to save the life of the child. Hamlin's Wizard Oil is a specific for croup, and relieves the most severe paroxysm immediately. Use no other than these.

The Expression "Too Thin."

This is the phrase "too thin," as ordinarily used by schoolboys and others, may now be styled vulgar, the words may be used in a perfectly orthodox manner. "Thin" is equivalent to "transparent," easily seen through, and as a metaphor, seems to involve the aid of a veil (such as the ancients call nenia tex fils, or "woven wind"), which served to display as much as to conceal the person. It is in this sense evidently that Shakspeare used the words in "King Henry VII.," act 2, scene 2, where the King says:

"Two women placed together makes cold weather."

Bishop Winchester. But I cannot tell What you and I mean to do. They are too thin and bare to hide secrets."

"Thin" is now used to mean anything transparent to hide your

Another instance of the use of the words may be found in Smollett's novel of "Peregrine Pickle," published in 1751. When the hero suddenly informs his lady-love, Amelia, that he is going abroad, the tears gushed into her eyes, and she was at great pains to conceal the cause of her grief by chiding her husband for his want of taste as to make her eyes water. "This pretext," says Sindbad, "was too thin to impose on her lover, or to deceive the observation of her friend Sophy." There is nothing vulgar in the phrase that a pretext is "too thin," and this is what is meant by the modern elliptical phrase.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack whenever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame." Civil Service Gazette.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Inwood.

Thermometer 6° below.

No religious services were held at the Hilton school house Sunday on account of the funeral of Mrs. Vanornum.

Jas. Hemmings spent Sunday with Jason Bolton and family.

The recent storm has made the roads almost impassable in places.

Edwin Cook has returned from Cheboygan with a lame horse.

Dr. N. J. Perry made a flying trip to Norwood last week.

School at the Hilton school house will close next week, for a six weeks vacation.

O. D. Hilton spent Saturday in Charlevoix.

Edwin Cook Sr. is having his well overhauled and dug deeper. Mr. Gordon of Ellsworth doing the work.

Miss Carrie Hilton is now in St. Louis, Mich., visiting relatives. She will remain an indefinite period, visiting in Saginaw and other places before returning home.

Hon. Wm. Harris arrived home from Lansing on Saturday to remain two weeks. No change can be detected in his countenance since his departure from Norwood, and old friends are glad to greet him.

James Hemmings has been employed the past week in papering and graining the parlors of O. D. Hilton's residence, and the fine appearance of the rooms since finished show the excellent skill of the workman.

Wilson.

Snowing again.

Four below zero on Sunday evening and 10 below on Tuesday evening.

The school is going on finely; 17 pupils are now enrolled.

John Inman has moved his family into their new house on their place in this vicinity. Welcome John.

Two hundred and fifty thousand feet of logs brought in the mill yard during last month. Of those 112,000 have been cut out and over 70,000 delivered at East Jordan.

Mr. Cunningham, saw-hammerer of Boyne City, called at the mill on business Monday morning.

Miss Josephine Deitz has returned from Chicago, where she has been stopping for a few months.

The saints had prayer meeting at Preble's on Sunday afternoon.

Dan Folsom had his head cut badly with a falling skid, while decking logs in the mill yard on Tuesday last. He is able to be around again.

Jasper Warden and Josephine Deitz, both of this township, were married at Boyne City on Monday last. A small party was held at their residence in the evening. Long life and happiness to them is the wish of their many friends.

Advance.

Feb. 4.—Miss Dollie Newson and Peter Tuttle of Eveline township were married at Boyne City Saturday Feb. 2d.

"Tis over thus in nature's bower,
Man comes and plucks the fairest flower,
Miss Dollie Newson is no more,
For now she's Mrs. Tuttle.

Three of John Healey's children have been quite sick but are now on the gain.

Dan Meville, it is reported will have a fully equipped livery stable at this place soon.

A reading circle is soon to be organized here and will be made still more interesting by an occasional lecture.

We understand that Peter Karlskin intends to add to his stock of boots and shoes, a general stock of merchandise next spring.

Does any one know whether the bear saw his shadow last Saturday? It doesn't make much difference in this part of the footstool, as we shall undoubtedly have six weeks more of winter anyway and no thanks to the bear either.

Mr. Cole has traded his farm of 80 acres near Advance to a man living in Oakland county for a farm near Watertown in the "land of the Lokotas." Mr. Cole was a good citizen, and as such we disliked to have him leave us. We wish him success in his new home.

Eveline.

Feb. 7.—This looks something like winter; plenty of snow and the people around here are improving their time getting out logs and wood. The company have got over twenty thousand cords of wood in their yard already in spite of the lack of snow.

Mr. Thorp has rented Box's saw mill and intends to make good use of it.

Mr. Waldron has purchased a yoke of oxen of Mr. Henshaw.

Charley Jackson and wife have settled down to house keeping in one of the cottages on front street.

The Congregational ladies will give a pink social at the residence of Mrs. Adams on Thursday evening. The Helping Hand society will also hold a social at the residence of Mr. Purvis on Friday evening, the proceeds to go toward purchasing a carpet for the M. E. church.

Mrs. Sarah Saunders has been quite sick for several weeks; and we also hear that Mrs. R. Miller is among the sick ones.

[The school report for the Ironton district is unavoidably crowded over to next week.—ED. JOURNAL.]

Burgess.

Jan. 29.—Spelling school at Gibson school house last Thursday evening; was well attended and Miss Lee Marsac stood up the last. There is to be another this week Thursday at school house No. 6.

I. S. Webster returned from Alanson on Monday, where he has been visiting since Friday. They have 18 to 20 inches of snow there.

Miss Ella Adams closes a successful term of three months school in district No. 4, Feb. 1st.

Mr. McDermot has nine teams hauling wood on his job.

The lumbermen in this section are rushing their logs out lively.

John Brown and family and Miss Ella Adams were visiting friends in Horton's Bay last Sunday.

Morel Long of Bay was visiting friends in Hayes last Sunday.

Everyone is pleased that our thaw of last Friday caught cold and turned to snow.

The merchants of this town are generally stocking up.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by torpid liver and dyspepsia. After using several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continued it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it at first, but it gradually grew so well attended and Miss Lee Marsac stood up the last. There is to be another this week Thursday at school house No. 6.

I. S. Webster returned from Alanson on Monday, where he has been visiting since Friday. They have 18 to 20 inches of snow there.

FROM NEW MEXICO.

Notes and Opinions of That Country by A. D. Cruickshank.

In describing these Old Mexican towns it is curious to note how the customs of the people coincide with those who live in the same style of towns or cities in the ancient lands. As the ass is the constant attendant upon the Turk and Mohammedan of the land of Judea, so it is here, the ass, or what is called here the burro, is the property of the Mexican. He owns the burro if nothing else. The burro acts as a beast of burden and a beast of pleasure to the Mexican. It is a curious sight to see a long train of these curious animals coming down from the mountains with wood piled upon their backs, (and such a quantity is piled on as only a Mexican knows how) so that there is but very little of the burro seen but his head and ears, and enough behind to prod with a sharp stick to make him go ahead. If there is room enough for the Mexican he will be mounted behind the load with his feet very nearly dragging on the ground. Many of them yet stick to the old plow made from a crooked stick with a burro hitched to it to till their land.

The farmers are already plowing their fields and getting their ditches ready for operation, and are expecting a fine harvest next summer, because there is plenty of snow in the mountains. The river will be high and irrigation will be easy. There is a good home market here for all that is raised because there is not enough raised to supply the market. The ranches and mines require a great deal, and sufficient advancement has not been made to meet the demand, so that prices are good for all kinds of vegetables, eggs, fruits, butter, grain, etc. A man has the whole year to do the work on the farm and is not crowded for fear of the snow or frost.

I have looked over some pieces of property near the city of Albuquerque, and shall investigate a little more, but I am going to risk an investment here, and I can see money in it. The lawyers here seem to have plenty to do with good fees.

Under date of Jan. 31, Mr. Cruickshank wrote from Juarez, Old Mexico, on the Mexican Central railroad:

We have looked the town (Mexican of course) over today and have traveled some miles into the country looking over the very fine vineyards. They are something to admire. There are acres of solid vineyard, all inclosed with a high mud wall, also some fine orchards of peaches, pears and tropical fruits. Although the month is January they are plowing and sowing making gardens, irrigating their lands, and the sun and weather is so warm that you feel uncomfortable in the middle of the day with a light coat. The climate is grand; the sun shines every day through a clear atmosphere. On the mountains there is snow which gleams with a peculiar lustre in the bright sunlight and makes the spectacle very pleasing to the view.

We wandered to the base of some mountains on the westward and Frank and I picked up some very fine agates.

We visited a very ancient Mexican grave yard and found the graves made, or many of them, just as you have seen representations of eastern burying grounds: the coffin placed upon a flat stone and a vault built around it, and a flat stone laid upon top, others are buried in the ground, —I suppose the poorer class. Here we found human bones scattered around the yard, having been thrown up. I suppose, when digging new graves. The ground seems to be filled full, and they are burying anew in the old. There is about an acre of land, or perhaps more, surrounded by a high adobe wall with an arch gate way and the gates or doors are locked.

The town is peculiar—the people more so. Long narrow streets with here and there an opening for a door or window, all the same height and style, whether a dwelling, store, shop or hotel,—no difference in the outward appearance.

There is a large bull pen here, and there into be a grand bull fight with men on horseback; ten bulls to be fought, and as many men and horses are to test their skill. We have taken reserved seats, bound to see all that goes on. Hope to see some of the bulls get the best of the fight. Will leave this country after the fight and visit to a Mexican church where they all sit on the floor (or rather the ground) for service, no seats in the church. We are both well. Frank as well as a boy. We are enjoying ourselves very much and will know where to go for good winter quarters. Will tell you more of this country when I return.

A. D. CRUICKSHANK.

An Early Spring.

Chief Signal Officer Greeley, of the weather department, has expressed the belief that the present mild weather indicates an early spring. He says:

"The significance of the unusual weather conditions for the past seven months can be explained only with reference to the abnormal distribution of atmospheric pressure over the northern hemisphere. Under the doctrine of averages we could easily look for an open mild winter since the late spring and summer was cooler than usual, and to counterbalance the deficiency of temperature in the spring and summer there should be an excess in the winter just now occurring. This, however, cannot be regarded as responsible for future prophecies since the scientific use of average can only refer to very long periods and cannot be safely referred to in special short periods such as six month or a year in case of temperature and rainfall. My personal opinion is that no one has reasonable ground for predicting a late spring on the simple basis of the present winter being so far mild and open.

A Good Suggestion.

A correspondent of the Petoskey Democrat calls attention to the recent boiler explosion in Emmet county, and says: "It is a well known fact that steam-boat engineers pass a thorough examination before entering upon their duties and have their "papers." Railway engineers serve a long and thorough apprenticeship before they are entrusted with a locomotive. But with a stationary engine it is very different. A man who can build a fire in an arch or firebox is well qualified to perform the duties of a stationary engineer; hence the frequent occurrence of boiler explosions with terrible loss of life and property. Without going into the details of cases that have come under my observation, let me suggest that a law be passed creating a board of examiners to consist, say, of the county clerk and two expert engineer to examine all persons who wish to engage in the business of running engines. The applicant to pay a fee sufficient to pay for the examination and certificate of same."

A Curious Coincidence.

At almost the same hour the Charlevoix school house was burning, a school house was burning in Cincinnati. A teacher on the ground floor saw burning coals falling down the hot air shaft from which the register opens. She knew the building was on fire. There are 700 pupils on the three floors. She gave the fire alarm in the prescribed way, and the teachers instantly marshaled their pupils as if they were soldiers and marched them out in as cool a way as were down one stairway, while the firemen were running up another with their hose. Not a sign of panic was seen, except in the person of the janitress. The fire was in the roof, caused by a defective flue, and was subdued with a loss of $2,000. The teachers have a fire alarm drill for the purpose of meeting such emergencies as this one, and no doubt saved life thereby.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

A New House of Worship—A Credit to the Society and to Charlevoix.

We give this week a view of the new Baptist church just completed, on the east side of State street, between Mason and Clinton. The location is a good one, and the surroundings will be pleasant when finally completed. The work of erection was begun in August, and the walls were enclosed before cold weather began. The work of finishing the inside has progressed steadily and was completed about the first of the present month, although the lecture room in the basement has been occupied for regular services since Dec. 23d.

The building has a front of 50 feet on State street, and extends eastward 60 feet. In height it is 25 feet to the eaves, 55 feet to the peak of the roof, and 88 feet to the top of the spire. The basement contains a lecture room 21x45 feet, and a parlor 10x18 feet, connected by double doors, for the Sunday School, a kitchen 10x17 feet to be furnished with all the necessaries of a successful social supper, and a woodhouse and furnace room 14x30 feet, supplied also with a well.

The audience room above is reached by an easy flight of stairs, ascending about five feet to a landing, then rising in opposite directions, so as to occupy but a small space, and yet give plenty of room. The audience room is 32x46 feet, and will comfortably seat about 250 people. There is a gallery over the vestibule which will accommodate about 75 more. The floor of the audience room slopes to the eastward, and the pulpit is a little above the highest seats. The room is wainscoted about four feet high with birch and ash with oil finish, the side walls are plastered, and the ceiling is of ash with birch trimmings, in panels, oil finished. The highest point of ceiling above the floor is about 25 feet. The room is lighted with a 16 lamp Wheeler reflector, which lights the entire room sufficient to read ordinary print of hymn books. The colored windows were furnished by the Wells Glass Co., of Chicago, and are unique, as well as appropriate in style and effect. They cast a subdued and pleasing light over the room, whether it be clear or cloudy outside. The seating and other furniture of audience room is yet to be provided. For the present common chairs are used, but opera chairs or good pews will doubtless be put in during the ensuing year.

The building is heated by one of Washburn & Ackerts' Charlevoix furnaces, which makes it very comfortable even on the coldest days.

The erection of the building has been under the general direction of the board of trustees, and Alex. Cameron had special charge of the construction, including frame, roof, and finish, with a competent corps of workmen. The mason work was done by Charles Lamereaux, A. F. Myers, and John Cook, and the painting and glazing by James Hemmings, Chas. E. Swallow and Levi Lamphear.

The building has cost so far, about $4,000, all of which is provided for. The church has this week received from the American Baptist Home Mission Society a gift of $300, and a loan of $400, which leaves the property entirely free from other debt.

The securing of this property has been a large undertaking and could never have been accomplished without the generous aid received from resort friends, notably gifts aggregating nearly $600, from Mrs. O. S. Gulley, of Detroit. With a large number of other donations ranging from $5 to $100. The citizens of Charlevoix have also given liberally.

This work was inaugurated by the late Dr. Edward Olney at a meeting held in his cottage in the summer of 1886. Since that time the work has moved steadily forward, in a way to convince us that we have in Charlevoix a live and vigorous Baptist church.

HISTORICAL.

This church was organized July 5, 1879, with Rev. A. M. Parmenter as pastor. Mr. Parmenter closed his pastorate in 1882, and for four years the church was without a pastor. In 1886 the church was reorganized with a membership of sixteen.

The present pastor, W. G. Clark began his pastorate April 1, 1886. He is a worker,—a hustler,—and has labored early and late, in season and out, for the success of this undertaking, as well as for the spiritual strength and growth of the society. A portion of his reward will be the satisfaction of having a pleasant and comfortable house of worship, large enough to accommodate the society for a number of years, and said to be the best church edifice in the county.

The church now numbers 38 members, with a Sunday school of 45 members. The trustees are Messrs. C. Y. Cook, Stillman Parker, R. W. Kane, A. T. Washburne, and A. J. Mudge.

Special School Meeting.

At the special school meeting at the village hall last night, it was voted to rent Green's hall for the use of Miss O'Neills department, and the basement of the Baptist church for Miss Mason's and Miss Stover's departments.

A committee of three, consisting of S. M. See, Dr. Lewis, and J. Milo Eaton, was appointed to act with the school board in making the necessary arrangements to put the school in good working order, and the necessary expenses of the committee were voted to be paid out of the insurance money.

The same committee were instructed to look up plans and designs for another school house, and report to an adjourned meeting to be held March 29th. The prevailing sentiment is for one large building of sufficient capacity to accommodate the entire school, and to cost not less than eight or ten thousand dollars.

After the meeting adjourned, the committee organized by electing L. D. Bartholomew chairman and R. W. Kane secretary. The committee will hold frequent meetings; and will be glad to receive suggestions from anyone having plans for whole buildings, parts of buildings, systems of ventilation, or any other features necessary to a complete school house.

Just before going to press we understand that the contract for seats and supplies has been awarded to the Union School Furniture Co., of Battle Creek.

The Deception

The full legislative committees of both senate and house arrived on Tuesday evening for the official visit to the asylum. There were in the party Senators Leavitt, Galbraith, McCormick, Griffey and Gorman and Representatives H. W. Browne, Dunnon, W. W. Williams, McMillan and Ferguson. They spent the entire day, Wednesday, at the institution, not returning south until Thursday morning. A very thorough inspection was made, and close inquiry was made into the needs and requirements of the institution. There is a total capacity now, including the new cottage which was recently completed, of 615, and there are to day 590 patients cared for, leaving but 16 vacancies. The net yearly average increase for the last three years has been 88.

Democratic State Convention.

The democrats of Michigan will meet in state convention in Hartman's hall, at Grand Rapids

ON THURSDAY, FEB. 26th, 1890,

At 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating one candidate for Justice of the Supreme court and two candidates for Regents of the State University, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: One vice president of the convention and one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business and resolutions.

J. M. WESTON, Chairman.

FRANK H. THOMAS, Secretary.

Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates.

Democratic County Convention.

A democratic county convention will be held at G. W. Crouter's office, Charlevoix, on

FRIDAY, FEB. 22, 1890,

At 2.00 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating four delegates to the state convention to be held at Grand Rapids, on Feb. 26th, and for the transaction of such other business as may be brought before the convention.

Each township is entitled to delegates to said convention as follows: Bay 2, Bear Lake 1, Boyne Valley 2, Chandler 1, Charlevoix 6, Evangeline 3, Eveline 3, Hayes 3, Hudson 1, Marion 2, Melrose 1, Norwood 2, Resort 1, South Arm 4, Springvale 1, Wilson 2.

A. D. CRUICKSHANK,
G. W. CROUTER, Sec'y. Chairman.

THE National Tribune, published at Washington, urges the appointment of Gen. Alger of Michigan to a place in the cabinet.

IT is less than a month until one B. Harrison of Indiana, will be inaugurated president of these glorious United States, and it is less than a month until James G. Blaine, of Maine, will be the president of the said g. u. s.—Charlotte Leader.

AMONG the callers yesterday on president-elect Harrison was the famous ex-confederate guerilla chieftain, Col. Mosby. An Indianapolis dispatch states that he spent the evening in conference with Gen. Harrison, who evidently regards him with a great deal of favor. It is said that Mosby will be one of the confidential southern advisers of the executive. How do the union veterans of the north enjoy the spectacle of the bloodthirsty guerilla leader figuring as a prominent member of the "kitchen cabinet" of a republican president?—Lansing Journal.

IS an article discussing "Wine, dancing, and low necks' at the White House," the Detroit Journal pays the following deserved compliment to Mrs. Cleveland, wife of the president: "Elderly matron as she is, Mrs. Harrison will find it difficult to set a finer social example than the young wife who has made the white house so charming the past three years. She has not only set a good example in the matter of wine-drinking, but she has the reputation of always dressing decently at parties and receptions, no matter how fashionable; refusing to uncover herself for the benefit of the public. In this Mrs. Harrison is reported as agreeing with her. She has also declined to dance round dances, and has in all ways comported herself as a modest woman, without any puritanic or pharisaical rebukes of other people except as her own conduct expressed her dissent from the follies and abuses of fashion."

Henry Secord sent A. B. Paine a postal card on which was written "dead boat." Your Uncle Sam objects to this sort of thing, and Secord has been held in $500 at East Saginaw for trial in the United States court.

An engine almost big enough to turn the earth on its axis was shipped from East Saginaw to Hall & Buell, of Manistique, for their saw mill there. It is one of the Corliss brand, and weighs 35 tons. The fly-wheel alone weighs 28,000 pounds.

A teamster at Nirvana, while unloading a heavy log, made use of a long lever to pry it off. The log went off, but the sleigh bunks tipped and the man went into the air about 20 feet. He came down, however, without any serious injury, but concluded not to unload in that way again.

The Battle Creek Journal says that a stranger drove up to the door of the Charitable Union of Battle Creek a few days ago and asked if he could leave a little meat as a donation. Having been told that he could he went out to his wagon and returned with a quarter of beef, repeating his trips until he had laid three large quarters of beef on the floor. In response to an inquiry as to why he left so much beef, he said: "No one thinks as little about the poor as I do but rather than sell my meat for less than it's worth I'll give it away.

CATARRH.—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B. For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 10o5d

While cutting a basswood tree into logs last week, J. M. and Hiram Brock of Ironton, found a small piece of flinty stone imbedded in the heart of a log 18 inches diameter, and 43 feet above the stump as the tree stood. At the stump, 20 inches diameter, the "rings" showed the tree to have been at least 125 years old. From the appearance of things it would seem that the stone is a piece of arrow head, and probably lodged in the crotch of a limb when the tree was very small, and the wood grew up around it.

Antrim county is proposing to build a new poor-house. The main part of the building will be two stories high, twenty feet wide, and thirty four feet long, with a one story kitchen on 20x20 attached to the rear. Two wings, each 28 feet long and two stories high, extend at right angles from the main building. The lower room will be ten feet in the clear and the upper ones nine. An eight foot basement will extend under the entire main part. The building will be so arranged that the sexes are entirely separate, and forty inmates can be provided for on the lower floor.

WIDE AWAKE.

One of the most delightful of Susan Coolidge's stories, "Who ate the Queen's Luncheon?" opens the February Wide Awake, with a beautiful frontispiece by Garrett. Another short story as singularly humorous, a valentine story, is entitled "The Apple of Discord," and will entertain all the grammar-school boys and girls; it is by Georgiana Washington. "Princess Mayblossom" by Annette Lyster, with its eight pictures, is a dainty fairy story. "Children in Italian Sculpture," by Mable F. Robinson, is a needle art paper for young people, with interesting pictures. The serial stories by J. T. Trowbridge and Margaret Sidney are very popular for family reading—a genial happy home element pervades both; Pinnon's "Arrangement" are irresistible. "The Tupper Children" is a short story of the old war-days by Miss A. G. Plympton, full of dash and fun. "Forty eight Hours a Day" will interest all astronomically minded young folk and their elders as well. "Nonsense Animals" is very amusing and affords a hint for home-fun of an evening. "An Old-Fashioned Boat" is an interesting chapter in the progress of invention, by Ernest Ingersoll. Mrs. Sallie Joy White in her chapter on "The Use of the Oven" tells how potatoes are baked in the Boston public schools. Mrs. Goldard Orpen gives the history of the famous Spanish crown pearl, the Peregrina. Prof. Starr, in his geological series, describes some of the gnawings of "The Tooth of Time." In the new department, "Men and Things," are all sorts of good original anecdotes and breezy "social talk." The poems of the number are many and good, the Ramona, Post-Office, Puzzle and C. Y. F. R. U. sections very full and entertaining. Only $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP.

SENATOR ALLISON DECIDES TO REMAIN IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

The Ok'ahoma Bill Passes the House—The Territorial Question—The Phelps Treaty Rejected—Mrs. Harrison's Inaugural Dress—State Dinners—The Charity Ball—Interesting Gossip About Politicians and Social Lions and Lionesses.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.] WASHINGTON, Feb. 3, 1893.

Allison's peremptory declination of the Treasury portfolio was a veritable bomb against Harrison's deliberately chosen, partially formulated Cabinet slate, necessitating an out and out consultation, and a fortnight many Senatorial hearts with the hope of promotion to the Cabinet of the next President. Among the numerous reports "authoritatively" stated, and in turn denied, is one to the effect that Clarkson, of Iowa, is contemplating a journey across the Atlantic in search of a wife. I know it they was a chance for himself in the Chief Executive's advisory, that he took a trip to Washington and urged his friend Allison to an over hasty decision, soon regretted and controverted by that gentleman. So that as it may, one thing there is no doubt, and that is that the Iowa Senator expressed man's prerogative of changing his mind—not once, but twice—concerning Mr. Harrison's invitation and assuming, the latter still persists in assuming, however, at the request from the Hawkeye State can have a cabinet portfolio but Allison. Messrs. McKinley, Farwell, Cullom, and John C. New are among the Western men whose friends are crying their merits in hope of attracting the especial honor their way.

SENATOR ALLISON.

James G. Blaine and John Wanamaker are named for places in Mr. Harrison's cabinet, while Senator Palmer of Michigan, is favorably mentioned for the new Department of Agriculture, but it will probably go to New York.

Other changes in the Grangers Executive Department are contemplated and now under discussion before the House. Chief of these is the abandonment of experiments in sugar stations and the distribution of seeds from the department to experimental stations, instead or by the members of Congress, a custom which has discriminated against country in favor of city members.

Congressman Weaver is again happy, for Oklahoma bill, after six years of difficulty, and vexatious delays, at last, yesterday, has at last passed the House of Representatives by the surprising majority vote of 155 to 116. But no great a victory is without its disadvantage, and the news of the passage of the bill, even through one branch of the Legislature has been sufficient to set the Oklahoma boomers wild. They are in a frame set at least, and the question is now how to relieve their souls with patience, and deter them from invading the territory before opening it to settlers. The Senate, however, and then issues in charge, promises to be in direction. According to the provisions of the measure, as it passed the House, what is known as 'No Man's Land," or the public land strip, at the north end of the Texas panhandle, together with an irregular-shaped tract occupying the central and northwestern portions of Indian Territory, will be erected into a new Territory, open to settlement in part by homesteaders and in part by pre-emption under stricter regulations than usually apply in such cases. The Senate will probably cut off the pre-emption and the homestead provisions of the claims. It is hardly expected, however, that a measure requiring years to go through the House will pass the Senate and be signed by the President in the brief period between now and the inaugural.

Vice Mr. Weaver assumed the cognomen of the Oklahoma bill, Mr. Springer found bigger fish to fry, as is evidenced in his "omnibus" bill, upon which the Senate and House conferees, yesterday, have finally reached a compromise. This measure, no doubt, that act providing for the admission of the two Dakotas, Washington, and Montana Territories to statehood will pass the Fifteenth Congress, and the number of States in the Union be accordingly increased.

The Senate and Mills tariff bill will hang fire, and the Ways and Means Committee are now interesting themselves in obtaining comparisons from the Treasury Department as to their relative effect on the revenue. Of course this revives all the talk about an extra session of Congress, as Democratic and Republican alike consider some tariff legislation necessary, and appreciate the fact that it will not be accomplished during the present session.

The second day of the coming administration is the one which is interesting railroad companies now, for then the Interstate Commerce Commission contemplate a meeting here with the various State railroad commissioners, at which the vexing questions which have arisen under the interstate commerce law will be discussed, and, it is hoped, remedied.

The Ohio delegation is understood that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company have secured the honor of furnishing President-elect Harrison with a special inaugural train to carry him from Indianapolis to the nation's capital free of charge. A President is a greater man than a railroad company.

Since the Senate have relieved themselves of the incubus of the tariff bill, work has moved along smoothly with but one notable lull. That was when Messrs. Hoar and Edmunds measured sarcasm in the discussion of the Pacific railroad funding treaty, a month ago. Mr. Hoar, however, has recently been from the Hawkeye State can have a cabinet portfolio but Allison. Messrs. McKinley, Farwell, Cullom, and John C. New are among the Western men whose friends are crying their merits in hope of attracting the especial honor their way.

James G. Blaine and John Wanamaker are named for places in Mr. Harrison's cabinet, while Senator Palmer of Michigan, is favorably mentioned for the new Department of Agriculture, but it will probably go to New York.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Advance.

FEB. 11.—What has become of our open winter, without any snow.

The ice is thick enough so that teams begin to travel on the lake.

Miss Aggie Nugent closed the winter term of school at the Beers school house last week.

G. C. VonPlatten has now in his mill yard about six hundred and fifty thousand feet of logs, and he thinks he will have a million feet by spring.

Fred Heller brought three twelve foot elm logs to Pisten's mill which scaled a little over four thousand ft.

Mr. VonPlatten has received and ground at his grist mill about five hundred bushels of buckwheat during the present season. He wants to buy wheat for which he will pay $1.00 per bushel, cash.

George Wood has finished his logging job, and now, when not engaged in the laborious duties devolving upon him as president of the Mutual Insurance Co., can sit by the fire and tell stories the rest of the winter.

P. B. Newton "swore off" on New Year's day, and since that time has indulged in neither a chew or a smoke. Bravo, P. B., and now let the other ones do likewise.

Last Friday night there was a social gathering of Miss Lewis' school, at A. B. Steele's in honor of three of her scholars having gone through their arithmetic—Harper's second book—a feat that has not been accomplished before in Advance at any one term. The scholars are displaying great enthusiasm in all their studies.

Boyne City.

FEB. 11—Mrs. Wm. White of this place died Saturday, Feb. 9th, in Woodstock, Ont. Mrs. White has been a great sufferer for some months. About two months since she went to the above named place for the winter hoping to improve in health. But one week ago Saturday Mr. White received a telegram stating that she was failing fast and wished to see him and the children immediately. Mr. White started the same day with his two children aged five and two respectively. He found his wife very low, but perfectly rational. She calmly bade her husband and children good bye, saying she loved every one and was dying happy. Mr. White will return with his children on the 13th to their desolate home. He has the deep sympathy of many friends.

On the 11th Charles Rounds near Bear Lake was unfortunate enough to have a cow get through the ice and when gotten out she was so chilled that she died in a short time.

Miss Edith Cole, of South Arm, was the guest of Mrs. A. E. Martin over Sunday.

Wednesday, the 6th, the thermometer registered 18 degrees below zero, the coldest point for the preceding 24 hours, and the lowest it has been this winter.

Wilson.

25° below zero on Wednesday morning.

The East Jordan Lumber Co. has fifteen teams hauling logs from their place in this vicinity.

Robert McMillan of Echo, called at the mill on Saturday last.

P. L. Lanway has bought a team. Willard Morehouse is now drawing lumber with them from the Vance mill.

Messrs. Blakely and Harris of Eastport, are drawing lumber for Palmiter Bros.

We hear that James Sinclair of Banks, who formerly worked here in the mill has been adjudged insane, and will be taken to Traverse City.

Supervisor Hudkins and family acknowledge the receipt of invitations to the Stevens-Goss wedding on Wednesday at Charlevoix.

Miss Wilson took Wing and dew home on Sunday last. She returned to Mr. Hudkins' the same evening, quite scarried with her flight.

Miss McMillan had a severe attack of neuralgia last week. Dr. LaFevre removed the cause—an aching tooth—and she is good natured again.

John Nowville is conducting a singing school in the Newville district, and there is quite an interest manifested. Let us revive the time-honored singing school.

Echo.

FEB. 12.—School is going on finely in the Vance district. Isaac Vance is teacher.

Elder Wakely is now holding protracted meetings at the school house near the mill.

Dugald McMillan has returned home from Kalkaska, where he has been working for a few months. He will go back again soon.

Mrs. Johanna Nowland and children, of Charlevoix, are now stopping at her parents, Duncan McMillan's where they expect to stay during the winter.

The last sensation was the marriage of Peter Murray and Lizzie Sinclair. Peter is to be congratulated that he is no longer obliged to keep "bach." Happiness and long life is the wish of their friends.

Ironton.

FEB. 12.—Charlie Noyes and wife and Mrs. J. M. Harris are visiting their parents, Mr. and Mr. Noyes.

The tax collector is again on the rounds, seeking whom he may devour and listening to the old story of hard times.

Mrs. H. Hammond is quite sick this week.

The young people report a splendid time at their social Friday evening. The amount realized was $27.60. Quite a number attended the social from the Black neighborhood.

Willie Bird had one of his fingers badly smashed last week while drawing logs at the Pine Lake mill.

Ellsworth.

FEB. 12.—Judging from appearances to-day, real estate is on the move.

No Sunday school last Sunday on account of not having suitable wood to warm the church.

Date Parks is moving on his swamp lot today, to finish the winter lumbering there.

George Compton has moved out of town for the winter.

Henry Gotham has a new pair of lumber sleighs, of which he feels quite proud.

Burgess.

FEB. 13.—George McRoberts is the happy man this time. Cause,—a big girl baby at his house.

Mr. Banks has traded off one of his horses for a yoke of oxen.

Lots of snow but a scarcity of news in this vicinity.

Jones and Levi Lewis are busy getting out logs on one of their places.

After an absence of several weeks Mrs. Gibson has returned home again.

Barnard.

FEB. 13th.—Plenty of snow and most of the teams are engaged in lumbering.

Mr. and Mrs. John Shapton arrived home from Canada last Saturday, where they have been for some time.

Singing school is progressing finely. The new books arrived Saturday last.

A little son of William Rice fell from its high chair on the stove one day last week, inflicting severe injuries.

Ironton School.

The following is the report of the Ironton school for the month ending Jan. 18. Whole number enrolled in grammar department, 37; primary, 40.

Medicine for Throat and Lung Difficulties has long been, and still is, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It cures Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and Asthma; soothes irritation of the Larynx and Fauces; strengthens the Vocal Organs; allays soreness of the Lungs; prevents Consumption, and, even in advanced stages of lung disease, relieves Coughing and induces Sleep. There is no other preparation for diseases of the throat and lungs to be compared, with this remedy.

"My wife had a distressing cough, with pain in the right breast. We tried various medicines, but none did her any good until I got a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has cured her. A neighbor, Mrs. Allen, had the measles, and the cough was relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have no hesitation in recommending this as the best the world knows."—R. Heron, Druggist, Medford, Morrillton, Ark.

"I have been afflicted with asthma for forty years, and last spring was taken with a violent cough which threatened to terminate my days. Every one pronounced me in consumption. I determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Its effect was magical. I was immediately relieved and continued to improve until entirely recovered."—Joel Boilard, Guilford, Conn.

"Six months ago I had a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, brought on by an injudicious cough. I tried various remedies, but obtained no relief. I then began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A few bottles of this medicine cured me."—Wm. E. Coburn, 19 Brookline St., Lowell, Mass.

"For children afflicted with colds, coughs, sore throat, or croup, I know of no remedy which will give such speedy relief as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have found it, also, invaluable in cases of Whooping Cough."—Ann Lovejoy, 1327 Washington st., Boston, Mass.

"Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the only cough medicine to be relied on in dangerous cases."—H. S. Hilton, Kittanning, Pa.

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF THE EVENTFUL HAPPENINGS OF A WEEK.

Political, Commercial, and Industrial Items from All Over the Land—Fires, Accidents, and Crimes—The Gist of the News in a Few Lines.

OUR PANAMA INTERESTS.

The Senate Passes a Bill Appropriating $35,000 for That Purpose.

The credentials of Mr. Coke for his new senatorial term were presented to the Senate on the 11th inst., and placed on file. Mr. Dawes presented a petition from one hundred and twenty Indian students at Hampton, Va., in behalf of continuance of the ration system in classes as an encouragement to idleness, and recommending that the system be given a fair, impartial and scientific trial. The petition was referred, in accordance on the Senate journal, to the committee of the United States in Panama. The enactment, that no part of the money appropriated on of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated shall be used by the Isthmian Canal Commission, or by the President of the United States and by virtue of the security of the United States and the protection of the United States and the citizens of the United States in such manner as he may deem expedient, was concurred in by the senate. Joseph C. Beale, Pension Department General; Solomon L. Wilson, Pension Agent, Indianapolis; Thomas A. Jenckes, Associate Judge of the Supreme Court of Utah. In the House of Representatives, on the first day inst., the Senate bill was passed authorizing the construction of a Government bridge across the Potomac at Leesworth, Ind. The House decided, yes, 151; nays, 59—to consider the Senate bill, first election case, Mr. Gray, of Georgia, contested the South Carolina Congressional Election, and Mr. Lacey, advocated the claimant's claim to the seat. Pending further debate the matter went over. Speaker Crisp suspended the House rules, and Odell was sworn in as a member on the direct tax bill.

"JACK THE RIPPER" IN THE TOILS.

A Murder in Dundee Leads to the Arrest of the Supposed Whitechapel Fiend.

The mutilated body of a woman was found concealed in a wooden chest by the police at Dundee, Scotland. A post-mortem examination showed that the woman had first been strangled, and that her body had then been mutilated, the abdomen being ripped open and the legs and arms twisted and broken. The victim's husband, W. H. Bury, a resident of Whitechapel, London, was arrested on suspicion and confessed the crime. He says that he and his wife drank heavily before retiring, and that he does not know how he got to bed. Upon awakening he says, he found his wife lying upon the floor with a rope around her neck. Actuated by a sudden and impulse for which he cannot account, he seized a knife and slashed the body. Upon reason returning he became alarmed and hastily crushed the body into the chest in which it was found, thinking to flee and make his escape. The theory of the police officials is that Bury's wife kept of facts connecting him with the East End atrocities, and that he took him to Dundee in the hope of preventing a repetition of the crimes.

GRANTED A NEW TRIAL.

A Man Convicted of Eight Murders to Be Given Another Chance.

The Supreme Court at Atlanta, Ga., has granted a new trial to Tom Woolfolk, convicted of the murder of his father, stepmother, and six brothers and sisters. The scene of the crime was near Macon, and Woolfolk was branded as the most notable criminal of modern times. The grounds upon which a new trial is granted are alleged errors of the court below in the admission of certain hearsay testimony. Justice Simmons, who delivered the decision, referred to the demonstration in the courtroom at Macon during the trial of the case, when the crowd cried, "Hang him, hang him." The justice also censured the court below for not taking summary means for the punishment of those who raised the cries.

Profit in Politics.

It has been decided in the Circuit Court at Louisville, Ky., that the Wallace election law, as applied to the city of Louisville, is constitutional.

It is reported from St. Louis that Mr. John Baker, who was contesting the seat from the Eighteenth Illinois Congressional District with the Hon. W. S. Forman, has conceded Forman's election and has withdrawn from the contest.

President Cleveland has nominated Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois, now Assistant Postmaster General, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and Norman J. Coleman, of Missouri, to be Secretary of Agriculture.

The Gentlies Ahead.

The gentiles were successful in the municipal election at Ogden, Utah, for the first time in the history of that city and in the Territory. There was great rejoicing and the city was still with excitement. The gentile mayor is Mr. Glen E. G. Kiesel, an old resident of Ogden, was elected Mayor.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Walter S. Bradley Kills His Wife, Then Shoots Himself.

Walter S. Bradley murdered his wife, Edna L., and then killed himself in the parlors of the Hotel Cortland, in Chicago, in a manner so horribly sensational as to entirely eclipse the two other double murders perpetrated in Cook County, Illinois, during the week. Bradley and his wife were both employed as reporters on the Chicago Globe, for which the woman acted as society editress and dramatic critic, and on which she found occasional work for her husband. Edna L. Bradley was a well-known and respected preach in journalistic and theatrical circles, and formed many acquaintances, which led to the jealousy which resulted in the tragedy. Bradley fired three bullets into the body of his wife and a fourth into his own head. Bradley had drank heavily in the preliminary for forgery. He was born in Andrew, Jackson County, Iowa, and his wife, née Edna L. Hathaway, was born in St. Louis.

BRUTAL FIENDS.

A White Woman Torn Limb from Limb by Indians.

A horrible story of Indian cruelty and murder comes from Little Current, Manitoulin Island, about 150 miles east of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. The population of Little Current is mostly Indian, although there are some white settlers. Four Indians, Peter Cecamaquon, Jack Douglass, Henry Borb, and Sam Bandin, left the village for a white settler's cabin, about two miles away. Arriving there they demanded liquor from Christina Cecamaquon, the white man's wife, whom they knew slightly. She gave it to them, and had no sooner done so than the fiends attacked her. She fought like a tigress to protect herself, and in the struggle the furniture of the cabin was wrecked. The four red demons then set to work in their wild fury and tore the woman from limb to limb, scattering the fragments in all directions. The savages were then arrested, and one has confessed the crime. He says that he and his wife drank heavily before retiring, and that he does not know how he got to bed. Upon awakening he says, he found his wife lying upon the floor with a rope around her neck. Actuated by a sudden and impulse for which he cannot account, he seized a knife and slashed the body. Upon reason returning he became alarmed and hastily crushed the body into the chest in which it was found, thinking to flee and make his escape. The theory of the police officials is that Bury's wife kept of facts connecting him with the East End atrocities, and that he took him to Dundee in the hope of preventing a repetition of the crimes.

DROWNED IN NIAGARA.

A Reckless Boston Tourist Falls from the Bridge and Is Rescued.

Harry Hartte, of Boston, Mass., met with a thrilling escape from instant death at Niagara Falls. He was warned not to climb the ice mountain without creepers, but persisted in doing so and told his guide that his services would not be required until he returned. Just as he was about to plant his feet on the upper slope he slipped and his fell heading, bounding from one projection to another. He at last reached the boiling waters and disappeared for a few hours. Tom Conroy, the noted guide, armed himself with a rope and went to the rescue. He leaped from one cake of ice to another in doing so and told his guide that half a dozen times himself, succeeded in getting Hartte, who was nearly dead from exposure to the elements.

ATTEMPTED MURDER AND SUICIDE.

A Jealous Missourian's Effort to Kill His Wife and Himself.

News has been received at Butler, Mo., that Lulu Mann shot John Hensley and then attempted suicide at Calaberry Church in the western portion of Bates County, Mo. It seems that Hensley was paying court to a daughter of Captain H. P. Nicely, and Mann was made insanely jealous by seeing her in company with Hensley at a school exhibition at the church. When the exercises were over he came upon young Hensley from the crowd and shot him in the right breast and penetrating a heavy overcoat he had lodged in a checkbook he had in his pocket. Mann, thinking he had killed his rival, instantly turned the pistol upon himself and fired two balls. The latter was fatally wounded.

TRAGEDY AT LEXINGTON, IND.

Charles Winterburg Shot Dead by George Fender—Marshal Adams Stabbed.

Charles Winterburg, son of A. W. Winterburg, a wealthy merchant in Edinburg, Ind., was shot and killed by George Fender. The tragedy was the result of some trivial remark made by the victim about a squaw Fender had been engaged in. The killing occurred in Pruitt's Hall, where a dance was in progress. In arresting the murderer City Marshal Adams was dangerously stabbed by his prisoner, who was armed with two revolvers and a knife. Young Winterburg was known and liked all over Bartholomew County, and his murder created much excitement.

DEATH OF COLONEL WOODS.

He Claims to Have Been at the Massacre of Fort Phil Kearney.

Colonel James A. Woods died at Bloomington, Ill., on the 12th inst., aged 74. He was in Texas in 1835, and took part in the revolution. He claimed to have been at the massacre of Fort Phil Kearney, and two others to have made his escape, although surrounded by the savages, and they at once opened except a woman, a child, and a child. Col. Woods' statement is believed by his neighbors, and is corroborated by the fact that a native of Lincoln County, Kentucky, till recently alive in Texas, also claimed to have escaped.

WILL PLAY A GAME IN ROME.

The Base-Ball Tourists Expect to Be There by Feb. 14.

A Cairo special of the 10th inst. says: The base-ball tourists will have to-morrow at noon for Ismailia. They go by canal to Port Said, and from there by steamer to Brindisi. Nine days will be spent in Italy, and a game will be played in Rome the 24th. The Khedive was sorry he could not see the game here, and sent a letter expressing his regret, promising to be present again he would take pains to be in Cairo and see the champions, the wearing-place where he is now enjoying himself.

A FEARFUL BOILER EXPLOSION.

Two Persons Killed Outright and Two Others Have Been Died.

Two boilers exploded in the engine-room of the State Hospital for the Insane at Lincoln, Neb., completely wrecking the engine-house, killing two patients, injuring two others, and the two engineers have since died. The explosion completely destroyed the five boilers and the dynamo for furnishing electric lights, leaving the building without heat or the means of preparing food. The loss is about $20,000.

Democratic State Convention.

THE democrats of Michigan will meet in state convention in Harmonie's hall, at Grand Rapids

ON TUESDAY, FEB. 26th, 1889,

At 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating one candidate for Justice of the Supreme court and two candidates for Regents of the State University, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 200 votes cast for governor at the last general election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less this 200 votes, but any county is entitled to at least two delegates. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

The delegates from each congressional district will meet in caucus at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day of the convention and recommend candidates as follows: One vice president of the convention and one member each for the committees on credentials, permanent organization and order of business and resolutions.

I. M. WESTON, Chairman.

FRANK H. THOMAS, Secretary.

Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates.

G. W. CROUTER, Sec'y. Chairman.

DOES ANY ONE KNOW!

Does any one know what's in your heart and mine,
The sorrow and song,
The demon of sin and the angel divine,
The right and the wrong;
The dread of the darkness, the love of the day,
The ebb and the flow
Of hope and of doubt forever and aye,
Does any one know?

Does any one dream of the love that is yours,
The heart that is mine;
The depth and the width of the cup which each drains
Of richest red wine;
Of the hate that is dark at the midnight of grief,
The anguish and woe,
The doubt circle of failing and blind unbelief,
Does any one know?

Does any one see what we have in the heart
To love and to hate;
Of life a every motive an intricate part,
Of chance and of fate;
The merry of kisses, of starlight, of songs,
Of roses and snow,
Of women's sweet eyes, of prayers and of wrongs,
Does any one know?

Does any one hearken to music of bells,
And the sigh of the sea,
And the whisper of woodlands that mystically swells
For you and for me;
The sound of food echoes that ever respond,
In tones soft and low,
To the prayer we are breathing into the beyond,
Does any one know?

MARQUETTE is to have a new democratic newspaper, one that can be depended on. This is made necessary by the recent action of the Mining Journal in becoming a stalwart republican sheet.

H. B. STITT has retired from the Lansing Journal, and L. E. Rowley will run it alone. The Journal is a good, reliable democratic newspaper, and furnishes all the news from the capitol.

THE state prohibition convention to nominate one justice of the supreme court and two regents of the university, will be held in Buck's opera house, Lansing, Mich. at 11 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, Feb. 27, 1889 Half fare on all railroads.

Every man in business should have his name appear in the papers, if not occupying more than an inch of space. This much at least for his own good and that of the town. A town is wholly judged, by strangers, by the newspapers published in such town, and it is only those who advertise who are known beyond their immediate neighborhood. Judicious, constant advertising pays.

We have on hand yet a few extra copies of the JOURNAL containing illustration and description of new Baptist church. Those who appreciate this kind of newspaper enterprise should buy one or more copies to send to friends in other counties. Quite a number of people, who ought to appreciate it, have so far given no expression. It takes money to buy pictures, but they help to advertise Charlevoix.

Safer Than the Stairs.

"The elevators of this town carry nearly a million people up and down every day but Sunday," said N. P. Otis, the elevator manufacturer, yesterday.

"Yes," he added, "everybody takes the elevator now, because it is safer to ride than climb the stairs. It's strange to say, but, nevertheless, it is a fact, that the number of accidents in elevators is very small in comparison with those that are caused by falling down stairs. This is because the modern passenger elevator has almost reached perfection now."

Speed and simplicity of structure are the most desirable qualities of the passenger elevator, and these are both found in the hoisting machines in common use in the big office buildings down town and in the high apartment houses near Central park. They are nearly all run by water power, or what is termed hydraulic pressure, as that is less complicated than steam.

A water tank is located either on the roof or in the cellar, and supplies the power to run the elevator. In the Potter building the tank is on the roof and holds 6,000 gallons of water, which furnishes power enough to run the elevators. Mr. Frank R. Gallaher explained to a Star reporter yesterday the various movements made in hoisting machines during the last ten years. The speed had been increased, he said, from 100 to 500 feet per minute, and instead of the big, lumbering vehicle that used to be called a "sleeping car," there was now a small apartment, handy and well equipped for swift passage. He said that the old system of hoisting by horse power was dangerous, because it was not possible to always keep the ropes and pulleys in perfect order. He thought that people did not fully appreciate what a boon the improved elevator was, with its rapid movement and perfect safety. —New York Star.

SAINT VALENTINE'S DAY

In Ancient Rome,

IN their style of dress the Romans followed in a great measure the Greeks. The costume of a Roman lady consisted of three parts, the tunica, interior, the stola, and the palla. The former was a simple garment, over which was worn the stola. Th s had sleeves, generally open, showing the entire arm, and confined on the shoulder with a button or clasp. It was sometimes ornamented at the bottom of the skirt with stripes or embroidery. The palla was a protective garment worn only out of doors.

The materials of these garments were wool, silk, linen, and cotton, the former being most commonly used. At first, silk was worn only by women, men being prohibited from wearing it; and it was some years before the restriction was removed. These textiles were usually of a solid color, as violet, madder, crocus and the like, ornamentation being given by embroidery and stripes. At one period women were n t allowed to wear Tyrian purple, but gradually they assumed this royal shade. The wedding dress was white, the veil, or flammen, yellow, the shoes of the same color, and the hair in a yellow net.

By reference to the picture, it will be seen that the Roman women wore their hair in various ways. The most common, however, and the simplest, was to draw it away from the forehead and arrange it in a plait or knot at the back. Another extreme was a storied edifice built up on the head, and worn with bands to keep it in place. A sort of cap was also worn and hair nets composed of gold thread.

Like the women of all countries, the Roman women were very fond of jewelry. Their necklaces and chains often reached to their waists, and were rich and elegant. A necklace was found at Pompei composed of a band of interlaced gold, on which were suspended seventy-one jeweled pendants, the clasp being of gold set with rubies. Bracelets were much worn, and were called armillæ, the serpent bracelet, with ruby eyes, being especially common. One large pearl was the favorite style for earrings, in fact, the Roman women were especially fond of pearls, and often reproved by the philosophers for the money they spent on these glowing children of the sea."

The shoes were sandals, which were often of bright colors and richly adorned with gems.

The prominent dress of the Roman gentlemen, which distinguished them from the Greeks, was the toga. This was at first worn by women as well as men, but they soon relinquished it in favor of the latter. Not until the Roman Empire was transferred to Constantinople was the toga superseded by the more Grecian dress, the pallium. The toga hung in graceful folds, and was ample enough in the back to pull over the head in case of rain. It was made of wool, of the original color, Generals, however, wearing them purple, while knights wore of striped purple and those of priests and magistrates were bordered with purple, gold stripes intermingling with the same. The tunica, such as the young man in the picture wears, came half way down the thighs, and had ample folds in the back, which could be drawn around the arms if desired.

The shoes were of various kinds, sandals being the most common, these were usually scarlet and purple. Those of the wealthy were gorgeously painted, and adorned with glass.

The Roman generally went bareheaded, but they sometimes wore a broad hat, or a woolen cap, or a sort of scarf, called a tutter, tied around the head.

The picture gives a good idea of the costumes worn in ancient Rome on Saint Valentine's day. Saint Valentine was a priest at Rome, who was martyred there in the year 270. It was a custom with the ancient Roman youth to draw the names of maidens on Saint Valentine's day, and to whom they were expected to be faithful for a year at least. It is said that this drawing took place on the 14th of February, but the priests, frowning on the custom, substituted the names of saints, and changed the day of drawing to the 14th of the month. It is not to be supposed that the young gentlemen approved of the substitution, for it was easy to change their allegiance from earthly angels to heavenly saints.

For fancy balls and tableaux this costume study will be found very useful.

SAINT VALENTINE'S DAY IN ANCIENT ROME.

A COMIC VALENTINE.

BY VERNA CALDWELL MELVILLE.

"Valentines! Valentines! Call at Potter Brothers'. Everything from the sentimental to the ludicrous, at prices ranging from one cent to one dollar."

The above advertisement appeared in the Midland Recorder, and the next few days were busy ones at the country of Potter Bros.

Percie Wilton, sitting on a low couch by a window commanding a view of the street, saw her thirteen-year-old brother Ben come bounding up the steps.

"A valentine for ye, Sis," he cried breathlessly, rushing into the room by boy fashion and flinging an envelope into her lap.

A faint color stole into the pale face for a moment, as, with trembling fingers, she broke the seal, but it quickly vanished as she unfolded a hideous caricature of a woman bent almost double by a hump on her back. With a mean she sank back on the pillows and the next moment burst into a torrent of weeping.

"Has it come to this? Oh, has it come to this?" she sobbed.

Frightened at the unusual sight, the boy ran in search of his mother.

"Come quick! Something awful's the matter of Sis, 'cause she got a valentine!" he exclaimed.

In an hour from another comprehended the whole dreadful truth as she glanced from the pale, distracted face to the ludicrous caricature in the trembling hand.

"My poor wounded bird!" she cried, indignant tears choking her own voice. Keenly she, too, felt the cruel stab.

"So different from last Valentine Day!" sobbed the girl, and the thoughts of both went back one year, and they saw Percie—not the helpless, suffering creature of to-day, with spinal deformity's fatal stamp upon her, marring all but the sweet face and gentle spirit, but the handsome, light-hearted belle, holding in her hand the wonderful combination of velvet and flowers sent by one who had undersoured the words:

"I love you sweet maid,
For day tomorrow."

All day long these words had repeated themselves in her mind, and more than once tears had gathered in the soft brown eyes. He sometimes called her, but she knew how vain was the hope she had cherished, and doubtless to-day some one else was dreaming bright dreams over a token of his favor. She could not, did not blame him; oh, no—but it was hard. And then this blow! Did she look like to others? Her friends had been very free also to an unpopular comparment of a booth, a long counter divided off by partitions. Here he marks with a cross the name of the candidate for whom he intends to vote, folds up the slip and pents it in the ballot-box.

The plan was introduced by Francis S. Dutton, member of the Legislature of South Australia from 1855 to 1857, and during that time twice at the head of the Government. The secret ballot was first proposed by him in the session of Legislative Council of 1856, but the ministerial government and universal suffrage had been granted to South Australia by Parliament the Constitution granting popular representation and universal suffrage. The measure became a law, under the name of the obnoxious act, in 1858. Soon the aspect of elections was completely changed. Riot and disorder disappeared entirely, and the day of polling was a quiet one. Instances which an attempt was made to intimidate voters were rare, and in some cases, where it was required to employ bailiffs to keep the ballot from an election office, the acceptance of the situation is sometimes required, and in some cases the attempt to intimidate voters has been made in order to prevent excessive and irrelevant questions being put to voters, which a sort of sentry-box in which the candidate can retire, and in which he is going to vote, shall be fixed in a number of emergencies which are liable to arise are provided for. Charlevoix, Mich., Feb. 21, 1889

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Eveline.

Feb. 19.—We're on deck again.

Having returned home from the north last week, where we have been for some time, we find that things are wagging along as usual. Everybody in this section are busy lumbering, a few of our young folks have crossed the matrimonial sea, and it is reported that a few more are liable to do likewise in the near future. We now expect to remain in this neighborhood for some time, and whilst we stay, the JOURNAL readers may look out for regular correspondence from Eveline.

The snow in this section is beginning to get pretty deep.

Mrs. A. Box is on the sick list at present.

Mr. Peterson of Petoskey was in town last week.

The dance to have been given at Mrs. R. Bedwin's last Thursday evening was postponed till the evening of March 6. An English supper will be served; a big crowd and an enjoyable time is expected.

The company now have their teams hauling wood from the peninsula.

D. N. Gregory made his wife a present of a fine new cottage organ on Wednesday last.

The ice on Pine lake is now strong enough to admit teams to travel, although there is considerable snow drifted in places.

It is reported that F. E. Miller is meeting with good success as teacher in the Hillegas district.

Some of our citizens are already beginning to talk election and ferry. We will have a few words to say on these questions in the near future.

Mrs. Lon Sheldon was on the sick list last week but is now convalescent.

W. H. Jarman has fixed up his house, preparatory to keeping bach. with his brother George.

Miss Emma Allen of Charlevoix, spent Sunday in town.

Dugal Galbraith purchased the Carlstein house and lot at Ironton, adjoining J. D. Parish, on Saturday. Consideration, $100.

A taffy pull at Ed. Tumoth's, Ironton, last Saturday night. A good time is reported.

An entertainment will be given at John Ward's on Friday evening, March 1st. All are invited.

East Jordan.

From the Enterprise.

Al Pickard has started his boarding house and is advertising for more boarders. The place has been fixed up in great shape.

A requisition for a mail route between here and Central Lake has been circulated and extensively signed.

J. E. Potter has been confined to the house during the week with a strained back, caused by lifting a sleigh out of the way at the Company's mill.

Wm. H. Healey has had a week's severe illness with congestion of the brain. He is now nearly himself again.

The Commercial House has been sold, and G. S. Thompson, late of the Mansard House, Gaylord, an old and experienced hotel man, will now cater for the public in his well known first-class manner.

A. E. Hays left on Monday on a prospecting tour through Oregon, Washington Territory and California. Mr. Hays will hang out his shingle when he finds a place in want of a lawyer. We wish him success, but regret to lose a citizen of his standing.

The man who stands off and rails at the village government because it does not manage things to suit him is a public nuisance. Don't bellyache now, but get out and hustle all you like on election day. That is the American way, that is the patriotic way, and the individual who does any other way is a bird that defiles its own nest.

It is surprising how anyone with a head larger than a hickory nut, can object to paying the trifling tax that will enable us to keep the fire protection. Next summer, instead of having the dust three inches deep on our clayed streets to roll over the roofs of the stores like smoke of a battery in action at every puff of wind, we will have the streets and sidewalks daily sprinkled, the store fronts glistening, and strangers and citizens will alike rejoice and take pride in the town. The man who does not have faith in his town and wish it prosperity had better move out or die. Such men we do not want.

Advance.

Feb. 18.—About 7 o'clock on Thursday evening, the 14th, the building occupied by P. B. Newton as a store and by Albert Howard as a residence, was discovered to be on fire. The flames by that time had made such progress that it was impossible to do anything more than to try and save the goods and household effects. Men and boys were promptly on hand and removed as much of the goods as possible before the fire got the better of them. Mr. Howard lost about two thirds of his household goods, and Mr. Newton's loss will be about five hundred dollars. The stock consisted of drugs, dry goods, and groceries, and was not insured. Mr. Newton's goods were removed to the old store near the grist mill, and it is hoped will soon resume business. The fire originated in the part of the building occupied by Mr. Howard, and when first discovered the flames were issuing through the roof near the chimney. In attempting to put out the fire Jack Willis fell from the roof receiving injuries which laid him up for a few days. Much credit is due to the presence of mind and coolness of Mr. King who displayed great energy and fearlessness in helping to remove the goods. The building was owned by "Doc." Smith of Grand Rapids and has been built twelve or fifteen years.

We understand that John Backenstose has rented his farm to his son-in-law, Jason Lewis, for five years. Mr. B. intends putting in his time to the selling of a patent of which he has the exclusive right of this country, and is also general agent for the sale of territory in all of Uncle Sam's domains.

Wilson.

Warmer weather, but snowing again.

Will Wing spent Sunday at Mr. Hutkins.

Chas. Knuttel took a trip into Antrim county the first of the week.

Elder Tracy preached to a small congregation on Sunday last.

Tax collector is now calling on his friends, and others too.

Miss Mary McMillan Sundayed at home with her parents.

Chas. Hudkins is now working for his brother Daniel, lumbering.

Will Warden had the misfortune to have his cutter broken by a runaway horse last week, but $5 will set it all right again.

Elder McGregor passed through here on Friday last on his way from his home in Gaylord to South Arm.

George Hosier moved his family up on Monday to his new house which he has built near John Isaman's. He will work for Mr. Isaman this winter, who expects to get out 250,000 feet of pine.

Echo.

Nice weather for lumbermen.

Johnnie McMillen has come home for a few days stay.

Lem Freeman's twin babies are very sick at present.

J. McDonald and Harvey Scott have each lost a child with the whooping cough which seems to be quite severe here.

Elder Wakely preached at the school house Sunday morning, and Elder McGregor in the evening.

Whooping cough is nearly over.

Mumps have arrived. They appeared first at Mr. McMillan's and will probably go the rounds.

One of the fair ones of this township who has been working in Wilson came home for a few hours stay on Sunday last. She was accompanied by a Wilsonite, and the Echo boys,—their feelings cannot be described.

Miss Jones who is teaching in the Button district, recently got up an exhibition, which was a very fine affair, but on account of bad roads, etc, the attendance was not large, which was a great disappointment.

Inwood.

Plenty of snow in the roads.

Farmers are busy filling their ice houses.

Elder Whitman preached at the school house Sunday.

Mrs. Nick Shores is on the sick list.

A young lady boarder arrived at Albert O'Brien's several days ago and Albert looks happy.

School closed at the Hilton school house last Friday. An excellent program consisting of recitations, dialogues, music, etc., had been prepared for the afternoon and a pleasant time was enjoyed by all present. The pupils manifested their good will toward their teacher, Miss Patten, in presenting to her a handsome plush writing desk. School will commence the 1st of April.

Ironton.

Feb. 20.—This is one of our Grand Traverse thaws,—a foot of snow and a big blow.

Uber Burdick and family have moved to east Jordan. We are very sorry to lose them.

While crossing Chas. Bedwin's place Monday morning your correspondent found a fresh bear track which had the appearance of being an enormous one. We tracked him as far as the Cuter place, but came to conclusion that cutting logs was more profitable than hunting bear.

The industrial school will give a concert at the Congregational church Friday evening.

George Martin has moved his barber chair to one of the rooms in the Munson hotel.

Barnard.

Feb. 20.—Mrs. Andrew Mudge is the guest of her daughter Mrs. W. M. Clark this week.

There was no singing school Saturday evening on account of rain.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Burns were visiting relatives at Boyne Falls, last week.

There was no Sunday school Sunday on account of most of the Barnard people attending the funeral of Mrs. Dougherty in Charlevoix.

Miss Nellie King, of Ironton, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Harry Gregory, this week.

Atwood.

Feb. 18.—A permanent boarder arrived at Louis Cromp's last Friday.

The rain of Saturday had a bad effect on the roads.

W. Brown was on the sick list, but is better now.

Saint Valentine distributed a few photographs of himself, on the 14th, at this office. His poetry must have been taken from the waste-basket of some printing office.

More of the beautiful today.

Mrs. Charles Tienal is not expected to live.

Burgess.

Feb. 20.—C. H. Whitford was expected home last week.

The dance at Solter's last Friday evening was well attended considering the weather.

The residence of E. H. Burgess, together with his barn, was burned last Saturday morning. He lost all of his household effects.

Mrs. Wilkes returned home to Charlevoix this week.

The Odd Fellows.

The following officers were declared elected by the grand lodge I. O. O. F. Wednesday:

Grand Representative—Geo. M. Dewey of Owosso.

Grand Master—Geo. W. Crouter of Charlevoix.

Deputy Grand Master—Chas. H. Haskin of Jackson.

Grand Secretary—E. H. Whitney of Lansing.

Grand Treasurer—Benj. D. Pritchard of Allegan.

Grand Warden—John Northwood of New Lathrop.

The report of the secretary of the Grand Lodge showed 1,951 members were initiated during the past year, admitted by card 430, reinstated 483, total 2,864; withdrawn 440, suspended 1,244 expelled 30, deaths 143, total 1,857, showing a net gain in membership during the year of 1,007.

The number of brothers receiving relief during the year was 687, and they were paid $12,597.89; there are 191 families of deceased members in the state, and they were paid $19,081.80; there were 2,206 weeks of sickness and 120 brothers buried by the order, for which $4,590.51 was paid; paid for charity, $2,804.67; the expenses of the lodges were $87,122.53, and the receipts $196,084.90.

The grand secretary received $10,486.09 from all sources, which he turned over to the grand treasurer. The above figures do not include the growth of 57 lodges, which failed to file reports according to law.

Grand Treasurer Pritchard read his annual report, which was referred to the finance committee. It showed a balance on hand of $12,519.16, which will be decreased about $5,500 after the representative per diem and mileage are paid.

The movement to change the time for holding the grand lodge from February to October was defeated. The next grand lodge will be held at Ionia.

Leavitt's Bonds.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 18.—Senator Leavitt displayed to two or three other senators this morning three $100 bills and several of smaller denominations. "These," he said, "are the proceeds of mileage."

"You had better put them back where they belong," remarked a senator, meaning the state treasury.

"I guess I will," said Leavitt, with a smile, as he shoved them back into his pocketbook. The secretary's books show the Senator has received for mileage and expenses for serving on two visiting committees and the MacDonald funeral committee $371.84. His regular pay and mileage is $185.60, making $557.44 for 48 days, or $11.62 per day. This is the largest sum in mileage drawn by any legislator.

Senator Taylor will introduce a resolution this afternoon for the appointment of a special committee to adjust the mileage matter.—Evening News.

ROMANCE OF A TRAMP.

"Billy the Wizard" Carries a Charm String as an Emblem of Love.

Of all the strange hobbies to which the mind can become attached none is more rare than that of a little woman faced tramp, who plainly showing the effects of the conquest of years, is known particularly well throughout northern Indiana as "Billy the Wizard." His right name is supposed to be Calvin Morris, but when the now aged man—for he is 64 years old—took to trumping he did so to forget the scenes of childhood and a pretty feminine face, lighted up with a pair of bright eyes, rosy cheeks and lips of carmine hue, that had captivated his boyish fancy.

But stern parents interfered and young Morris, in the rage of despair, forsook his home, parents, acquaintances and even his name to lose himself in the busy world. Now that the intervening years have been sailed in the pickling vat of time the old time sweetheart is still alive, but feeble of mind and body. All his relations except his mother are dead, and she clings to life with the unconscious grasp of old age in Muncie, Ind. The boy was an adept at cards, and naturally he drifted into telling fortunes and adopted the name of "Billy the Wizard."

Try as he would, he could not forget his old time love, and occasionally he would drift (always afoot) back to the scenes of his boyhood, hoping for a glance at the face and figure of the woman who had infatuated him. In time she died, and "Billy," now heartbroken and hopeless, began to carvest the crump that has led to every state in the Union. The girl he worshiped had, as a memento of her childish days, one of those pretty collections of buttons and small trinkets on a string which is known to every little girl as a "charm string," to which every friend is expected to contribute.

The last time Billy saw his girl she, in a caprice, wove about her neck her little charm string; and this fact became the most prominent thought in the addled mind of the young man as he bade her farewell forever. Straightway, as a remembrance of her, Billy began a charm string for himself. At first he carried it around his hat; as it grew in size it was transferred to his pocket; still increasing, in a small tin box he carried, and when it became a serpentine object with coils like an anaconda he placed it in a small trunk and shipped it from place to place, always adding to it. He made money telling fortunes and every body humored his whim and pies for a button or trinket for his string. In this way he has traveled the country over and over.

For a time he was with a band of gypsies and claims to have been held by them. He has camped with Indians, and in his collection is a lot of bone and metallic bits given him by those lovers of the plains. Some of the young squaws wanted to marry him for the string, but "Billy" was squaw proof. He was respected as a medicine man and was known as "Man not afraid of a whole box of pills." Not long ago Billy drifted back to Muncie and Eaton, Ind., and friends took him in charge and have cared for him. Billy displayed his treasure. The string is over a mile, size, 208 feet in length and contains 15,000 pieces.

There are buttons on it of every size, description and color. Bits of rare coin, old money, trinkets and small toys, small relics, bits of chimney and metal, even scraps of skin; in fact, everything he could gather to add to his string. The old man, with his shock of iron gray hair, weakening eyes and trembling hands covered with rings, has placed all his affections on that inimmate lot of buttons, etc. The larger it grew the deeper his affection for it. He caresses and talks to it as he would to a child, and every night sleeps with it at his side. About six months ago he was seized with a premonition that he would die, and he carefully buried the string in a sand bank, confided in a family, and wanted to be buried near his collection.

Billy didn't die, but the family uncovered the box, and poor Billy was crazy until his treasure was restored to him in a replevin suit. He claims to have been in Europe, his trip across the ocean costing him but 15 cents, and shows buttons he gathered in every civilized country of the Old World. He never rode on the cars until a few weeks ago, and then he wouldn't take a seat, refusing to go until he could sit on the box containing the charm string.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Epoch.

The transition from long lingering and painful sickness to robust health marks an epoch in the life of the individual. Such a remarkable event is treasured in the memory and the agency whereby the good health has been attained is gratefully blessed. Hence it is that so much is heard in praise of Electric Bitters. So many feel they owe their restoration to health, to the use of the great alterative and tonic. If you are troubled with any disease of kidneys, liver or stomach, of long or short standing you will surely find relief by use of Electric Bitters. Sold at 50c. and $1 per bottle at F. G. Hinsch & Co.' drug store. 3

Those Hayes Bridges.

EDITOR JOURNAL—Sir: Ginx says in the issue of the Sentinel of Feb. 6, Hayes township will be better fitted by an amendment to sec. 4, chap. 7 of the highway laws. He states that every year since the town has been organized we have had to pay for four or five bridges each year, built by overseers. Take it four per year, that would give Hayes forty-eight bridges. I don't think Ginx can find more than twenty-four of those notorious bridges in the town. It probably is all right for Ginx to say such things, but if he would state the number of times the "notorious" town board has met unnecessarily, and the amount it has cost for those meetings, outside parties would see why taxes are so high in Hayes. For example. The supervisor spread the cost of those five bridges on the district in which they were built, and "we (Ginx) thinks it proper and right," but as tax payers do not, and further we refused to pay the tax, consequently it caused two extra meetings of the "notorious" town board, to get rid of the effect of their home brewed law, which cost, with lawyer fee and extra work for treasurer, about twenty-six dollars, which is 25 per cent of all the bridges, and we know it to be true.

Detroit Flower Show.

Detroit is to have a floral exhibition—the first one in Michigan—on April 2, 3, 4 and 5. All the 24 Detroit florists and many others from various parts of the state will make displays of the rarest and most beautiful flowers, having especially timed their growing plants with the flower show in view. Then, to, the ladies of Detroit who are interested in the various city charities are to have booths for the sale of flowers. Young ladies in costume will be in attendance on the booths and the whole affair will be one of the most attractive exhibitions Detroit has ever witnessed. The entire net proceeds of the flower show are to be divided equally among the 21 charities represented in the enterprise.

Arrangements have been made for excursions from all parts of the state to Detroit at the time of the exhibition, and the details as to special rates of fare may be learned by applying to the local ticket agents. The exhibition originated with Mr. W. H. Bourley, of the Detroit Journal, who acts as general manager. Col. Fred. Farnsworth is the secretary and Mr. Frank D. Taylor is the treasurer. The Detroit Journal guarantees the charities against loss—a somewhat needless precaution, where there is such positive assurance of success.

TELL TALE DOUBLE CHINS.

What They Are Said to Signify to the Reader of Character.

The great justification of the double chin rests, of course, on its unrivaled value as an index of character—and such a character! It is really nature's patent of nobility. This was long ago discerned by the great master of physiognomy. It is not difficult to define what Lavater thought of a double chin. He carefully points out that man differs from the animals chiefly by his chin, laying it down as an axiom that the chin is the distinctive characteristic of humanity, consequently, double chinned people are doubly differentiated, from the beasts that perish, which is greatly to their credit. He expressly takes for his model of "the thinker, full of sagacity and penetration," a man with a flesh double chin, coupled with a nose rounded at the end. The portrait he gives is even better than the letter press, as the gentleman is limned with at least five chins, so that his lower jaw is a vista of magnificent distances, like Washington.

This happy physiognomy of the double chin, coupled with the round nose, characterizes, he tells us, the mind which can rise to heights, and which follows its designs with effecting firmness, unalloyed by obstinacy. Let, therefore, those with double chins rejoice, whether they possess rounded noses or not, and quote Lavater in gratitude. He gives again another example of the double mention, and the face so endowed, he says ethnologically, is Reason's own image. He quite revels in this feature. He takes an example of Raphael, with a beautifully rounded double chin, and in criticising it he acknowledges that the profile is wanting in truth, harmony and grace; but then, asks he, how is it it so strongly takes captive our sympathy!

Where lies the illusion? Merely in the chin, he answers, and, as the chin is a double one, the matter is no longer a mystery. He points triumphantly to Cicero's magnificent double chin, and, in a burst of eloquence, says of Wren's, that, if you can find a man with (among other things) such a chin as that, without being gifted with some extraordinary talent, he renounces forever the science of physiognomy. What Lavater has thus laid down experience amply corroborates. The double chinned, therefore, should hold their heads up higher, in the consciousness of modest merit, and give free play and just prominence to their certificates of character.

It is, as hinted above, rather difficult at present to tell who is endowed and who is not. Portrait painters are craven enough to dissimulate a double chin; they leave it to the caricaturist, who seems to think it great fun for a popular statesman or poet to have at least two chins, whereas these appendages are the secret of their success. Some of our more observant writers have got a glimpse of the truth, Mr. Wilkie Collins, for instance, W. H. Bourley, of the Detroit Journal, who acts as general manager. Col. Fred. Farnsworth is the secretary and Mr. Frank D. Taylor is the treasurer. The Detroit Journal guarantees the charities against loss—a somewhat needless precaution, where there is such positive assurance of success.

Mr. Cole concluded his speech on alleged Texas outrages in the Senate on the 13th inst., after which the resolution was laid aside. The House bill to provide for taking the seventh and subsequent censuses was passed. Mr. Morrill from the Senate Finance Committee reported back to the Senate the House bill to organize the territory of Oklahoma and it was placed on the calendar. THIRTY-FIVE PERISH.

A Boiler in the Park Central Hotel, Hartford, Conn., Explodes with Awful Results.

A terrible catastrophe occurred at Hartford, Conn., caused by the explosion of the large boiler in the basement of the Park Central Hotel, one of the most popular hotels in that city. The large building was completely wrecked, the great walls going down with a tremendous crash, burying in the ruins all but a few of the guests in the house. A special telegram says:

Almost simultaneously with the falling walls was a tremendous explosion that shook the whole city and wrecked the frame of all buildings near by. Within the remained of the hotel seems to lie but a mass of ruins, when lately stood the finest hotel in Hartford. Only a few feet of the east end of the building, five stories in height, and showing the ends of a few rooms on each floor. The rest of the building had been almost every as nearly as though with a giant hand it had been crushed down to the cellar, and from the east end standing were heard the shrieks of injured people, and the groans of the dying. Ever and anon, a cold, half-frozen rain fell from the murky sky, with the spectacle of wreck and ruin, and the ghastly scene which the rescuers will be long in forget. Hard close to the top of the wreckage, from the east end, a man's head could be seen, and had been in that position for hours. Near the center, and three cases lodged in the wreck, a man was found, who had escaped injury, but to help could reach it. The man and woman, who had been in the room, escaped harm, and a moment later he was beyond suffering. The flames at first prevented any attempts to rescue any one, and the ruins were flooded with water before any work could be commenced. Ten dead bodies have been taken from the edge of the debris. Lowever, within an hour after the explosion, a large force of workmen threw a bed with a sleeping woman upon it far into the street, while one of the hotel's guests slept in a black away.

The special telegram, sent out a few hours after the explosion, continues:

The magnitude of the calamity cannot be realized. The register of the hotel is lost, and Mark Clark Perry is buried in the ruins. But from the information obtained from the clerks, the Richmond and others, it is probable that there were one far from fifty people in the hotel proper, of whom a few have escaped unharmed, leaving forty-five to be accounted for. Ten dead bodies have been taken out, and twelve more, taken from the edge of the debris, Lowever, within an hour after the explosion, a large force of workmen threw a bed with a sleeping woman upon it far into the street, while one of the hotel's guests slept in a black away.

THE EARTHQUAKES IN COSTA RICA.

A Fearful Catastrophe, Similar to That of 1861.

A Panama special says: "Advices from Costa Rica give details of the terrible earthquake of the 10th inst. The first shock was felt at San Jose at 8 o'clock in the evening, and this was followed at 11 o'clock by a much stronger shock. At 4:30 a. m. a movement occurred which was more than a simple earthquake. The adobe places which suffered most in San Jose were the Cathedral, the Carmen and Merced churches, presidential palace, Artillery Barracks, National Palace, Central Barracks, the National Printing Office, and the Union Bank. Not a single house escaped injury, while many are not safe to live in and others are completely wrecked. Whole streets are blocked with ruins. Losses in San Jose amount to more than $2,000,000, while all the principal edifices in Alajuela are damaged. At La Laguna the earth has assumed the appearance of a rough sea. The father of a family and four of his children were buried together, while the mother and her young child were thrown by the motion of the earth a distance of 1,000 meters, although she declares she believes the earth swallowed her and then spouted her where she was found. Here the hills have changed their position and the ground is full of cracks. Since the first shocks a number of smaller ones have been experienced, but they have done no further damage. On Dec. 16 the Irazu volcano was in eruption, and the people in Cartago were still in a state of alarm."

Actual improvement in business continues. The upward movement in prices which was noticed last week has been more marked, and the number of active articles being shown half a cent or more higher than last week, has been quite large, and the number showing a decline is very few in the week. Although the Western cold has been severe, and has interfered with business in many quarters, the general feeling is more cheerful than for many months, and the sales of 353,000 bales, and the exports of 120,000 bales, show that the cotton market is half a dollar lower, with land 7½ cents higher than last week. The dry goods opens some extent, especially in cotton goods, and the sales of 3,000 packages of brilliantes, are to be taken out, by purchasers, from the warehouses of Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago, and St. Louis

The Blindman's Dog.

The street lamp on the corner of Broadway and Twenty-ninth street is the nightly business stand of a blind man and a dog. I watched them last night, having become interested in them through the stories that had come to me of the dog's intelligence. I heard the man ask the time of a gentleman who stopped to drop something in the box. He was told it was 10 o'clock. The gentleman walked on and the man called out to the dog: "Come, Tom, it's 10, and time for us to go home." The little dog gathered himself together, held up the box to the man, waited until he took the money out and put it in his pocket, buttoned his old coat, and then stood on the curb and examined the cars coming along. Finally a green one came in sight and the dog drew the man out into the mud and stood until it came along. The driver evidently knew them, for when he came to where they stood he pulled up and they got in. I was assured that it was a regular thing, and that the dog has remarkable locality for fares. It is said that he even knows the people who give alms to the old fellow, and never fails to greet them with a demonstration of pleasure.—New York Star.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Of Feb. 22d President Cleveland signed the bill creating the four new states of Washington, Montana, North Dakota, and South Dakota. The bill was signed with a pen made from the quill of an eagle captured in Dakota.

Twenty cents per bushel is the average price of potatoes throughout this section of the state. This low figure is rather discouraging to farmers and may result in a less number being planted this year than last, in which case they will undoubtedly command a much better price.—Mancelona Herald.

A WASHINGTON special says that James G. Blaine and Benjamin Harrison have taken seats in the new Church of the Covenant, which is hereafter to be the fashionable Presbyterian church of Washington. It is two miles further up town than the church Cleveland attends. The latter will hereafter have plenty of empty pews. The pew renting of the Church of the Covenant took place Thursday night. There was a great rush for seats. Harrison, Blaine, several senators and other distinguished men got good ones. It is said Senator-elect McMillan will take a pew there.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE for March, contains articles on a great variety of subjects, from the practical questions of the Railway Mail Service to the subtilities of Economy in Mental Work, with an abundance of good fiction and papers on topics of contemporary interest—several of them richly illustrated in a manner sustaining the reputation made by this magazine for strong and original art work. Thomas L. James, postmaster general in Garfield's cabinet, and now president of the Lincoln National Bank, New York, writes of the "Railway Mail Service" with sympathy and appreciation of the faithful work done, and from the full knowledge given him by his long practical experience in positions of authority. This paper contains a concise history of the evolution of mail carrying, and a graphic account of the work done on the most important mail trains in the country, with a tribute to the skill and dexterity of the corps of trained mail clerks. At the inception of a new administration, General James pleads for a thorough application of civil-service reform to the whole railway mail service. The elaborate illustrations are by Herbert Denman, who was afforded special opportunities to sketch the picturesque features of the fast mail.

The Fast Mail.

Petite Death Mistaints.

There were formerly as many executioners in France as there were counties of importance, and each one was called after the name of the city where his court was located—"M. de Paris," "M. de Lyon," etc. (writes a Paris correspondent). Since 1872 there has been only one chief headsman. The license of the last of the four generations of Sansons was revoked in 1847 for putting the guillotine in pawn one day when he was short. His successor was Heindreich, who was transferred from Amiens. While Sanson was a slovenly man, Heindereich looked like a gentleman. He was six feet tall, with a cold, calm air, a clear eye, and wore his white hair, whiskers and mustache cut close. When he "operated" he always had on a dress suit and a white necktie. After each execution he went to St. Ambrose church and had mass said for the man whom he had just launched into eternity. Heindereich had a strong hand and an imperative voice, and when he laid his hand on the "patient's" shoulder there was no possible chance of resistance. Heindereich perfected the guillotine in several points and abolished the high platforms. He died in 1872, after fifty years service.

Roch, the next headsman, was a jovial man. He was the son of an executioner, and aided his father and uncle, who was also de la partie, for all the executioners belong more or less intimately to the same family, marrying and intermarrying among themselves. Roch was of average height, thick set, had gray side whiskers and wore little gold rings in his ears. When he performed his official duties he wore a frock coat and looked like a workingman dressed out in Sunday clothes. It was Roch who discovered the present plan of binding the criminals. "It is for my personal convenience that I invented that fashion, and no one ever complained," he used to say. Roch was very proud of the guillotine and called it his "young lady." When his duties summoned him away from Paris the first thing he did after the guillotine had been dismantled was to send a telegram to his wife, telling her how the affair had passed off, whether there was a large crowd, and the hour she might expect his return. Mme. Roch had a high idea of her husband's professional skill. When he died she exclaimed: "We could quickly and properly done, they will never replace my poor dead husband." Roch died in 1879.

Deibler, the present executioner, is a dark complexioned man of about 50, very gentle in his manners and very uncommunicative. His greatest dread is the journalist. This is probably because he has been frequently criticised for want of cleverness in his work. Although he has been an executioner or assistant since 1862 he has never acquired the skill of his predecessors. Deibler married the daughter of the Algerian headsman, and has two children. He lives in a modest apartment near the St. Louis hospital, in a house adjoining the police headquarters of the Tenth ward. The executioner receives a yearly salary of $1,200 and traveling expenses, and, as perquisite, his children are exempt from military service.—New York Star.

Railroad Vandalism.

I read with some amusement, recently a letter in The Pall Mall Gazette, headed "What We May Expect," which took for its text a paragraph which announced that a railway is to be run through the pass of Glencoe. The writer of the letter sarcastically declared that "Melrose abbey, having being roofed over with slates and rendered somewhat presentable with a new roof of stacco, has recently been converted into a young men's reading room and mechanics institute. The abbey is lighted by an installation of six Swan and Edison burners, so that there is no longer any necessity to visit it by the pale moonlight." Still further, the writer announced that "Burns' cottage had been pulled down to make room for a beer house to be erected on the site." The old poet's says that many a true word is spoken in jest, and I am sorry to see in the Scotch papers a paragraph referring to Burns cottage at Ayr which goes far to confirm the prework. The whole of the contents of the house and of "Alloway's auld haunted kirk" are advertised for sale at an upset price of £1,200; so that in the event of none of the innumerable admirers of the poet coming to the rescue, the various relics accumulated at Ayr will be scattered. The trencher from which he ate his kail, the chair in which he sat, the bowl from which he "supped his parritch," the table at which he wrote—all are to be sold. We cold Southrons are sometimes accused of want of enthusiasm and poetic appreciation; but, on the whole, I venture to think we should not permit such a holocaust as this in the case of relics of our leading poet, simply and solely because their exhibition did not pay expenses. I suppose in those hard times it is as well to be thankful for small favors; but surely there are plenty of Scotchmen who are able, and yet might be able to spare or subscribe a few hundred pounds to preserve the relics of a poet whom most Scotchmen regard with a feeling akin to adoration, in the town where he was born. I should not be surprised if the upshot should be that the Burns souvenirs will go to the United States, where the people, to do them justice, are very far from mean when they wish to purchase anything that interests them.—Kathleen in Leeds Mercury.

Ask for Ayer's

Sarsaparilla, and be sure you get it, when you want the best blood-purifier. With its forty years of unexampled success in the cure of Blood Diseases, you can make no mistake in preferring Ayer's to any other. The forerunner of modern blood medicines, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is still the most popular, being in greater demand than all others combined. It is highly concentrated—the only 31 Sarsaparilla worth $5 a bottle.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far exceed those of any other, and it gives thoroughly satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickhaus, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name a reliable blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Saginaw, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock as the demand for them keeps up. Rip so good for the 'unlatful blood' as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Robt. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it as the best blood purifier. I never fail to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

CAPITAL POT-POURRI.

WASHINGTON SOCIETY'S GAY WHIRL AND AMBITIOUS SOLONS.

Legislative Monotony Broken by the Smash-Fallen Contest, Which Resulted Favorably to the Latter—Internal Revenue and External Subsidies of Interest.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 19, 1883.

The House is again wrestling with the bill, which has been reported back from the Ways committee with the somewhat derisive resolution that the action of the Senate in establishing a new Tariff Commission for internal revenue is in conflict with section 7, article 1, the Constitution, which decides that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania, has taken the ground that the body from which it came, Mr. McMahon wanted it, is the Senate, and that his motion raising the respect was aid on the table. Mr. Randall's motion was carried by a vote of 155 to 1 Several members, and I am sorry to say contrary to all precedent, has favorably reported a substitute proposed by Mr. Morrison and drawn from the committee over its protest. The substitute provides for a Tariff Commission, which shall be given the calendar if they can report a bill of a comprehensive character, and provides that after July next all laws now in force relating to internal revenue, and all taxes are retained in the same manner as if this act had not been passed. Mr. Randall and Kasson have taken the ground that the small claims, etc., and the special taxes on manufacturers of spirits, tobacco, cigarettes and cigars and tobacco, peddlers of tobacco, should be repealed, and the revenue from these sources should be lost.

Congressman Stenner says and does not care if the Senate does not pass the bill, and that if ever it gets to the House, he will be on hand to kill it. Congressman Stenner's idea seems to be that the Senate bill is a sop to the Democratic Committee of Ways and Means, and that the Democrats in the House will be compelled to vote against it, or else be charged with the sin of having reduced the revenue. Congressman Stenner is very popular with both Republican and Democratic Senators, but his nomination will be a lively thing inasmuch upon the floor on the Committee of Ways and Means he represents the interests of the tobacco, cotton and fine executive. Since Stenner is confirmed, there would be three Democrats and three Republicans on the labels. Should the nomination be carried upon, there would be a tie, and the matter would be left to the further deliberation of the conference committee.

Commissioner Colvy has been here for some time in relation to the timber cutting grants in the Pacific Northwest. He has made a report of such character as to cause one of a disagreement between the Department of Interior and Secretary Vilas as to the interpretation of Grant Gregory. It is said that an effort will be made to induce Gregory Herman to resign. Mr. Black is his present position, as a new man, and Mr. Herman is a Democrat, and a very efficient fellow, doing which that position has possessed, without long service and close study.

The appropriation by Congress of $25,000 for the protection of American citizens at Panama, has caused considerable talk among the Washington administration, and vessels of war to make the transit free and to protect American citizens who had been stranded on the island without means or work.

Senator Ingalls, who has seated as a Representative in Congress, after the most exciting scene witnessed in the House during the fifteen years. When Johnson, of Indiana, sought to interrupt Crisp, he was chief spokesman for Republicans, and he spoke with the remark that the gentleman belonged to a state where they resented insults, and that he was a Hoosier. Mr. Crisp declined to permit interruption, and in the wake of the appeal his time expired. Then a scene of intense tumult and confusion followed, and for a few minutes the City's speech in main aisles of the House had become thronged with members of both parties, so large an increased demand for the regular order. The Speaker pro tem. attempted to restore order by rapping with his gavel, and mingling the proceedings of a rule, he was finally compelled to call upon the Sergeant-at-arms, who with the silver mace of authority proceeded up the main aisle, scattering the members to their seats, and restoring the House to its usual quiet. Some time before the session officer could bring the legislative hall to a comparative quiet. Republican leaders are prone to criticise the manner in which the contest was precipitated, but they consider that it has served to bring to party lines which killed the chance for the Inter-State bill.

The Senate bill for the reformation of naturalization laws has been favorably reported, and it is generally conceded that there is immediate need of some action being taken in this direction. The naturalization papers are being issued in the aggregate, and are being taken advantage of by naturalization papers here simply to escape service in the army of their native land, to which they return upon accomplishing their mission in the land of their adoption, and claiming protection. There is nothing to deny citizenship to aliens, insane, paupers, criminals, or others who have come into the United States in flagrant violation of our immigration laws. This might be a very good time for the Senate to pass the bill. There is a surplus, which is satisfactory, but the only means by which it is possible for us to prevent our American institutions and concerns becomes the number of foreign votes is to spend the surplus in a proper manner.

The Department of Agriculture is a thing of certain interest. Norman Colman is a fair-minded Cabinet officer who will preside over it the next few days. It is altogether too bad of the President and administration to sell Commissioner Hatch Hartman's old mans of the year, and the Senate, which has confirmed, has written indelible scores in face the names of Blaine, Ruse and Wanamaker, who are five men in whose shoulders, more than to the eye of the country, President Garfield's mantle of office fell. Mr. Hatch's services appear to have been of a character of a strong opinion, which he recently took occasion to exhibit to having the paragraph provided for the construction of an armored steel vessel, which was stricken out of the bill, and which by Congressman Dawson, stirred out of the navy appropriation bill.

Senator Jones, prominent in Madrid recently raise a rumor of his wives it became known that he was in Washington, and he found himself for a reception, so the story goes, was informed that the Spanish Government had issued an official notification of the withdrawal of Mr. Curry as the United States Minister. The Spanish court is boiling of her funeral, and in the absence of this sun fixation of the Spanish Minister, the Spanish Minister, and the Spanish Minister, and the Spanish Minister, and

AROUND THE COUNTY.

East Jordan.

From the Enterprise.

Capt. Vanderhoef, of the steamer Friant, was in town Monday looking up business prospects for next season.

John TenCate returned from his trip to Indiana on Thursday. He brought 17 horses with him, some of which are already sold, and the rest are ready for buyers.

The East Jordan and South Arm Gun Club will meet at Warne & Calkins drug store on Saturday evening to arrange a match with the Charlevoix Club.

August Kropp's sleigh got away with the team Monday morning, and came to considerable grief. No damage to the team nor to August himself, why by the way declares he was thrown 40 feet, but the sleigh was smashed to smithereens.

D. C. Loveday is handling lumber from the Ellsworth and Crothers mills. We saw him Tuesday afternoon struggling with five loads which came in at the same time. He came off victorious. Mr. Loveday is running three docks this winter, having rented the Stone dock, which he is filling in with edgings and sawdust preparatory to utilizing.

The system of petty store pilfering which has been going on for some time in this place, must be stopped right away, and we are glad to observe that the matter has been brought before the Business Men's Association. In the future the culprits will be arrested on the spot, and taken before a justice without a moment's grace and dealt with according to the utmost rigor of the law. There will be no more compromising and no more settling—nothing but speedy imprisonment. So now all shoplifters can take warning.

On Tuesday John Maybee drew a load of elm logs from Wayne & Hudkin's lumber camp to Foreman's mill, a distance of 4 miles, scaling 2240 feet. This is the biggest load taken to the mill this season. Who can beat it?

It is probable that a Bad Debt Collection Agency will be started in this town shortly, for the purpose of making collections all over the county. It is a splendid idea, and got with approval at the meeting of the Business Men's Association Monday last.

Eveline.

Feb. 26.—Friday and Saturday were the two stormiest days of the season so far. Lumbering business was compelled to take a rest.

Ye scribe and his neighbors well admire the large amount of correspondents of the JOURNAL each week, and call it the best paper in the county. It is the most popular paper in this section.

Would like to enquire of our brother at Boyne. Is he missing?

Personal news scarce, owing to the stormy weather, so could not get out and hear the gossip. Will do better next week.

E. G. Jarman is attending court at Boyne City this week, which convenes today, having been drawn as one of the jurors from this township.

In regard to the bear story which our brother scribe at Ironton spoke of last week, it has been whispered to us that he and his partner after tracking brain for half a mile caught sight of him, then took to their heels and ran back. Yes, brother, cutting logs is far ahead of any bear hunt.

W. A. Stanley was at East Jordan last Wednesday.

The Methodist church society carpeted their church at Ironton the latter part of last week, which makes a great improvement in its looks.

Advance.

Feb. 25.—Miss Florence McCarty is on the sick list.

Jas. Smith has gone to Detroit on a visit.

A. B. Steele is still collecting taxes.

P. B. Newton has fitted the front part of Dan Maville's house as a store and has moved his goods into it.

The ladies aid society met at Steele's last Wednesday night to perfect plans for their bazaar which will be held the evening of Friday, the 15th of March. There will be music, recitations, and a good time generally.

Dan. Maville has sold part of his livery stock and we understand has purchased a saw mill near Petoskey, where he intends going soon, but for the present his family will stay here.

A subscription was raised for Albert Howard who was burned out a short time ago, and the good people of Advance donated some thirty dollars for him.

John Healy and family attended an entertainment at Ironton last Thursday night and was obliged to stay there until the next day on account of the storm then raging.

During the early part of January while we were having our "open winter" the editor of the JOURNAL in commenting upon the remarks made by people about the beautiful weather, said that "in about six weeks the same people would be saying that they never saw such a blizzard." In view of the storm of last Friday and Saturday we think Wiggins had better look well to his laurels for verily a prophet lveth in Charlevoix county.

Wilson.

Thermometer 16 below zero on Sunday noon.

Joe. Peters is on the sick list.

No church services on account of the weather.

Ben. Healey lost a horse last week.

Wm. White of Boyne City, called at the mill on business on Tuesday last.

The mill shut down for a few days on account of the cold weather.

The teachers and scholars in district No. 3 are preparing for an exhibition which will occur on the evening of March 24.

Two days blizzard, Friday and Saturday.—Sunday and Monday were clear and cold.

This time it is Will. Preble whom cupid has bewitched. He was married to Carrie Thomas of Central Lake on Monday, Feb. 17th. The name should be changed for Bachelor Paradise to Eden as three of the of the old "bach's" have been married within a year.

Johnnie Cook has returned from Traverse City, where he has been working in the woolen factory.

Dugald McMillan of Echo formerly setter in the in mill has returned to work again.

Alice Saunders has returned home after a long visit with her sister, Mrs. Coulter in South Arm.

Ironton.

Feb. 25.—We are glad to see that our brother correspondent is on deck again. Go ahead brother, we have'n any idea that we could compete with you if we tried, so we shall be content to pick up the crumbs and continue to send in our mite wherever we find anything worth sending.

We learn that Harry Gregory died at his home in Barnard this morning. Harry and his wife, formerly Etta King, are well known and respected here, and Mrs. Gregory has the sympathy of all in her affliction.

We noticed the smiling face of Will Hayes in town today.

The W. C. T. U. met with Mrs. T. C. Bird today. Owing to the pleasant weather quite a number of the white ribbon ladies were out and a very interesting meeting reported.

The M. E. church is being fitted up with a new platform railing and seats and after the new carpet is laid will present a very neat appearance.

Quite a number of the Irontonites are intending to take in the social at John Ward's Friday night.

Charley Bedwin lost a horse last week.

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at F. G. Hines and Co.'s drug st ore as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted.

How Doctors Conquer Death.

Doctor Walter K. Hammond says: "After a long experience I have come to the conclusion that two-thirds of all deaths from coughs, pneumonia and consumption, might be avoided if Dr. Ack er's English Remedy for consumption, were only carefully used in time." This wonderful remedy is sold under a positive guarantee by G. W. Beaman, druggist. 3

Echo.

Dugald McMillan visited friends in Wilson on Monday and Tuesday.

News scarce; snow too deep to haunt for locals this week.

Mary McMillan has come home for a few weeks stay.

Henry H. Vance of East Jordan is hauling logs from his fathers place in this township to the Hoop Factory.

Every one says "Is this cold enough for you?" Or "if this is an open winter, deliver us from another."

We did not attend the Orangemen's dance at Finkton on Feb. 22d. It was a slim affair, on account of the cold weather.

Ellsworth.

Robert Fulton had the misfortune to break one of his ribs a few days ago.

W. C. Byers, township treasurer, has been calling upon the people in this vicinity for their taxes.

Those who went to Central Lake on the 22d, did not have a very good time coming back as the roads were all drifted full. They enjoyed themselves however.
